It is clear that the present suit is not barred by the adjudication of the first defendant as an insolvent and the lower Court should not have dismissed it on that ground. The plaintiffs may reasonably wish to protect themselves against the father contracting further debts on the security of the joint family property and their only means of protecting themselves is [vide Sama Rao v. Firm of Marwadi Vajinji (8)] by becoming divided. The suit must, therefore, be remanded for trial on the issue relating to illegality or immorality of the debts incurred in favour of the 4th and 5th defendants and for declaring the plaintiffs separate from their father in status and fixing the amount of the shares to which they are entitled. As the property has vested in the Official Receiver, it will be impossible to effect a division by metes and bounds until the administration of the estate is completed. The passing of the final decree must, therefore, be deferred pending the divestment of the estate from the hands of the Official Receiver. The Official Receiver will get his costs of opposing this appeal out of the insolvent first defendant's estate. The costs of the other parties to the suit in the lower Court and in the appeal will abide and be provided for in the final decree.

Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—I agree with my Lord the Officiating Chief Justice in the order made by him. Having regard however to the very important nature of the questions raised in this appeal I feel constrained to add some observations of my own. The main question is whether on the adjudication of an undivided Hindu father what vests in the Official Receiver is only the power to dispose of the sons' shares for the satisfaction of the debts which are neither illegal nor immoral or the entire property inclusive of the shares of the sons therein. The decision in Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramachandra Aiyar (2) though it related to an insolvency under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, proceeded on a construction and consideration of language identical in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and the Provincial Insolvency Act. It is true that the decision of the learned Judges seems to be based on the concession made by the learned Advocate-General at the very opening of his argument. It is also true that the definition of 'property' contained in section 2, clause (c) of the Act was not referred to or its effect on the question before the Court considered.

However, personally speaking in view of the very definite statement of the law set out in the said judgment, I should have been disposed to consider the matter of sufficient importance to deem a reference to the Full Bench necessary in the matter. But in view of the intimation by my Lord the Officiating Chief Justice in a matter which is essentially one of etiquette, I felt bound not to disagree with his decision that it is not necessary to make any such reference.

The expression 'property' over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit is by no means easy to construe. It cannot, of course, be said that a father who exercises the power of sale over the joint property in which his sons have also a vested interest for the payment of antecedent debts of his, is not exercising the power of sale for his own benefit because though primarily the benefit accruing from the sale is the creditors, still the freedom from liability for a personal debt is undoubtedly benefit of the kind contemplated. But the power of sale possessed by the father under the Hindu Law is not an absolute power of sale, and it is possible to regard the power as argued by Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer the learned Vakil for the appellant, as conditional upon the existence of antecedent debts and the requisite that such debts should not have been contracted for illegal or immoral purposes.

Were the matter res integra, one would have been inclined to avoid the monstrous result that the family estate including the sons' shares should vest in the Official Receiver or Assignee on the insolvency of the father by holding that the father's power being merely conditional, the vesting of the property in the Official Receiver or Assignee both in quantity and quality would only be such as to tantamount to a vesting merely of the bare power, as held in the case of Official Assignee of Madras v. Ramachandra Aiyar (2). But the expression 'property' over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, was by no means new to the Indian Legislature and has been bodily copied from section 266 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

Remembering that the Provincial Law of Insolvency is a development of the old Law of Civil Procedure, it seems to me that we are bound to construe that expression in the same manner as it has been construed by Courts in India for a long time beginning at any rate with the case of Jagabhai Lalubhai v. Vijbhukhandas Jagjivandas (9). That case and the numerous cases that followed it have proceeded on the basis that the power of a father to dispose of his sons' shares also, for the payment of his debts was not in the nature of a latent power which came into existence on the coming into existence of certain conditions precedent but a potential power over the entire property exercisable by him validly, subject only to the sons successfully questioning the same in proper proceedings.

It is, therefore, impossible to hold that when the property of the insolvent is said to vest in the Court or the Official Receiver and property is defined to include all property over which the insolvent has a disposing power, what so vests is not the entire property itself inclusive of the shares of the sons therein but only the power of disposal which a father has.

There would also be enormous difficulties of a practical nature in holding that the power of a father is only a conditional power and that the vesting is contingent upon or proportionate to the debts of the father which are neither illegal nor immoral. But though the entire property inclusive of the shares of the sons vests in the Official Receiver or Assignee, it is clear that it so vests for the purpose of enabling him to exercise the power of sale which the father had of disposing of the property for the discharge of debts of an unobjectionable character, and it follows therefrom that the sons can, in proper proceedings, require to have it determined in respect of which debts such power can be exercised and in respect of which not. And it also follows that the sons can in proper time require that what is left over after the administration of the insolvent's estate and the due exercise of the powers by the Official Receiver or Assignee should be made over to them.

(9) 11 B 37, 6 Ind. Dec. (N. 9) 24.

BALA DIN v. AJUDHIA.

The proper way, it seems to me, of regarding the vesting so far as the sons are concerned would be to regard it as in the nature of a trust for the exercise of the father's power of disposal of the family property for his antecedent debts on the one hand and on the other for the ascertainment and delivery over to the sons of the remainder of the property, if any.

I am not at all sure whether it ought not to be held that on the mere making of a vesting order by a Court as regards the father or as for that matter, another co-parcener of the joint family the indeterminate share possessed by the co-parcener becoming defined and definite, there is not brought about in law a status of partition between him on the one hand and the other co-parceners on the other. However that may be, there can be no doubt at any rate that the sons are at least entitled to have the status of division declared and further to have their rights to the residue of the property, if any, ascertained declared and decreed. The lower Court was, therefore, wrong in dismissing the plaintiffs' suit entirely on the mere ground that the plaintiffs' shares became vested in the Official Receiver and that, therefore the plaintiffs had no cause of action whatever.

As regards the other question, namely, whether the finding in the previous suit by the creditors that the debts were neither illegal nor immoral operates as res judicata in the present suit, I agree that it is not a case in which the rule of res judicata applies. In the case of Midnapore Zemindari Co., Ltd. v. Nares Narain Roy (10), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee held that the finding against the occupancy right claimed by tenants in a suit against them which was dismissed as premature should not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit, and the ground of decision is that in the former suit the tenants had no occasion to go further as to the finding against them.

If it should be necessary to bring the case within the terms of section 11, Civil Procedure Code, I should be disposed to regard it not as a case in which there has been no final decision but as a case in which the issue was not substantially in issue between the parties in the previous suit for the reason that though directly and substantially in issue at one stage it ceased to be substantially in issue on the finding of the Court with regard to another issue which was sufficient to dispose of the case.

I, therefore, agree that the appeal should be allowed and that the plaintiffs' suit should be restored and remanded on the terms set out in the judgment of my Lord the Officiating Chief Justice

BALA DIN v. AJUDHIA.

JUDGMENT.—In my opinion injustice has been done to the plaintiff-appellant by reason of the order passed by the Assistant Collector on 20th February 1922. The plaintiff is the purchaser of muafi land from certain muafidars. He sued those muafidars and the zemindars Ajudhia and Arjun for possession of one plot out of several purchased by him. The zemindars contested the suit and not the transferors. The plaintiff went to the Revenue Court on the ground that he was really the transferee of under-proprietary rights in the plot in suit, that he had been illegally ejected by the zemindars and that, therefore, he was entitled to possession under section 108 (10) of the Rent Act XXII of 1886. He correctly chose his Court and was entitled to relief if his allegations were correct. Under certain circumstances stated in Chapter VII-A a muafidar assumes the position of an under-proprietor under section 107-H. If a muafidar has attained that position he cannot be summarily rejected by the proprietor without any redress, simply on the ground that the zemindar himself had not applied for resumption of muafi and in such a suit the muafidar had not obtained the declaration of under-proprietary title. In my opinion a muafidar who has attained the position of an under-proprietor under section 107-H can sue his landlord for recovery of possession as an under-proprietor on his ejection without any process of law. The learned Assistant Collector rightly took this view and proceeded to decide the question whether the plaintiff had attained the position of an under-proprietor or not. The fault he made was in the order which he passed. When he decided that the plaintiff had not attained the position of an under-proprietor he ought to have dismissed the suit for possession, giving the plaintiff an opportunity to appeal to the District Court against the adverse finding of under-proprietary possession. In the Revenue Court the plaintiff took up the correct position that as a muafidar he could not sue in the Civil Court because he was a transferee of the right and a muafi right cannot be transferred. After this admission it was wrong of the Assistant Collector to return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Civil Court. I shall not bind the plaintiff to the admission made by his Pleader in the Civil Court that he did not claim possession as an under-proprietor. The Pleader appears to have made such an admission because he knew that a Civil Court could not decide the question of the ejection of an under-proprietor. When the suit was tried by the Civil Court of the Munsif of Unao (North) it was rightly held that the plaintiff as transferee of muafi right did not acquire such a title as he could enforce in a Civil Court. This point of law can no longer be disputed. A judgment of this Court in Raja Suraj Bakhsh Singh v. Baldeo Bihari (1) is based on earlier decisions of this Court. The present appeal from the decree of the Civil Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit cannot succeed. Unfortunately an appeal from the decree of the Assistant Collector would not lie to the District Judge even where a question of proprietary title is decided so it is not possible to help the applicant though, in my opinion, the order of the Assistant Collector was incorrect and he ought in reality to have dismissed the suit. If this Court had jurisdiction to interfere I would have remitted the matter back to the Assistant Collector to pass a proper decree.

Under the circumstances of the present case I am not in a position to help the plaintiff-appellant. His appeal is dismissed but I make no order as to costs.

FULL BENCH.Phillips, J.*—This is an appeal against an order under section 9 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act, 1922, Act III of 1922, by which the tenant in this suit has been allowed to purchase the land on which he has built a superstructure at a price fixed by the Court.There are a large number of connected suits and the question at issue is one that involves the rights of a large number of tenants in Madras City i.e., whether Act III of 1922 applies to templetrustees who are landlords of land in the City of Madras. The appellant is the trustee of the Apparswami temple and in the appeal he has raised certain minor pleas which have no great force.
In the first place, it is pleaded that the agreement to purchase the land at a price to be fixed by the Court was made before the Act had come into force and that the agreement was not an agreement to abide by the terms of the Act but was only an agreement to have a Commissioner appointed for valuing the land. It is clear, however, that the agreement was really more than a mere agreement to have the land valued, for unless the landlord had agreed to accept the provisions of section 9 of the Act, no purpose could have been served by having the land valued. It is clear that he did consent to the particular procedure being adopted and he is now bound by that agreement unless it is void for other reasons. There is also no force in the contention that a written application should have been presented under section 9. The Act does not specifically provide for a written application, nor have we any proof that no such written application was filed.The main point on which the appellant relies is the plea that the Act does not apply to trustees of temples and in this he is supported by the judgment in Parthasarathi Aiyangar v Doraisami Nacker (1) which clearly is in his favour.
I have had the advantage of reading my learned brother's judgment and with all respect I think with him that that decision is open to question. It is a matter of some importance, for this Act was passed "for the protection of tenants in Madras who had constructed buildings on others' lands in the hope that they would not be evicted so long as they paid a fair rent for the land," and we are given to understand that, if the ruling in Parthasarathi Aiyangar v. Doraisami Nacker
(1) is correct, a very large number of tenants who hold under temple trustees will be deprived of the benefits of the Act, and unless it is necessary to hold(1) 72 Ind Cas 826, 46 M. 823, 44 M. L. J. 91;

DORAIVELU MUDALIAR v. NATESA GRAMANI.

that an Act which was expressly designed for their benefit has failed in securing its object, I would be inclined to hold otherwise, notwithstanding that an opinion has been expressed to the contrary. I, therefore, agree that the question ought to be referred for the decision of a Full Bench. The arguments of Spencer and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ., proceed mainly on an interpretation of the Explanation to section 9 which runs as follows—"Land" means the interest of the landlord in the land and all other interests which he can convey under any power," and they have come to the conclusion that a trustee has no power to convey the land except for the benefit of the institution or for necessity. With all respect, it appears to me that this explanation cannot bear this interpretation. The Explanation relates to the word "land" as used in section 9 alone, because in section 2 (2) there is another definition of "land." In section 9 we find the following sentences containing the word "land":—"the landlord shall be directed to sell the land for a price to be fixed by the Court"—"the Court shall fix the price of the land"—"on payment of the price the Court shall pass a final order directing the conveyance of the land by the landlord." In all these instances, the word "land" is used with reference to what is to be sold to the tenant and conveyed by the landlord, and, in my opinion, the Explanation is inserted to provide that the whole of the interest of the landlord shall be conveyed to the tenant, not merely his own interest but any other interest which he can convey under any power. For instance, the interest of the Manager of an undivided Hindu family extends only to his own share in the property, but under the Hindu Law he has the disposing power over the shares of the other members. Or, again, a landlord who had not an absolute estate might, by means of a power of attorney or other deed so empowering him, have the right to convey further interests in the land. If that is so, I think that it would be difficult to justify the arguments in the reported case. The power of a temple trustee to alienate temple property is undoubtedly limited, but it is well recognized that, under certain circumstances and for certain purposes, he can alienate the land, one of those purposes being necessity. When, therefore, the Legislature has determined in the interest of the state that a landlord may be compelled to sell his land to a long-standing tenant in order to avoid gross injustice to that tenant, it is difficult to see how this direction does not impose a necessity on a trustee, who is also a landlord, to alienate the land. It can hardly be said, nor do I think that it would be contended that the Act is ultra vires of the Legislature and, if it is not ultra vires, the Legislature has imposed this necessity on temple trustees. It is not as if this was only instance in which the Legislature had compelled trustees to alienate trust property. Under the Land Acquisition Act, such land can be acquired by Government on payment of the proper compensation. There are clauses in that Act which to a certain extent safeguard the interests of the trust by providing that the compensation money shall be invested for the trust; but the mere fact that the present Act has failed to provide a similar procedure, viz., a procedure whereby the possibility of criminal misappropriation by the trustee will be lessened, cannot be taken as conclusively showing that the Act was not meant to apply to temple trustees. There is really no reason to presume that when a temple trustee obtains possession of cash in lieu of land, he will at once proceed to misappropriate it; he can spend it on the purposes of the trust, or he can invest it so as to secure the income from the fund for the benefit of the trust and I fail to see how any argument that this Act III of 1922 does not apply to temple trustees can be supported by the analogy of the Land Acquisition Act. The Judges of the former Bench were both agreed that temple trustees come within the definition of "landlord" in section 2 (3) of the Act and with that opinion I respectfully agree; but neither my learned brother nor I agree with the further conclusion that the Act is not applicable to temple trustees.

DORAIVELU MUDALIAR V. NATESA GRAMANI.

I think that it is necessary that the following question should be determined by a Full Bench; and in view of the fact that a number of cases are pending in which this question is at issue, I respectfully urge that the matter be considered at an early date. The question is, "Does the Madras Act III of 1922 apply to landlords who hold their land as trustees of a religious institution?"

Odggers, J.—The suit from which this appeal arises was in ejectment by the trustee of the Apparswami temple, Mylapore, against a tenant who had erected a superstructure on the temple land. The suit was brought, we are informed, while the bill which became the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act (III of 1922) was under discussion in the Legislative Council. The bill was passed and while the Governor's assent to it was awaited, the City Civil Court Judge entertained an application by the tenants—(there were many suits of which this is one)—to proceed under the Act to enable the tenants to acquire their holdings from their landlord, the trustee of the temple. Commissioners were appointed by consent of all parties and on their report the City Civil Judge made his award, after the bill had become law. The trustee had previously in C. S. No. 194 of 1921 been authorized by the Original Side of this Court to sell certain lands including those in question at certain prices. The prices awarded by the City Civil Judge are somewhat lower than those fixed by the Original Side. In appeal the point is taken that the Act does not apply to a trustee of a religious endowment at all. Reliance is placed on the decision of Spencer and Venkatasubba Rao, J.J., in Parthasarathi Aiyangar v. Doraiswami Naicker (1): That was a reference by a different Judge of the City Civil Court to the High Court and the question referred was "whether a tenant in occupation of trust lands belonging to a temple or mosque can enforce a compulsory sale under section 9 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act and require the temple or mosque to deliver the land to him on a valuation to be made by the Court." Both the learned Judges held that the trustees of religious endowments fell within the definition of landlord in section 2 (3) of the Act; but the difficulty they felt was in construing the Explanation to section 9. It runs as follows:—

"Land' means the interest of the landlord in the land and all other interests which he can convey under any power." They were of opinion that the words "under any power" must be applied to the limited power of a trustee of temple property to alienate, e. g., only for necessity or for the benefit of the institution. The learned Judges set out to enquire as to the interests which such a trustee can convey under any power, i. e., to examine the case-law in support of their hypothesis that the power of alienation is limited. With great deference I think they were wrong.

The Explanation is as to what is meant by the expression "land" in section 9 only. The word occurs in the first sub-section twice "the landlord shall be directed to sell the land" and "the Court shall fix the price according to the market value of the land." In sub-section 3 it occurs once "the Court shall pass a final order directing the conveyance of the land." The Explanation then follows. As I read it the meaning of the Explanation is that the landlord thus conveys not only his own interests in the land but any other interests which he has power to convey. Power is used in its legal sense as in "power of attorney," "power of sale," "power of appointment." The landlord in other words is to convey every kind of right or interest he has in the property whether in his own right or by rights conferred upon him. It, therefore, seems to me that a discussion as to the limited rights of alienation by trustees is wholly inapplicable to the wording of this Explanation. Further in default of any express words or implication to the contrary in a settlement or trust deed, a trustee will take the whole legal estate and I have no doubt that in this case the legal estate is in the trustee of the temple. I have already said that it was held in Parthasarathi Aiyangar v. Doraisami Naicker (1) that a trustee falls within section 2 (3) and with that opinion I respectfully agree. It seems to me, therefore, with great respect that to hold that a tenant under a temple or other religious endowment cannot enforce a sale of land to him under section 9 of Act III of 1922 is wrong and I agree that in this difference of opinion the question should be referred to a Full Bench and I also agree as to the terms of the reference as set out by my learned brother:

OPINION.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—This is a reference made by Phillips, J and Odgers, J, obviously because they were not satisfied with the correctness of the decision of another Bench of this Court consisting of Spencer and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ, in Parthasarathi Aiyangar v. Doraisami Naicker (1).

The short point referred to us is, does the Madras Act III of 1922 apply to landlords who hold their land as trustees of a religious institution? The wording of the reference is not very definite, because it is conceded on all hands that the term "landlord" as defined in the Act must cover persons who are landlords by virtue of their capacity as trustees of trust lands with power to let them to tenants. The real point is as to whether the provisions of section 9 of the Madras Act III of 1922 apply to landlords who are trust landlords by virtue of being trustees of religious or charitable institutions.

The Act is a very unhappily drafted one and it is quite clear to us that any reasonable draftsman must have foreseen that a question such as the one we have now to determine was certain to arise and should have provided for it. However, he has not done so here in express terms and it remains to be seen whether, on the one hand, he has done so by necessary implication or on the other hand there are considerations outside the Act which compel us to say that it does not apply to landlords in the position of trustees.

The preamble to the Act is this: "Whereas it is necessary to give protection to tenants who, in many parts of the City of Madras, have constructed buildings on others' lands in the hope that they would not be evicted so long as they pay a fair rent for the land. It is hereby enacted as follows." Then follows the body of the Act. In section 2, sub-section (3) occurs the following definition of "Landlord"—"Landlord" means any person owning any land and includes every person entitled to collect the rent of the whole or any portion of the land, whether on his own account or on behalf of or for the benefit of any other person (I am only reading the material words). Then by section 3, it is enacted that every tenant shall, on ejection, be entitled to be paid as compensation the value of any building, which may have been erected by him, by any of his predecessors-in-interest or by any person not in occupation at the time of the ejection who derived title from either of them and for which compensation has not already been paid; and that a tenant who is entitled to compensation for the value of any building shall also be paid the value of trees which may have been planted by him on the land. To pause for a moment. It seems difficult to suppose that the Act could possibly have meant to exclude from the scope of this section a tenant who holds under a trustee or trustees of a trust or charitable endowment. The tenant has put up his building on somebody else's land and that somebody else on ejecting him is going to get the benefit of the tenant's work.

and it is enacted in perfectly general language that in such cases the tenant shall have the benefit of his labour in the form of money compensation. It is said in this case that a landlord who is a trustee cannot deal with the trust lands unless it be for the benefit of the trust or for purposes necessary to the trust or endowment. Exactly the same line of reasoning would apply to the compensation provided for by section 3. It is of no benefit to the trust to pay out part of the trust funds whether income or capital, by way of compensation to eject a tenant, but it is a mere act of justice required to be done by the policy of the Act. Now I pass on to the section, which is really material in this case, section 9. Sub-section (1) of that section begins thus:—"Any tenant who is entitled to compensation under section 3 and against whom a suit in ejectment has been instituted," and then provision is made in it that such a tenant shall have power to apply to the Court for an order for the sale of the land on conditions approved by the Court with the object of putting him in the position of a purchaser of his holding. The words are: "Any tenant who is entitled to compensation under section 3." Prima facie that would include all tenants who have put up buildings on their landlords' land, whether those landlords are owners of the land or trustees of it. It is said that it is not so, because of the Explanation appended to that section. I have always noticed in Indian Statutes that, when any doubt is raised as to the construction of a section of an Act, it is usually raised by what is somewhat disappointingly called the explanation. So here, the Explanation is, "Land means the interest of the landlord in the land and all other interests which he can convey under any power." It is said that this landlord, being a trustee for a charitable or religious endowment, has no interest of his own to convey and can only convey the trust property or the trust land under conditions defined by the Hindu Law which I may summarise as being practically equivalent to a necessity arising out of the circumstances and the position of the trust at the moment; and it is on that ground that the decision in Parthasarathi Aiyangar v. Doraiswami Naicker (1) proceeded. But it seems to me that it is wrong to seek to control a Statute, which is obviously intended to overrule the ordinary law, by general considerations imported from the Hindu Law or what is called the Common Law of India. A trustee landlord can convey the interest of the trust in certain given circumstances. Two of those circumstances have been already referred to,—necessity and benefit for the trust,—and I think there is added a further one by this new Act III of 1922, namely, when a tenant has been in possession of the land and has put up a superstructure on the land and to eject whom would be in certain circumstances plainly inequitable without compensation, and in other circumstances, such as the one contemplated by the section would be inequitable without giving him an opportunity of acquiring the land for himself on payment. That consideration appears to dispose of this case.

We cannot accede to the contrary opinion of Spencer and Venkatasubba Rao, J.J., in Parthasarathi Aiyangar v. Doraiswami Naicker (1), and must answer the reference, not in the form of a direct answer to the question put but by saying that, in our opinion, section 9 of the Madras Act III of 1922 applies to landlords who hold their land as trustees of religious institution.

Ramesam, J.—I agree.

I think that the matter can also be put in a different way. Both in the case before us and in the case in Parthasarathi Aiyangar v. Doraiswami Naicker (1) the plaintiffs were really the idols in the temple and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee remarked in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha Swamikal v. Balusami Ayyar (2) that, under the Hindu law, the image of a deity of the Hindu Pantheon is, as has been aptly called, "a juristic entity" vested with the capacity of receiving gifts and holding property. The landlord of the suit land is undoubtedly the idol of the temple within the definition of the term "landlord" in section 2, sub-section (3). That being so, there is no difficulty in applying the Explanation to section 9 to the suit land. The Explanation to section 9 consists of two parts. The first part refers to the interest of the landlord in the land, and the second to all other interests which he can convey under any power. The object of second clause is to add to the first clause and not to cut it down. If any land falls under the explanation of the term as given in the first clause, one need not go to the second clause. In this case the suit land is the land belonging to the landlord, that is the idol in the temple represented by the trustee.

I agree with the answer proposed by my Lord.

Wallace, J.—I fully agree with all that has been said by the learned Chief Justice and I should just like to put my view in another form. If we take the procedure which is laid down in section 9, we find that any tenant, i.e., by definition "any tenant of land, liable to pay rent on it" not excluding a tenant of land owned by a trust, is entitled to move the Court for an order that his landlord shall be directed to sell the land. It is admitted that the trustee of trust lands comes within the definition of the term "landlord." When the Court has made that order and not earlier, as I conceive it, can a trustee landlord come in to object that such an order cannot be valid because he is not entitled in law to sell the land or to alienate it permanently except for necessity. To that the Court re-joins that the order itself has just provided the necessity required and it seems to me that on that the objection of the trustee landlord must vanish, as it cannot be argued that such an order of the Court directing him to sell the land is not a necessity justifying his conveyance of the land. In this view there seems to me nothing in the Act from which one may reasonably conclude that it was not intended to apply to a trustee landlord.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 53—Release in favour of father—Subsequent insolvency—Anticipatory fraud—Onus of proof—Bona fides

It is not necessary that a man should actually be indebted at the time he enters into a voluntary settlement to make it fraudulent, if he does it with a view to his being indebted at a future time, it is equally fraudulent, and ought to be set aside. A man can commit what may be termed compendiously "anticipatory fraud" and effect a transfer of his properties with a view to get into debt and prevent his creditors getting at his property [p. 451, col. 1].

Under section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, every transaction which an insolvent enters into within two years previous to his insolvency is treated as prima facie invalid and the burden is on the insolvent or the alienee to show that the transaction impeached is a valid and bona fide one [p. 451, col. 2].

Both good faith and valuable consideration have to be proved. The circumstances under which the deed came to be executed, the covenants made therein, the conduct of the parties both at the time and subsequently have all to be taken into consideration. If the transfer was really intended to be carried out and was made bona fide for saving the insolvent from incurring debts and running himself, the transfer would not be interfered with, but if circumstances show that the transferor was actually screening his properties from the reach of his future creditors, the transfer would be a fraudulent one. Mr. A. V. Visvanatha Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Official Receiver of Tanjore in an insolvency matter in which the Official Receiver applied to have a release-deed or a transfer deed executed by the insolvent in favour of his father within two years of the insolvency to be declared void under section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920. The learned District Judge disposed of the case, we think, somewhat summarily, he fell into the initial error of thinking that, as at the time the release-deed was executed, all the previous creditors had been paid off and there were no creditors in existence, the deed could not be said to be in fraud of creditors and the subsequent creditors could not impugn it. We cannot accept this as a correct statement of the law. It has been laid down so early as 1742 in Stileman v. Ashdown (1) that "It is not necessary that a man should actually be indebted at the time he enters into a voluntary settlement to make it fraudulent; for if a man does it with a view to his being indebted at a future time, it is equally fraudulent, and ought to be set aside." A man can commit what may be termed compendiously "anticipatory fraud" and effect a transfer of his properties with a view to get into debt and prevent his creditors getting at his property. The view that was laid down in Stileman v. Ashdown (1) has been followed in Thomas Pillai v. Muthurama Chettyar (2) and Hossein Bhai Ahmed Bhai v. Haji Ismail Haji Essac, (3). It follows, therefore, that one of the chief grounds taken by the District Judge for not setting aside this alienation is not good in law.

The second point the District Judge mentions is that in the present case there was consideration for the alienation, namely, the payment of debts and the maintenance of the executant and his wife and children. Thus might be no doubt some consideration for the transaction, but the question that has to be considered in such cases is the bona fides of the transaction. If the consideration is inadequate or is such that it shows that it was not a real consideration, it certainly may be taken as one item for deciding whether the transaction itself was bona fide or not. Now, under section 53 of the Act, what has to be proved is that the transfer was in good faith and for valuable consideration, if the transfer is within two years of the insolvency, the burden being on the person asserting it to prove it. Every transaction which an insolvent enters into within two years previous to his insolvency is treated by the Act as prima facie invalid and it lays the burden on the insolvent or the alienee to show that the transaction is a valid and bona fide one. Both good faith and valuable consideration have to be proved by the alienee or by the person who supports the transfer. On the side of the respondent some Indian and English cases were cited to us viz., Denny's Trustee v. Denny (4), Elbrahim-bhai Rahimbhar v. Fulbar (5), Re Telby Ex parte Jeffery (6) and Edward Russel William Hayward v. Elizabeth Hammand (7). It will be noticed that in all these cases the learned Judges were able to come to the conclusion on the facts and circumstances of those cases that the transactions or alienations were bona fide, made in good faith and for valuable consideration. The circumstances under which the deed came to be executed, the covenants made in the deed and the conduct of the parties both at the time and subsequently have all to be taken into consideration; and if it can be held that the transfer at the time was really intended to be carried out and was made bona fide for saving the insolvent from incurring debts and ruining himself, it may be that the transfer would not be interfered with. But if, on the other hand, there are circumstances to show that the transferor was actually screening his properties from the reach of his future creditors, there will be good ground for holding that the transfer is a fraudulent one. As the learned Judge of the Bombay High Court in Ebrahimhai Rahimbhai v. Fulbhai (5) points out, in determining the question whether the transfer was really bona fide or was intended merely for the purpose of screening the property from probable or possible creditors, the Court must take into consideration all the circumstances which surrounded the transaction and the conduct, contemporaneous and subsequent, of the parties. It is after examining the position fully that a conclusion should be come to by the Court on the question. In this case we think that we should send this case back for a fuller trial of the matter. No doubt the father of the insolvent had an opportunity of adducing all his evidence, but it is possible that he was misled as the learned District Judge was taking a strong view in his favour. We are willing to give him a further opportunity of adducing fresh evidence to show how far the transaction in question is a bona fide one. The Official Receiver will also have leave to adduce whatever evidence he wishes to adduce in rebuttal of the alienee's case.

We, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the case for a fresh disposal in the light of the observations made by us above. Costs will abide and follow the result.

Section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code applies only to questions regarding the satisfaction of the decree and not to questions arising in the proceedings for the making of a preliminary mortgage decree final, as a suit on a mortgage remains pending till the final decree. [p 453, col 2]

An alienee deriving his title under a surrender pendente lite, between the preliminary decree and the final decree, is bound by the terms of the preliminary decree and cannot be allowed to re-open the questions already decided in the suit, nor can he sue for the establishment of his title. JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are unusually complicated.

One Rewaji, a co-sharer in the village, owned a separate sur land, which he mortgaged to Bansidhar, who took possession under a clause in the mortgage on default of payment. In 1905 Rewaji sold his share in the village to one Chensingh, and he, therefore, under section 45 of the Tenancy Act of 1898 became an occupancy tenant in respect of the land in dispute. In 1909 Bansidhar assigned his rights under the mortgage to the present respondent No. 1 Bholu, who thus became the mortgagee with possession of one Rewaji's occupancy rights in the land.

In 1920 Rewaji brought a redemption suit No 130 of 1920 against the heir Bansidhar (who was a nominal defendant) and Bholu, and on 21st October 1920, a preliminary decree was passed for redemption on payment of Rs. 535. On 5th March 1921 Rewaji surrendered the land to the present plaintiff, Lachiram, who was lambardar of the village and also Rewaji's agent at the time.

On 29th April 1921 Lachiram as agent of Rewaji deposited the decretal amount in Court and applied for a decree absolute. On 14th June 1921 Rewaji cancelled Lachiram's power-of-attorney. On 4th July, 1921, defendant Bholu objected that as Rewaji had surrendered the land he had no right to get the decree made absolute. On 11th July 1921 defendant Bholu applied that on 15th June 1921 the case had been compromised between himself and Rewaji who wish to receive Rs 250-0-0 more while the defendant was to remain in possession of the land.

No enquiry was made about the alleged compromise and on 18th July 1921 a decree absolute for redemption was passed. There was an appeal to the District Judge, who held that O. XXI, r. 2, did not apply and that the lower Court was right in not making an enquiry. On second appeal this Court remanded the case for enquiry both into the alleged adjustment and also into the surrender as Lachiram had applied on 11th July 1921 for his name to be substituted as plaintiff on the strength of the surrender. The First Court held that the surrender was inoperative, and that the adjustment was proved. He accordingly declined to join Lachiram as plaintiff and Bholu was given possession under the terms of the compromise. This was on 16th October 1922.

We are not concerned in the present appeal with the proceedings in execution which form the subject of another appeal, but the possession given to Lachiram, as agent of Rewaji was taken from him and possession given to Bholu. Before this was done the plaintiff Lachiram while still in possession brought the present suit for a declaration that he was entitled to possession and for possession if he was dispossessed. The First Court found that the surrender was valid and passed a decree for possession as plaintiff had by that time been dispossessed.

Bholu, the mortgagee, appealed on various grounds. It was urged inter alia that the plaintiff was not the landlord of this field, but Chensingh, to whom Rewaji had sold his share.

The District Judge held that Chensingh could not be considered the landlord, but if the contrary view was held it made no difference, as the plaintiff got by the surrender only the rights of Rewaji in the decree which he had obtained and so he can only step into the shoes of Rewaji and claim to redeem the mortgage, the subsequent adjustment between Rewaji and Bholu having no effect, as Rewaji had parted with his rights. The District Judge, however, dismissed plaintiff's suit on the ground that the decision regarding the validity of the surrender was a decision under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and not having been appealed against became final, and no separate suit will lie.

Plaintiff appeals against this decree and it is argued on his behalf that the District Judge is in error in supposing that the suit is barred by section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

That section applies only to questions regarding the satisfaction of the decree, and a suit on a mortgage remains pending till the final decree. Reliance is placed on Vinayakrao Krishnarao v. Baijanath Saligram (1).

The respondent's Counsel also admits that the section 47 does not apply, the plaintiff's application to be substituted as plaintiff on the strength of the surrender having been made before the passing of the final decree.

It is further contended on behalf of the appellant that under O. XXII, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, the Court had discretion to grant or refuse the application for substitution of the plaintiff's name, and so no question of res judicata can arise. In my opinion the case is covered by an established principle of law. The position of the plaintiff is that of an alienee pendente lite the surrender having taken place between the preliminary decree and the final decree. He is, therefore, bound by the terms of the decree and cannot be allowed to re-open the questions already decided in the suit, nor can he sue for the establishment of his title. Such a suit would be res judicata against the purchaser who being the representative in interest of the vendor would be likewise affected by the decision, although he may have been no party to it. I am quoting from paragraph 843, page 525 of Dr. Gour's Commentary on the Transfer of Property Act, Volume I, 4th Edition. The cases which lay down this proposition will be found collected there and it is not necessary for me to repeat them. The learned Counsel for respondent has further relied on Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswanath Mandal (2) to the same effect, wherein it was remarked that to hold otherwise would mean that the assignee would be able to raise in a separate suit the very facts decided against his assignor, and by further assignments pendente lite this process might be carried on ad infinitum.

The view in this case is apparently founded on the remarks of Grant, M. R., in Bishop of Winchester v. Payne (3) that "otherwise, suits would be indeterminate or which would be the same in effect, it would be in the pleasure of one party, at what period the suit should be determined." It is thus apparent that the plaintiff is bound by the result of the litigation in which Rewaji was plaintiff and he has the same rights which Rewaji had. Supposing Rewaji not to have executed the surrender he could not claim possession and neither can plaintiff.

The final decree in the mortgage Suit No. 130 of 1922 in which Rewaji sued for redemption is dated 16th October 1922 and is to the effect that in pursuance of the terms of the adjustment between the parties plaintiff Rewaji is debarred from redeeming the mortgaged property which should remain in possession of Bholu.

The present plaintiff is bound by this decree and it has been already shown that he cannot re-open the question or bring separate suit to establish his title. The fact that plaintiff is lambardar does not put him in a position different to that of an ordinary transferee.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

the Court (Jackson, J.,) made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Defendant in Ejectment Suit No. 125 of 1921, Court of Small Causes, Madras, applied under section 9 of the Madras City Tenants' Protection Act III of 1922 for an order directing plaintiff to sell the land in the suit. The lower Court ordered accordingly and plaintiff seeks to revise its order.

The point for determination is whether at the date when the Act came into force defendant could be described in the words of section 9, as "a tenant against whom a suit in ejectment has been instituted." He was undoubtedly a tenant and plaintiff had instituted an ejectment suit against him in 1921. In November 1921 an order was made by consent by which the defendant was to vacate by January 1922, but the order remained unexecuted when the Act came into force. Plaintiff contends that this order terminated the suit so far as section 9 is concerned, and defendant maintains that it did not. I think that the plain reading of the section clearly supports the defendant. He is a tenant against whom a suit has been instituted, and whether that suit has been decreed or not, it can still be described as instituted. The second portion of the sentence in section 9 may make this still clearer: "against whom a suit has been instituted or proceeding under section 41, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act 1882 taken." If a landlord has applied under section 41, and the Court has proceeded to grant an order to a bailiff, the tenant is nonetheless one against whom the landlord has taken proceedings under section 41. He is not one against whom the landlord has not taken proceedings, because there happens to be a bailiff's order, nor is the tenant one against whom a suit has not been instituted because there happens to be a decree. A decree as defined in section 2 (2), Civil Procedure Code, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all matters in controversy in the suit. But such conclusive determination is not opposed to the ordinary sense of the word "institute." "Institute" means (Oxford Concise Dictionary) establish, found, set on foot; the original Latin meaning being "set up," and of course an institution is essentially something that has been established. No doubt in the Civil Procedure Code (O. IV, r. 1) "institute" is treated as synonymous with "commence" but it has never to my knowledge been used as entirely excluding the idea of completion. One cannot say that "instituted" essentially means "begun but not completed." Section 9 really provides that any tenant whose ejectment was contemplated, but who was not ejected at the time when the Act came into force, can enjoy its benefit. Apart from the language, there would be no sense in discriminating between suits in which decrees had and suits in which decrees had not been passed. The important point was whether the tenant had or had not been ejected.

The petitioner seeks to fortify this finding by arguments based on the other portions of section 9, but I am not sure that they have much weight. There is a provision that the tenant may apply to the Court 15 days after the service on him of summons, and this, it is argued must refer to suits pending at the time of the Act coming into force. But if the section had no retrospective effect at all, and only referred to suits filed after the Act, there would necessarily be summons, and this passage may will be confined to such summonses.

So too in regard to sub-clause (3) "any decree that may have been passed but which has not been executed, shall be vacated." This again could apply to suits filed after the passing of the Act. A tenant who is defendant in such a suit, may have applied under sub-clause (1) have made default and had his application dismissed under sub-clause (2), may then have had the suit decreed against him, may have had his default excused, may have paid the price under sub-clause (3) and the decree which was passed but held in abeyance shall then be vacated. Therefore, I do not think that the mention of "decree" in sub-clause (3) necessarily implies that suit decreed, but not executed are referred to in sub-clause (1); but since I find on other grounds that such suits are undoubtedly within the terms of sub-clause (1) probably the decrees in such suits are those which were mainly in view when sub-clause (3) was drafted.

Accordingly I should find no difficulty in supporting the judgment now sought to be revised only my attention has been called to the ruling in Latifa Bi v. Mottai Ammal (1) "The general frame of the Act including section 10 makes it clear that section 9 was not intended to enable tenants to apply for sale of the land to them under this section after the ejectment suit, to which they were parties, had been decreed."

Section 10 lays down that in cases of compensation for tenants' buildings and trees (sections 4, 5) and in cases of fixing a reasonable rent (sections 6, 8) if at the time of the Act coming into force, suits in regard to such matters are pending or, are decreed but are awaiting execution the Act may nevertheless be applied.

There is no mention of section 9, and therefore, it has been held that the Act was intended to apply retrospectively only to such cases as are described in section 10. But if section 10 were intended to be a general clause covering every case, the cases contemplated in section 9 even as interpreted in this ruling would certainly be mentioned under the first alternative in section 10 "which are pending." The section would run "Sections 4, 5, 6, 8 and 9 shall apply to suits which are pending, and in which decrees have not been passed, and sections 4, 5, 6 and 8 to suits which are pending and in which decrees have been passed but not executed." The more probable explanation seems to be that section 9 is a code in itself, and is not any way affected by section 10. I should have hesitated to put forward this view in face of the clear ruling in Latifa Bi v. Mottai Ammal (1) but I see that this has been held by Schwabe,

C. J., in a case hitherto Kanniappa Chettiar v. Ramachandrarayar (2).

In these circumstances, I refer the case to the Hon'ble the Chief Justice for reference to a Full Bench.

The point for reference is whether a tenant against whom a decree has been passed but not executed is a tenant entitled to apply for sale under section 9, Madras City Tenants' Protection Act, III of 1922.

OPINION.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—In this case (Civil Revision Petition No. 21 of 1923) the defendant in Ejectment Suit No. 125 of 1921 in the Small Cause Court applied under section 9 of the Madras Act. III of 1922 for an order directing the plaintiff to sell the land in the suit. The sole question is whether at the time the Act came into force the defendant can be described as "a tenant against whom a suit in ejectment has been instituted." It is not contended that those words can bear the extreme meaning that any tenant against whom a suit in ejectment had ever been instituted—a suit which might have been brought to a completion by execution and ejectment—is within these words of section 9, but it is contended that it applies to a case where the suit in ejectment has resulted in judgment but has not been executed or completed by the process of ejectment. It seems to me that that contention is right and that the tenant intended by the section is a person who is threatened with ejectment as the result of legal proceedings instituted against him but has not in pursuance of those proceedings been actually ejected. It seems to me immaterial whether or not the proceedings resulted in a decree which might lead, but has not led to an actual ejectment of the tenant. This is in accordance with the view expressed by the late Chief Justice and my brother Wallace in Kanniappa Chettiar v. Ramachandrarayar (2), and I agree with

Hindu Law—Bombay School—Inheritance—Daughter's daughter

A daughter's daughter cannot rank as a sapinda under the Bombay School of Hindu Law but she can inherit as a bhiana gotra sapinda under that school after all the sapota sapindas are over. [p 401, col 1]

Case-law reviewed

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No 232 of 1921 decided on the 29th April 1922.

Messrs D. W. Kathale and V. D. Kale, for the Appellants

Mr G. R. Pradhan, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree will give the exact relationship of respondent No. 1 to the last male holder, Jairam.

Gahani = Jairam = Bakai

Tulsi (plaintiff No. 1.)

Jairam's father was Natwaji Kadoo of Ner Pinglai. He owned fields Survey No. 238/1 and Survey No 13 of Mouza Burhanpur. Jairam died about the year 1902 leaving no male issue. His two widows, Musammat Gahani and Bakai succeeded to his estate on his death. Zibi was his daughter by his senior wife, Gahani.

She predeceased her mother and step-mother Bakai. Bakai died about 1917 and Gahani in July 1919. Zibi left a daughter, Tulsi, plaintiff No 1 in this case. Tulsi transferred a share in Survey No. 238/1 and Survey No 13 to plaintiff No. 2 on 24th February 1920 and they both have brought this suit for recovery of possession of the said survey numbers and mesne profits against the defendants, who claim to be alienees from Jairam's widow under a sale-deed dated 3rd May 1906 (Exhibit P-27). According to the plaintiffs the widows had no legal necessity to sell the property.

Survey No. 238/1 is in the possession of defendant No. 1 Ghunaji and Survey No 13 is in the possession of defendant No. 2, Manaji, the brother of the original purchaser, Suryabhan. One Sadasheo Sitaram, a co-occupant of Survey No 238/1 brought Suit No. 579 of 1906 for pre-emption and obtained a decree in the Court of Munsif, Morsi, for possession of the field against the purchaser and subsequently sold the same to defendant No. 1 Ghunaji. The present suit was instituted on 19th July 1920 against Ghunaji and Manaji. Manaji died during the pendency of the second appeal and in his place the name of his minor son, Daulat, has been substituted as his legal representative. The defendants raised several pleas but I am not concerned with all of them, in view of the findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below. The relationship of plaintiff No 1 was held proved and the sale was held to be without legal necessity. It was also held that plaintiff No 1 as the daughter of a predeceased daughter was entitled to inherit the property of her maternal grand-father, Jairam under the Bombay School of Law. The defendants' plea that one Tukaram was a sapinda relation of Natwaji and, therefore, a preferential heir to Jairam's estate was overruled. As a result of these findings the plaintiff's claim for possession has been decreed by the Courts below. The decree for mesne profits passed by the First Court has, on appeal by the defendants to the District Judge, Amraoti, been upset but the rest of the findings of facts were upheld in that appeal. The plaintiff's right to succeed to her maternal grandfather's estate was, thus maintained by both the Courts. The plaintiffs not having appealed against the dismissal of their claim for mesne profits it has now become final.

The only point which need be considered in this second appeal by the defendants is, whether on the death of a Hindu widow her predeceased daughter's daughter is entitled to succeed as a next reversionary heir to the estate of the last male holder. The Courts below have, on the authority of certain rulings, held in the affirmative and I am asked by the appellants to differ from that view. In view of the negative finding of the Courts below upon the plea that Tukaram was the preferential heir to Jairam's estate, I think, my task has been rendered very light, because I need not consider the question of preference between a daughter's daughter and a sagotra sapinda. It is sufficient for the decision of the case if the daughter's daughter is entitled under law to succeed even as a bandhu in the absence of any other preferential heirs and I need not decide where her exact position comes in the list of heirs.

Mr Mayne did not mention her as a bandhu in the table at page 852 of his 8th Edition of Hindu Law and Usage, but his treatise at page 828 contains the following observations:—

"Nor can the daughter's daughter ever succeed except in Bombay, and by the recent decisions in Madras whether her mother has taken or not, because she confers no benefits on her maternal grandfather, and is estranged from his lineage."

The Court of first instance cited paragraph 46 of Mulla's Hindu Law, 3rd Edition in support of plaintiff No 1's right to the inheritance. I have looked up that paragraph in the revised 3rd Edition of the learned author's Hindu Law. The relevant passage is to be found at page 73 of the new Edition. The citation given in support of the daughter's daughter's claim to succeed to her grandfather on the maternal side, is the decision in Gangaram v. Ballia (1). Trevelyan's Hindu Law, Second Edition, also cited the very same case at page 396 in support of her claim. That author is, however, very cautious in his observations because he prefaces the citation by saying that "the position of other females born in the family is by no means clear." I could find no other reported case. The authority in support of the claim of a predeceased daughter's daughter to succeed to her maternal grandfather's estate is so scanty even in Bombay that it is difficult to say that her position is quite clear under that School. A careful study of that case makes it clear that it is no authority for the view that a predeceased daughter's daughter can succeed to her grandfather. On the contrary there are observations in it to the contrary effect that if the inheritance does not vest in her mother, she gets nothing. This will show that the very foundation of the decision is wanting.

"Q. 8:—A man of the Brahmin caste died. The surviving relatives are a daughter of a daughter, a cousin who has separated, and some second cousins. They have all applied for certificates of heirship to enable them to succeed to the inam property of the deceased. The question is, which of them should be recognised as heirs?"

A.—If the deceased has left no wife or son, the cousin who has separated will become his heir. The second cousins and the granddaughter are not the heirs."

One must not, however, forget that the question there was one of competition between a daughter's daughter and a male sagotra sapinda. She could certainly not have a preference over a male sagotra sapinda whether she is regarded as a gotraj sapinda or bhinna gotra sapinda.

A general impression prevails that a daughter's daughter is recognized as an heir under the Bombay School of Hindu Law and I find it reiterated by Ismay, J. C., (1) P. J. 1876, p. 31.

GHUNAJI V. TULSI,

in Pingu Bai v. Ganpatrao (2). If one were to examine the principle underlying the case reported as Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuvarbai (3) and scrutinise the reluctance of Courts to extend that principle to other cases it would be seen that it has been very sparingly extended. I have not been able to find any authority where in the principle recognized in the said case has been expressly extended to the case of a predeceased daughter's daughter. It is held by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Ramji v. Nursha (4) that the principle has been extended to two cases only, namely, those of a sister and of the widow of a gotraj sapinda. He actually declined to extend it to the case of a daughter of the predeceased uncle of the propositus. This view has been confirmed by him also in Sadasheo Kaboji v. Gai Krishna Vinayak (5) where he observed that the daughters of a gotraj sapinda can under School of Hindu Law be included as the reversionary heirs of their father's cousin german. This means that they cannot succeed collaterally. It has been similarly pointed out by Macnair, A. J. C., in Saroo v. Bani (6) that the principle cannot be extended to the case of a daughter of the predeceased sister of the propositus.

In Venilal v. Parjaram (7) it was held that a predeceased son's daughter was not a gotraj sapinda. I do not think any distinction can be made between the position of a sister's daughter and a daughter's daughter and son's daughter in matters of inheritance as a gotraj sapinda of the last male owner. If any of them is a gotraj sapinda every one of them is equally so. There is no special reason, why a daughter's daughter alone should be considered a gotraj sapinda and the other two not. It must, however, be mentioned that in all the cases above cited there was a question of preference between the female on the one hand and a male gotraj sapinda on the other, and the male sagotra sapinda was held entitled to preference over the female. These cases are, therefore, distinguishable from the present case on this ground. But in view of the more recent decisions of the Bombay High Court which admit brother's daughter, Balkrishno Bhimaji v. Ramkrishna Gangadhar (8), sister's daughter, Dattatraya Bhimrao v. Gangabai Ganeshbhat (9), uncle's daughter, Girmallappa Channappa v. Kenhava (10) as bandhus, I do not think the earlier decisions which disentitled each of them to come in as a sagotra sapinda need trouble us any longer.

West and Buhler's Hindu Law contains the following note.—

"Balambhatta admits the rights of inheritance of sisters, sisters' daughters, and daughter's daughters. But he does not consider them to be included by the term gotraj sapinda, but by the words bhratarah, 'brothers' and dauhitra 'Daughter's son', and taiputrah 'his or her son' in Yajnavalkya's text," (4th Edition, page 121).

The following observations at pages 557 and 558 in Dattatraya Bhimrao v. Gangabai Ganeshbhat (9) are very useful and instructive in this connection. "As regards the Balambhatti, no doubt if the interpretation put by Balambhatta upon the word "bhratarah" in the well-known text of Yajnavalkya were accepted the sister's daughter would come in not only before all bandhus but even before all the gotraja sapinda. A translation of the relevant passage has been given at page 306 and the list of heirs according to the scheme adopted in the Balambhatti is stated at page 308 of the report in Bhagwan v. Warubhai (11). Though Westropp, C. J., laid stress upon the Balambhatti as supporting the case for the sister in Sakharam Sadashiv Adhi Kar v. Sitabar (12) Jenkins, C. J., in Mulji

GHUNAJI v. TULSI.

Purshotum v. Cursandas Natha (13) and Chandavarkar, J. in Bhagwan v. Warubhai (11), definitely rejected it as affording a basis for the sister's position in the list of specifically mentioned heirs, and that view was followed in Hari Annaji v. Vasudev Janardhan (14).

"Apart from these decisions there is another difficulty in following the scheme in the Balambhatti logically. It would not be easy to determine what place would be assigned according to the Balambhatti to the son's daughter's son. For instance, in dealing with the position of the daughter's son, as stated in the Mitakshara, the author has interpreted the word dauhitra (daughter's son) as including dauhitri (daughter's daughter) also, (see Gharpure's Edition of Balambhatti, Vyavaharadhyaya, page 207) and he has given her a higher place than the sister and her issues. It may be said that the same author would logically assign a higher place to the son's daughter and probably to her son. I may state that I have not been able to find in the Balambhatti any express reference to the son's daughter, or to the son's daughter's son in connection with the relative positions of different heirs. So it is possible to argue that the sister's daughter occupies a higher position than the son's daughter's son according to the Balambhatti. The true view about this commentary on the particular point under consideration appears to me to be that the interpretation of the word bhratarah disturbs the settled series of heirs under the Mitakshara and it is difficult to base any inference upon that view unless we are prepared to accept the scheme in its entirety. Though this commentary is useful as aiding the interpretation of the Mitakshara the views propounded therein cannot be accepted without due caution and examination. I do not think that the position assigned to the sister's

If we apply the same reasoning to the case of a daughter's daughter it will be seen that her place would have to be just after daughter's son in the list of direct heirs. This will show how utterly illogical and anomalous the position created by the special interpretation put by Balambhatta on the text of Yajnavalkya for her is. She cannot be regarded as a gotraj sapinda in the strict sense of the term although she is a gotraja, i. e., born in the family, of her own parents. She cannot be regarded as the gotraj of her maternal grandfather because her mother, on marriage, is by a fiction of law, "born again in the family of her husband", and thus ceases to belong to the gotraj of the family of her birth. It is on this principle that the married or unmarried daughters of gotraj sapindas are not allowed to inherit collaterally under the Mitakshara Law, particularly those females who are not expressly named in the texts. They are bhinna gotraj sapindas and may be classed as bandhus instead of as sagotra or gotraj spindas, almost in all cases, except the specially favoured case of a sister, and those of the widows of sagotra sapindas.

Bose, A. J. C., has held in Lochan v. Babai (15) following Bhagwan v. Warubhai (11) that the word "bhratarah" in the text of Yajnavalkya does not include "sisters." It, therefore, follows that the word "tatsunavah" in the text under consideration also does not include "sister's daughters" and similarly the word "dauhitra" daughter's son ought not to and cannot include "dauhitri" daughter's daughter as interpreted by Balambhatta in his Balambhatti, Vyavaharadhyaya page 207. (See Gharpure's translation of Balambhatti). It would, as pointed out above, dislocate the whole system and bring the remoter heirs before the sagotra sapindas and samanndakas are exhausted.

SUBARAMA IYYAR v. SOMALINGA SUBBA IYYAR.

I am not here concerned with the conflict which prevails under the Benaras or the Madras School of Hindu Law as regards the claim of a daughter's daughter to succeed to her maternal grandfather after the death of her grandmother. While the latter recognizes her as an heir, Ramappa Udayan v. Arumugath Udayan (16), on the ground that she is a bandhu the former excludes her from inheritance on the ground that she is not expressly named in the Mitakshara, Jagan Nath v. Champa (17).

On the whole I hold that a daughter's daughter cannot rank as a sagotra sapinda under the Bombay School of Law but she can come in as a bhinna gotra spinda under that School after all the sagotra sapinda are over. As in this case there is no nearer heir than the plaintiff No. 1 and the defendant is a transferee from a widow without legal necessity I hold that the plaintiffs' claim has been correctly decreed. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908),
O XXXVIII, r. 5—Attachment before judgment—
Security bond, execution of—Dismissal of suit—
Decree in appeal—Security bond, if effective

There is no general rule in all cases that whenever a bond is given as security to a Court for any decree that may be passed by that Court, it should be construed as meaning that the security is available for the proceedings not only in that Court but also in the Courts of Appeal. [p. 463, col. 2; p. 464, col. 1]

On an application for attachment before judgment, the judgment-debtor executed a security bond under O XXXVIII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, agreeing to give certain properties as security and bound himself and his property as responsible for the decree amount "in case the aforesaid suit" was decided in favour of the plaintiff. The suit was subsequently dismissed by the First Court but was decreed in appeal. On an application to enforce the security bond.

Held, that the bond which really took the place of the attachment before judgment was intended to take effect only if the attaching Court passed a decree and since the suit was dismissed, the bond ceased to have any further effect and the decree-holder was not entitled to any charge on the property on the strength of the bond [p. 462, col. 1]

Appeal against the order, dated the 13th August 1923, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Madras, in Execution Petition No 92 of 1923, in Original Suit No 19 of 1918.

Mr. K. Bashyam Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. Narasimha Iyengar and P. R. Srinivasa Iyengar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant brought a suit against the first respondent in the Sub-Court of Madras and pending that suit, applied for attachment before judgment under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, of the Civil Procedure Code. The first respondent agreed to furnish security and executed the bond, the effect of which is the question now before us. His suit was subsequently dismissed by the First Court. The appellant, however, succeeded in getting a decree in the Appellate Court. He now applies to have his decree executed against the properties mentioned in the security-bond. It should be stated that after this application had been filed, the first respondent was adjudicated an insolvent and all his properties have become vested in the Official Receiver, who has been brought on record as the second respondent. The Official Receiver raised a number of contentions against the decree of the appellant being executed against the properties in question. It is sufficient for the disposal of this appeal to refer to one of them, namely, that the bond ceased to have any effect as soon as the decree of the First Court was passed, dismissing the appellant's suit. The circumstances under which the bond was given we have already stated, namely, that it was under O. XXXVIII, r. 5. What that rule states is that the defendant should furnish security in such sum as may be specified under the order of the Court, to produce and place at the disposal of the Court when required the said property (namely, the properties that are attached) or such portion thereof as may satisfy the decree which may be passed by the Court in the case. We have to construe the bond with reference to the circumstances under which it was executed as its language is not clear. The bond says; "In pursuance of the order of the Court dated 22nd March 1918, in I. A. No. 68 of 1918 in the above suit, I have hereby given as security all the rights which I have in the property described hereunder for the aforesaid suit amount. In case the aforesaid suit is decided in favour of the plaintiff, the undermentioned property, myself and my heirs hereby bind ourselves to be responsible for the said amount. This security bond is executed for Rs. 5,000". The bond was executed to the Court. We have not before us the records of I. A. No. 68 of 1918 referred to in the bond. But evidently it was some order passed by the Court under r. 5, O. XXXVIII. Though the bond is worded somewhat widely it is clear that the respondent was giving security only for the decree that might be passed against him by the Court to which he gave the security. There can be no doubt that if he had not furnished security, and his property had been attached before judgment, such an attachment would have ceased to have any effect as soon as the Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit. See Abdur Rahaman v. Amir Sharif (1). It seems, therefore, right to hold that the bond which really took the place of the attachment before judgment, was meant to give security only for the purpose of enabling the First Court to execute its decree in case it passed a decree. As that Court did not pass a decree at all but dismissed the suit, we consider that the Subordinate Judge was right in thinking that the bond ceased to have any further effect. This view is in conformity with the case reported as Sheikh Suleman v. Shivram Bhikaji, (2) followed in Gallamudi Venkatasubba Rao v. Chapparalla Rosayya (3) by a Bench of this Court. An earlier case in the Privy Council, Ranee Birjibutee v. Pertab Singh (4), raised a somewhat similar question with reference to the security given for a Privy Council appeal. That appeal was dismissed by the Privy Council for default and then was restored. The question arose whether the security of Rs. 4,000 given for the appeal would continue as security for the subsequent proceedings in the Privy Council after the Privy Council had dismissed the original appeal. Their Lordships thought that it would not, and directed that a fresh security of £600 should be furnished by the appellant. Their Lordships were of opinion that when they dismissed the appeal in the first instance, the surety ceased to be bound, and, therefore, a fresh security was necessary.

A similar case was brought to our notice in Moonshee Ameer Ali Khan Bahadoor v. Kassim Ali Khan (5). In this Court we have a case in Erikulappa

SUBARAMA IYAR v. SOMALINGA SUBBA IYAR.

Chetty v. The Official Assignee of Madras (6) where the money specified in the summons issued under O. XXXVIII, r. 5 was paid by the defendant into Court, their Lordships held that the decree-holder had no charge on that money, as against the Official Assignee. This view seems to be somewhat in conflict with the view expressed in Janaki Nagasawmi Iyer v. Ramasawmi Iyengar, (7) but we must follow the rulings in Erikulappa Chetty v. The Official Assignee of Madras, (6) in preference to the one in Janaki Nagasawmi Iyer v. Ramasawmi Iyengar (7).

Our attention has also been drawn to the case in Seena Vana Ramiiah Ayyar v. Gopala Ayyar (8). That case is not against the view we are taking. Here the security was given only for enabling the decree to be executed, if any decree was passed by the Court. In the case cited, money had been deposited, under r. 2 of O XXXVIII to the credit of the action and it was held that the plaintiff who obtained a decree in the suit had a lien on the money. That case is not an authority here as the plaintiff here did not get a decree in the Court to which security was given.

Finally our attention was drawn to the decision of the Privy Council in Raj Raghubar Singh v. Thakur Jas Indra Bahadur Singh (9). In that case no doubt there are some observations by their Lordships on page 164*, which appear to be in favour of the appellant. Their Lordships, construing the security bond in the case, say that the construction that the security was confined to the Judicial Commissioner giving a decree for the mesne profits in the first instance was not proper as "according to it, if the Court of the Judicial Commissioner had reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge, but wrongly reversed it and been itself corrected on final appeal, so that the widow was really entitled to possession and the mesne profits, still the Court of the Judicial Commissioner having decided against her, the sureties would have had to pay to the defendant who had no title the amount of the mesne profits from the date of the original decision to that of the intermediate Court of Appeal." This shows that the bond should not be construed too literally but reasonably with reference to its language and the surrounding circumstances. If the decree is reversed by the Appellate Court, the security goes with it, the security must, therefore, be taken to be for a subsisting decree only. The observations of their Lordships must be read with the language and the circumstances of the instrument which they were construing. That was a case where security had been given for mesne profits on behalf of a widowed Rani, who was asking for possession of properties, pending the appeal in the Judicial Commissioner's Court. She was directed to give security for mesne profits of the property, and the bond in question was the security that was given. The bond stated that the hypothecated property should serve as security and be liable to the extent of a lakh of Rupees for carrying out the aforesaid purpose. It was argued before their Lordships that this security bond ceased to have effect as soon as the Judicial Commissioner dismissed the appeal to him. This argument was met by their Lordships by pointing out that there was really no difficulty on the language of the instrument as by it the sureties made themselves liable for any order that might be passed by the Judicial Commissioner, not the first order merely but any order. The order for which the security was sought to be enforced was an order of the Judicial Commissioner himself though passed after remand and it fell within the language of the bond.

We cannot use this case as an authority for holding generally in all cases that whenever a bond is given as security to a Court for any decree that may be passed by that Court, it should be construed as meaning that the security was available for the proceedings not only in the Court, but also in the Courts of Appeal. That would really depend upon the language of the bond as construed with reference to the surrounding circumstances. In the present case we think the bond was given to take effect only if the attaching Court had passed a decree and that not having taken place the appellant is not entitled to any charge upon the properties on the strength of the bond. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs of the second respondent.

Liability of reversioners*

A debt incurred by a Hindu widow in circumstances of necessity is binding on the estate, and assets in the hands of reversioners after the widow's death are, therefore, liable for the discharge of such a debt.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise a decree, dated 6th May 1922, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cooanada, in S. C. S. No. 100 of 1922.

Mr. C. Rama Rao, for the Petitioners.
Mr. K. Ramamurthi, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for recovery of Rs. 424-9-6, (Rupees four hundred and twenty-four, annas nine and pies six) due on a pronote executed by a widow for family necessity and obtained a decree against her reversioners who petition to have it set aside. The question is whether in circumstances of necessity, a widow can bind the estate. It was originally held in Madras that she cannot do so. See Ramaswami Mudaliar v. Sellatammal (1) but that ruling has been departed from in Regella Jagayya v. Nimushakavi Venkataratnamma (2), Dhiraj Singh v. Manga Ram (3) follows the earlier Madras view, Calcutta has always held the other way. See Ramcoomar Mitter v. Ichamoyi Das (4) and the whole question has been exhaustively summed up by Jenkins, C.J., in Sakrabhai v. Maganlal (5) where it is held that the assets are liable as against the reversioners.

In the circumstances I see no reason to interfere. The petition is dismissed with costs.

April 24, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Spencer;

537—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 149, 326—Charge under ss 326, 149, Penal Code—Conviction under s 326—Legality—Prejudice*

When a charge has been framed under sections 326, 149, Penal Code, a conviction under section 326 is not necessarily bad but it depends on whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the form of the charge [p. 470, col 1]

Obiter dicta—Section 149, Penal Code, creates no offence, but is, like section 31, merely declaratory of a principle of the common law, and its object is to make it clear that an accused who comes within that section cannot put forward as a defence that it was not his hand which actually committed the offence. A person could not be tried and sentenced under section 149 alone, as no punishment is provided by this section. Therefore, the omission of section 149 from a charge does not create an illegality by reason of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, which provides that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge [p. 470, cols 1 & 2]

When a person is charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly, one of the members of which caused grievous hurt in pursuance of the common object, there is no necessary implication that that particular member is not himself [p. 470, col 2]

Appeal against the order of the Court of Session of the Tinnevely Division in Case No. 55 of the Calendar for 1923.

This appeal coming on for hearing on the 18th and 19th of March, 1924, upon perusing the petition of appeal and the record of the evidence and proceedings before the Court of Session, and upon hearing the arguments of Messrs. V. L. Ethiraj and T. Krishnan Nambisan, for the Appellants, and of Mr. J. C. Adam, Public Prosecutor, on behalf of the Crown, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 2nd of April, 1924, the Court (Phillips and Odgers, JJ.) dismissing the appeal so far as accused Nos. 4, 7, 12, 13, 15, 16 and 18 are concerned, made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Phillips, J.—In this case the appellants who were accused Nos. 1, 4, 6, 7, 12, 13, 15, 16 and 18 were charged under sections 148, 326 and 302, Indian Penal Code, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code. Accused Nos. 4, 7, 12, 13, 15, 16 and 18 were found guilty of rioting under section 147 and accused Nos 1 and 6 were found guilty under sections 148 and 326, Indian Penal Code.

It appears that there was a dispute between the accused party and the party of prosecution sixth witness about some land. Prosecution sixth witness has filed suits with reference to this land and obtained an injunction restraining the persons under whom the accused claim from interfering with his enjoyment of the land. The prosecution case is that when some of prosecution 6th witness's men were watching the land, the accused came and began harvesting the crop. Prosecution sixth witness and others then went and remonstrated and apparently beyond remonstrating did nothing else before they were attacked by the accused. The first accused broke the arm of prosecution seventh witness and the sixth accused injured one Mapillaiswami Naick, who subsequently died of his injuries. These facts are not disputed in appeal but the conviction is questioned on grounds of law.

So far as the conviction of the seven accused under section 147 is concerned, it is urged that the Sessions Judge has not found that prosecution sixth witness was in possession of the land and that, consequently, there is no finding to justify the conviction for rioting, but it appears that there had been an order enjoining the accused not to interfere with the possession of prosecution sixth witness. When, therefore, they entered upon the land and began cutting the crop, they were doing an unlawful act in contravention of the orders of the Civil Court. It is possible that, if the prosecution witnesses had then attacked them, they would have been entitled to defend themselves and that injuries caused by them might be so justified, but the prosecution witnesses merely remonstrated with them, which they were perfectly entitled to do, and, consequently, the use of force towards these witnesses in prosecution of the common object of retaining the land which was in itself an unlawful object, undoubtedly constituted then into an unlawful assembly guilty of rioting. So far as these accused are concerned, their convictions are right and must be confirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Accused Nos 1 and 6 have been convicted under sections 148 and 326, Indian Penal Code, and, while it is not disputed that the convictions under section 148 are correct, it is argued that the convictions under section 326 cannot stand, because the charge against them was under section 326 read with section 149, and that, therefore, the convictions under section 326 alone are bad. This is undoubtedly the view of the Calcutta High Court, which has always treated the so-called offence under section 149 as distinct from the substantive offence and I may refer to Abhi Misser v. Lachmi Narain (1), Panchu Das v. Emperor (2), Emperor v. Madan Mandal (3) and Reazuddin v. Emperor (4). In all these cases it was held that, when the charge had been made under section 325 read with section 149, there could be no conviction under section 325 alone, the two being distinct offences which must be charged separately. As a matter of fact, in each of these cases it was found that no rioting took place and, consequently, no conviction could possibly be had by reason of section 149, for that necessarily implies a riot; but apart from this, those cases are certainly authority for Mr. Ethiraj's contention that the present conviction of accused Nos. 1 and 6 under section 326 is wrong. There would appear to be no reported cases of this Court, until one reported very recently in In re Thaikkottathil Kunhaeen (5) and apparently the Judges in that case do treat the two offences as distinct, but although Wallace, J., in his judgment says that section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, which prescribes that there should be a separate charge for each distinct offence, was not followed, yet he does not hold that that in itself vitiates the conviction, for he treats it as a defect which may or may not occasion a failure of justice and, no doubt, in the case which he was considering, the omission of section 149, which was the question under consideration then, was likely to prejudice the accused and, on that ground, the conviction was set aside. Similarly Ramesam, J., seems to consider the offence under section 149 as a separate offence, but does not definitely deal with the point and also relies on the omission of section 149 as being a serious defect prejudicial to the accused. This decision was considered by this same Bench in a very recent case, Criminal Appeal No. 1364 of 1922, in which we held that, where the charge was sufficiently clear, the mere omission of section 149 from the charge was not sufficient to vitiate the conviction for the substantive offence. With all respect to the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, I find it difficult to understand how an offence is created under section 149. That section reads as follows: "If an offence is committed by any member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, or such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object, every person who, at the time of the committing of that offence, is a member of the same assembly, is guilty of that offence." That is to say, it does not define any particular offence but says that, if a particular offence is committed by any member of an unlawful assembly, other members of that assembly are guilty of the same offence if certain conditions laid down in the section are complied with, for instance, if grievous hurt is committed by one member under certain conditions, the other members of the unlawful assembly are also guilty of grievous hurt. The offence is grievous hurt and whether it is charged under section 325 or under sections 325 and 149, the offence is the same and the punishment provided is the same. Section 149 merely provides that certain circumstances short of the actual commission of grievous hurt are sufficient to prove that a person is guilty of that offence. If the charge gives notice to the accused that the provisions of section 149 will be taken into account—and it must be presumed that he knows those provisions, as every one is deemed to know the law—then the mere omission of the number of the section would not prejudice him, and, in my opinion, would not entitle him to an acquittal. This case, however, is the converse of that and it is urged that none of the accused have been charged with the offence under section 326 because they have only been charged under sections 326 and 149, but to admit this would be to admit that they are two separate offences, one under section 326 and another under sections 326 and 149; but, as I have pointed out above, this does not seem to be so. It is possible that by framing a charge under section 149, the accused persons might be prejudiced if, for instance, the actual offence under section 326 was said to have been committed by some one not under trial, in which case the attention of the accused would be directed to showing either that they were not members of the unlawful assembly, or that this person who committed the offence was not a member of that assembly; but in a case like the present where 18 persons are accused and each one is charged with the offence under section 326—and it is the prosecution case, which is known to the accused, that the offence under section 326, was committed by one or more among the accused charged—it does not seem to me to prejudice the accused in any way in their defence. Their defence must always be either that there was no unlawful assembly or that the offence of grievous hurt was not committed; and, if it is proved that it was committed by one or more accused, whether the conviction is under section 326 alone or under section 326 by reason of the provisions of section 149, seems to me immaterial, but as the view of the Calcutta High Court has some support in the case reported in In re Tharkottathal Kunhaeen (5), I think it is advisable that the following questions should be referred to a Full Bench. (1) "When a charge omits section 149, Indian Penal Code, and the conviction is based upon the provisions of that section, is that conviction necessarily bad or does it depend on whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the omission? (2) When a charge has been framed under sections 326 and 149, Indian Penal Code, is a conviction under section 326, Indian Penal Code, necessarily bad, or does this also depend on whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the form of the charge?"

Odgers, J.—In this case 18 accused were originally charged and accused Nos. 2, 3, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14 and 17 were acquitted. Of the remaining nine all but two were convicted of rioting under section 147. Accused Nos 1 and 6 were found guilty of rioting armed with deadly weapons and voluntarily causing grievous hurt with deadly weapons under sections 148 and 326. There has practically been no argument on the merits and this can be disposed of very shortly.

The accused were found to belong to a party which went to harvest a certain field, the title to which has been a matter of dispute, and the occurrence in question took place when the accused went on the 14th February, 1923, to harvest the cholam crop growing thereon. Prosecution witnesses Nos 6 to 11 received injuries. One Mappillaiswami Naick received an injury to his arm from which he died on the 23rd February and Ramaswami Naick, P. W. No 7, also sustained injuries necessitating amputation of his arm. It appears that in September, 1922, injunctions were obtained against the sixth accused and third accused and certain women who claimed a portion of the land in dispute. The injunction petition was posted for hearing on the 15th February.

and it was the day before that the occurrence in question took place.

It is suggested that the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 6 to 12 is all interested, but I find no reason to question the conclusion come to by the learned Sessions Judge on the facts. It may be, as the learned Judge remarks, that the issue of the injunction would not confer possession, but the accused have to justify the infliction of grievous hurt which resulted in the death in defence of their possession and this they have failed to do. The convictions under section 147 are clearly correct and need no further examination.

The interest, however, in this appeal centres round the legal point raised by Mr Ethiraj on behalf of the accused Nos. 1 and 6 who were, as stated, convicted under sections 148 and 326. Mr. Ethiraj contends that this is illegal, because the charge was under sections 148 and 326 read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, and it is contended that a charge under section 326 made applicable by reason of section 149 will not sustain a conviction under section 326 simpliciter. In the first place I am not convinced that the charge is necessarily only section 326 plus section 149. It runs "armed yourself with deadly weapons and committed rioting (that is section 148) and caused grievous hurt by dangerous weapons (that is section 326) and you did commit murder by intentionally causing the death of, etc. (that is section 302) and thereby committed offences punishable under sections 148, 326 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code read with section 149, Indian Penal Code." The question largely turns on whether or not section 149 constitutes a distinct offence or not. It has been laid down in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (6) that section 149 creates no offence but is merely declaratory of a principle of the common law which has for a long time prevailed in England, and that the object of the section is to make it clear that an accused who comes within that section cannot put forward as a defence that it was not his hand that caused the hurt committed in prosecution of the common object. In that case the appellants were convicted under section 147 of rioting, and under section 325 of voluntarily causing grievous hurt. It is noticeable that in this and other earlier cases, section 149 does not seem to have been specifically charged. The appellants in the Allahabad case were sentenced separately for their convictions under section 147 and section 325. It was held that these sentences were legal. In Queen-Empress v. Bana Punja (7) a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court held that it was legal to pass two sentences, one for rioting and the other for hurt, where a person is convicted of rioting and hurt and the conviction for hurt depends on the application of section 149. There again the charges were under sections 147, 148 and 326 without any reference to section 149. To turn to the Calcutta case in Abhi Misser v. Lachmi Narain (1) it was held that the accused could not be properly convicted under section 325 by the application of section 149, where it has not been found that these persons or any of them were members of an unlawful assembly. This would seem perfectly obvious in the case of persons who have been acquitted of rioting. Therefore, it seems to me to have no bearing on the present case. In Panchu Das v. Emperor (2) it was held that the conviction under section 325 was illegal on the ground that no such charge was ever framed and that the accused had not been called upon to meet such a charge. The appellants there were tried under sections 147, 304, 325 and 323 read with section 149, and they were convicted under section 325 alone, and the learned Judges add — "If the evidence showed that the accused or any of them inflicted hurt or grievous hurt with their own hands, additional counts of charge for those offences should have been added in the Sessions Court." They also held that the offence of causing grievous hurt is not minor to, or included in, a charge under section 325 read with section 149. In Emperor v. Madan Mondal (3) the accused were charged under sections 148, 304 read with section 109, and section 326 read with section 419. The Jury found them guilty under section 326 simpliciter. The Jury returned a verdict of acquittal under section 148 apparently owing to the admitted misdirection of the learned Judge. It was held that the verdict of the Jury convicting the accused under section 326 was practically a judgment of acquittal inasmuch as there was no charge under that section independently. In this the case in Reazuddi v Emperor (4) was followed where the result of the Calcutta rulings is summed up as the learned Judges say: "it is now settled law that when a person is charged by implication under section 149, he cannot be convicted of the substantive offence." If this statement of the law is to be accepted as correct and if I am wrong in my suggestion that the charge here as framed does not charge section 326 simpliciter, it follows that the convictions under consideration are illegal. With deference I think the Calcutta decisions are wrong in that they erect section 149 into a distinct offence thus directly refusing the view set out in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (6).

My learned brother and myself dealt with this point, though not exhaustively in Criminal Appeal No 1364 of 1922. There for reasons given we held that the accused could not be prejudiced by the omission to name section 149, the charge having been set out in extenso. We had, however, to consider the only Madras case, as far as I can discover, on the point, viz., In re, Thakkottathil Kunhaen (5) decided by Ramesam and Wallace, JJ. There the petitioners were convicted under section 143, Indian Penal Code, and section 126 of the Railways Act. It was contended that the convictions were correct if considered as under section 126 of the Railways Act read with section 149, Indian Penal Code. The latter section was neither charged nor referred to in the lower Court and on that ground, following the decision of Oldfield and Devadoss, JJ., Ramesam, J., held the conviction under section 126, Railways Act, bad, as having prejudiced the accused.

Wallace, J., though holding that section 149 does not create in itself any offence, held it was essential that the accused should have had notice that what they had to meet was a charge that they were members of an unlawful assembly which in prosecution of its common object committed an offence under section 126, Railways Act. The learned Judge speaks of the "substantive offence" [as do the learned Judges of the Calcutta Court in Reazuddi v Emperor (4)] in contradistinction to section 149—which lays down that every member of an unlawful assembly may if an offence is committed under certain circumstances be guilty of that offence.

Wallace, J., therefore, held that section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, had not been complied with and that the accused had been prejudiced thereby. He added that if section 149, Indian Penal Code, is relied on it should be stated and named in the charge.

I have had the advantage of reading the judgment just delivered by my learned brother and I share his views for doubting if in a case like the present there could be any real prejudice to the accused, assuming he has here been charged under sections 326 and 149 and not also under section 326 simpliciter.

For the reasons stated by him I also think an authoritative ruling on this point is very desirable. It has arisen at least three times within the last eight months and apparently twice before that, viz., in Referred Trial No. 85 of 1922 and Criminal Revision Case No. 662 of 1921. There may also be other instances which have not been brought to my notice. I agree to the terms of reference proposed by my learned brother.

This appeal came on for hearing on the 22nd of April, 1924, in pursuance of the Order of Reference to a Full Bench.

Messrs. V. L. Ethuraj, and T. Krishnan Nambisan, for the Appellants.

THEBETHUMALAI GOUNDER v. EMPEROR.

OPINION.

Spencer, J.—The questions referred to us are :—(1) when a charge omits section 149, Indian Penal Code, and the conviction is based on the provisions of that section, is that conviction necessarily bad, or does it depend on whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the omission? (2) When a charge has been framed under sections 326 and 149, Indian Penal Code, is a conviction under section 326, Indian Penal Code, necessarily bad, or does this also depend on whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the form of the charge?

The charge in the present case runs as follows:—"That you on or about the 14th February, 1923, at 2 p. m. at Sekkarakudi with a view to enforce the right to the punja land Suit No. 1162 of Sekkarakudi village, armed yourselves with deadly weapons and committed rioting and caused grievous hurt by dangerous weapons, and that you did commit murder by intentionally causing the death of Subramana Mappilawami Naick and thereby committed offences punishable under sections 148, 326 and 302 of the Indian Penal Code, read with section 149, Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Session of Tinnevely Division, and I hereby direct that you be tried by the said Court on the said charge."

It is clear that the charge in this case does not omit section 149 and thus the first question referred to us does not directly arise on the facts.

We agree with the statement of Edge, C. J., in Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (6) that section 149 creates no offence, but is, like section 34, merely declaratory of a principle of the common law, and its object is to make it clear that an accused who comes within that section cannot put forward as a defence that it was not his hand which inflicted the grievous hurt. We do not think that Schwabe, C. J., intended to lay down any contrary principle in C R O No. 662 of 1921. Section 40, Indian Penal Code, defines "offence" as a thing made punishable under the Code or under any special or local law as defined in the Code. A person could not be tried and sentenced under section 149 alone, as no punishment is provided by the section. Therefore, the omission of section 149 from a charge does not create an illegality by reason of section 233, Criminal Procedure Code, which provides that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge.

To answer the first parts of both the questions referred to us in the affirmative would be to overlook section 537, Criminal Procedure Code, which deals with omissions from charges.

The learned Judges who decided Reazaddi v. Emperor (4) and Emperor v. Madan Mandal (3) do not appear to have considered the effect of section 537 upon omissions from the charge. In Sita Ahir v. Emperor (8) it was considered illegal when a charge for a substantive offence under section 323 was omitted. We do not agree with the general statement in the first of these decisions that it is "now settled law that when a person is charged by implication under section 149, he cannot be convicted of the substantive offence." We think that when a person is charged with being a member of an unlawful assembly, one of the members of which caused grievous hurt in pursuance of the common object, there is no necessary implication that that particular member is not himself. Emperor v. Madan Mandal (3) was a clear case of misdirection to a Jury which came before the High Court in consequence of a reference under section 307, Criminal Procedure Code. Panchu Das v. Emperor (2) was another case of misdirection. Queen-Empress v. Bana Punja (7) and Abhi Misser v. Lachmi Narain (1) deal with the legality of punishments for combined offences rather than with failures of justice caused by the omission to frame the necessary charges. The legality of the sentences passed in the present case is not before us.

ON PE V. EMPEROR.

In the present instance the name of the person to whom grievous hurt was caused (Raghurama Naidu alias Ramaswami Naicker, prosecution witness No. 7) is not mentioned in the charge.

Whether this omission, or the omission to charge accused Nos. 1 and 6 separately with the offence under section 326, if in the present case there was such an omission (which Odgers, J, doubts) prejudiced those accused in their defence is a matter which the Bench which hears the appeal must deal with. It is not a part of the reference to the Full Bench. We answer the first part of second question in the negative and the second part in the affirmative.

Criminal proceedings—Res judicata

An order passed by a Criminal Court unless set aside in due course of law, remains in force and its validity cannot be questioned in a subsequent prosecution based on the disobedience of that order. [p 472, col 2]

Criminal reference by the Sessions Judge, Insein, under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code.

REFERENCE.—The following reference was forwarded by the Sessions Judge, Insein, to the Registrar of the High Court:—

I have the honour to submit for the perusal of the Hon'ble Judges the proceedings of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Insein, Maung So Min, in his Criminal Miscellaneous No. 39 of 1923. The proceedings came to my notice in connection with an appeal by the same respondent. On Pe in my Criminal Appeal No. 4 of 1924 against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate (Maung Ba U 2), Insein in his Criminal Regular No. 68 of 1923 wherein On Pe was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment under section 18, Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, for failure to betake himself to the area to which his movements were restricted in the former case. Assuming the correctness of the order in the first case there can be no doubt as to the correctness of the order of the latter case. On Pe did not appeal against the first order but I consider that the case in which he was ordered to restrict his movements was most inadequately tried, and that if he had appealed the order must have been set aside, and a fresh inquiry directed. If that order now be set aside, I suppose that the appeal against the conviction under section 18, Habitual Offenders Restriction Act, would succeed, but it might be argued that the order was valid until set aside and the appellant ought not to have taken it upon himself to disobey it. I would be grateful to learn the opinion of the Hon'ble Judges on this point, if they agree that the former order should be set aside. With regard to that order it will be seen that the respondent was alleged to have three previous convictions but no attempt was made to prove them. Two witnesses were examined. One was a Head Constable in charge of an outpost who stated that On Pe was a surveillance criminal, associated with the registered criminals and was suspected of participation in certain cases.

The other witness describes himself as a cultivator, and states that On Pe is reputed to be a thief or robber by habit was suspected of participation in thefts of cattle and other property and in particular, theft of buffaloes from the witness and associated with certain bad characters. This witness is a headman, but the Magistrate did not trouble to inquire.

The respondent stated he had nothing to say and no witness to offer, also that he had no cause to show against the passing of restriction order. This is a peculiarity of most of the respondents who appeared before this Magistrate under

KUPPU ODAYAR v. POOMALAI GOUNDAN.

Habitual Offenders Restriction Act. The Police sent up other witnesses but the Magistrate dispensed with them.

I do not consider that there has been an adequate inquiry and I would recommend that the order be set aside and a fresh inquiry directed.

ORDER.—This reference under section 438, Criminal Procedure Code, is made in the form of a letter to the Registrar of this Court. This form is not appropriate. Such reference should be made by a judicial order.

As regards the substance of the reference the facts are as follows. On the 25th May, 1923, in his Criminal Miscellaneous No. 39 of 1923 the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Insein passed an order under section 7 of the Burma Habitual Offenders Restriction Act restricting Nga On Pe to the village of Tawlate for three years. On Pe did not appeal against the order but chose rather to disobey it. He never went to Tawlate at all but instead went and lived in the Thongwa Township of the Hanthawaddy District. He was arrested towards the end of November and was prosecuted under section 18 of the Act for disobeying the restriction order. He pleaded guilty to the charge and was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment. He then appealed to the Sessions Court. The Sessions Judge has gone back to the original proceedings and considers that they were inadequately tried and that had On Pe appealed the order must have been set aside and a further enquiry have been ordered. He recommends that this should be done now in revision.

He further remarks that if this were done he supposes that On Pe's present appeal against his conviction would succeed, though he admits that it is arguable that the order was valid until set aside and that the appellant ought not to have taken it upon himself to disobey it.

He has overlooked the fact that under section 412, Criminal Procedure Code, On Pe has no right of appeal against his conviction, but can appeal only as to the extent or legality of the sentence. Even on the supposition that On Pe had not pleaded guilty I am of opinion that his appeal against the conviction could not succeed. The order was undoubtedly in force at the time of his disobedience, which, therefore, constituted the offence of which he has been convicted. To hold otherwise would be entirely subversive of the principle of the finality of judicial orders. It would make it possible in proceedings under section 514 or 563, Criminal Procedure Code, to question the correctness of the original order or conviction. It would enable a convict charged with escaping from Jail to question his conviction, and a person charged under section 75, Indian Penal Code, could contend that his former conviction should not have been bad. These are only a few instances of the deplorable results of such a decision.

In view of these considerations I am not prepared to interfere. The proceedings may be returned.

Petition, under sections 435 and 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order, dated the 1st November 1923, of the District Magistrate, South Arcot, in C. M. P. No. 29 of 1923.

Messrs. E. L. Thornton and T. R. Govindaswami Mudaliar, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor on behalf of the Crown.

Mr R. Gopalswami Ayyangar, for the Counter-Petitioner.

ORDER.—The order passed by the District Magistrate under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, on 23rd September, 1923, has expired.

It is, therefore, unnecessary to adjudicate upon the merits of the order, and it would be superfluous to annul an order which has long ceased to be in force, vide, Swaminatha Mudaliar v. Gopalakrishna Naidu (1).

Nevertheless it has been strongly urged that the District Magistrate should not have issued an order under section 144 and should not have discharged the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, without finding that there was a danger of a breach of the peace even if the Goundans continued to be bound over to keep the peace. In Muthukumaraswami Nadar v. Muhammad Rowther (2) a learned Judge of this Court whose attention does not seem to have been drawn to Swaminatha Mudaliar v. Gopala Krishna Naidu (1) thought it incumbent on him to interfere in revision with an expired order. The cases quoted by him do not in my opinion support his view.

In Ramanadhan Chetti v. Murugappa Chetti (3) the fact that the order had ceased to be in force does not appear to have been brought to notice when the High Court heard the criminal revision case; and in Govinda Chetty v. Perumal Chetty (4) there was in fact one day more for the order to remain in force.

It seems to me a waste of time to adjudicate upon matters which have no practical effect. I, therefore, dismiss the criminal revision petition.

It will be sufficient to communicate to the District Magistrate for his future guidance a copy of the judgment of Ayling, J., in Swaminatha Mudaliar v. Gopalakrishna Naidu (5) as representing the proper course to be adopted by a Magistrate in dealing with cases in which his powers under section 144 are repeatedly invoked.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case which presents many extraordinary features not the least of which was the extreme laxity of the Police Officers concerned. On the morning of the 16th October, 1922, a gang of about 30 villagers, armed with sticks, spears and dahs went across the river in two big sampans to the little town of Bogale in the Pyapon District. It was about 7 o'clock, when most people would be up and about, and many either joining to or returning from the bazaar. U Shwe Lon (P. W. No. 2) a Karen Christian, aged 62 years and the local opium licensee, was on his way to his shop near the bazaar, when he saw the gang, for whom indeed he had to make way as they marched past. Every member of the gang had a piece of white cloth tied round his head and all or nearly all wore white undervests, their longyis being of different colours. Prominent amongst them was the first appellant, San Min, who apparently was a well-known man in the Township.

The gang came up from the river bund, marched south along the strand bund and then turned east into a side road which separates the bazaar from a row of houses, in some of which were Chinese shops. Their main object was the eating house of one Pauk Si.

Two days previously, San Min's younger brother, Po Hnin second appellant, had visited the same shop and therein had an altercation and fight with Amine, one of the shop assistants. When it was over, Po Hnin complained to the Police that he had been robbed of a watch chain with a dollar pendant, and some official enquiry was made, resulting in nothing.

San Min and his men were, therefore, out for revenge, their resentment being directed towards the inmates of Pauk Si's shop in particular and all Chinamen in general. It should be mentioned that there were some Burman shop servants in Pauk Si's shop.

The gang began operation as soon as they turned into the side road. At least three Chinamen, who were not near the street corner and who had no connection with Pauk Si, were struck down by some. Others, including the ring-leaders, entered Pauk Si's shop, and started to assault every one therein. The victims included one Shwe Sin, an innocent customer, who soon afterwards died of his injuries. It has been urged before us that this man was probably struck by inmates of the shop itself, while they were resisting the attack. This, however, is pure conjecture. There is no evidence of any resistance and, in the circumstances it is extremely improbable that resistance was even thought of. The attacking force was a large one and they took the people in the shop by surprise.

There was, necessarily, big commotion and it can well be understood that the news of most unusual incident such as this taking place near the bazaar, would spread with great rapidity all over the little town. The Police Station is only half a mile away from the shop. Yet, the gang, when they had completed their work, marched back along the public road to their sampans and rowed away across the river without let or hindrance.

It was not till the 27th that the Inspector acting under orders from the D. S. P. took over the case from Maung Po Se.

As a result of the investigation 29 persons were committed to the Sessions. Of these, nine were acquitted, one a boy of 16 was sentenced to imprisonment till the rising of the Court, 14 were convicted of rioting under section 147, and sentenced to suffer one year's rigorous imprisonment each, and 5 were convicted of causing grievous hurt and rioting and sentenced to 5 years and one year the sentences to run concurrently. These 19 have appealed.

The learned Counsel for both parties dealt with the evidence against each appellant in detail and I have taken time to study the depositions for the prosecution and the defence.

The two most reliable witnesses for the prosecution (besides U Shwe Lon already mentioned) were Kan Ye (P. W. No. 18) and Po Tha (P. W. No. 19). There the evidence of these two support that of witnesses who saw the riot in and near Pauk Si's shop. I consider that the identity of the two rioters was well established. Kan Ye made one mistake, as regards Hla Saung, who was acquitted.

Adopting this view, I find that two of the appellants were not satisfactorily identified, namely, Po Hnit and Pan Bu. A third man, Po Thi was also unnoticed by Kan Ye and Po Tha, but there is otherwise a strong array of witnesses against him and as he appears to have taken a prominent part in the attack I see no reason to disbelieve the evidence against him.

Po Hnit and Pan Bu (4th and 5th appellants) were, as stated above, not satisfactorily identified. Sit Phaung said that he was struck by the former, but he had never seen his assailant before and, as there was no identification parade (another serious omission by the Police), his statement must be received with caution; Maung Thin and Lu Bu who said that Po Hnit was a member of the gang were disbelieved by the Trial Court. So far Pan Bu, the evidence was conflicting, and the prosecution witnesses who named him tried to place him at several spots at the same time. I, therefore, set aside the convictions of the 4th and 5th appellants and direct that they be acquitted.

The convictions of the 17 remaining appellants for the offence of rioting are confirmed.

Charges under sections 325 and 452 read with section 149 had also been framed against each of them, but the learned Sessions Judge, on a consideration of certain decisions of Indian High Courts, came to the conclusion that they could not be convicted under these sections in addition to the conviction under section 147. The authorities on this point are conflicting and there does not seem to have been a case on all fours with the present one. The question, however, is largely one of the sentence to be passed, and as I am unable in the circumstances to hold that a case for enhancing any of the sentences in revision has been made out, it is unnecessary to discuss the legal point in connection with those who have been convicted only of rioting. The appeals of the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 16th, 17th, 18th and 19th appellants are dismissed.

There remain the cases of the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 6th and 15th appellants. These men were also charged under sections 302 and 325 in the alternative with respect to the deceased Mg Shwe Sin; in addition San Min was charged under sections 326 and 325 (in the alternative) with respect to Chit Tha, the charges under sections 302 and 326 were not substantiated.

As regards the assailants of Shwe Sin, the evidence is very clear against San Min and Kyaw Hla. These two were named both by Amine and by Shwe Sin himself to his wife before he became speechless. The latter also mentioned Po Hnin but this appellant was attacking Amine and there is much force in the contention that he could not have joined in the assault on Shwe Sin, especially when it is borne in mind that the deceased had really only two injuries.

Hence, as regards Po Hnin, Po Thi and San Win, I am not satisfied with the evidence that they joined in the attack on Shwe Sin. I accept the evidence that they were active participants in the riot and that they actually struck one or more of the injured persons other than Shwe Sin. In this view, it becomes necessary to consider whether they are not liable under section 149. That they may be convicted of voluntarily causing hurt in addition to the conviction for rioting is undisputed, but where it is sought also to convict him under section 325 read with section 149, the decisions of the High Courts are in conflict. A Full Bench of the Bombay High Court in Queen-Empress v. Bana Punja (1) favoured the view which I propose to adopt, namely, that such convictions and separate sentences are legal where it is shown that the accused actually joined in the assaults, some of these assaults may have resulted in simple hurt others in grievous hurt but all the actual assailants are, under section 149, liable for all the results. I, therefore, alter the convictions in these three cases to convictions under section 325 read with section 149 and reduce the sentence on each to 3 years' rigorous imprisonment. The convictions and sentences under section 147 will stand, but the sentences passed on each appellant will run concurrently.

As regards San Min and Kyaw Hla, I confirm the convictions and sentences under sections 325 and 147, the sentences to run concurrently. The additional charge against San Min under section 325 with respect to Chit Tha dependent on the statement of Ohit Tha alone and there was little or no corroboration. I give San Min the benefit of the doubt and the conviction and sentence under this charge are set aside.

In the result, San Min and Kyaw Hla will suffer 5 years' rigorous imprisonment each; Po Hnin, Po Thi and San Win 3 years' rigorous imprisonment each, and the remaining appellants (except the two whom I have acquitted) 1 year's rigorous imprisonment each.

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Agra at Muttra, dated the 9th April 1924

Mr. C. Ross Alston, for the Applicant

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This Criminal Revision No. 210, and the other Criminal Revisions Nos. 205, 206, 209 and 211, deal with two incidents of satta gambling. The cases Nos. 206, 209, 210 and 211 are the cases of Tulshi Das, Lachmi Narain, Budha, Thakar Das and Nahal Chand. The case No. 205 is that of Ghisa, Pershadi, Manohar and Kallu

To deal now with the Case No. 210, this man, Tulshi Das, was charged with a number of others with gambling in the satta form, i.e., with betting or taking bets on opium price figures in a public place—an offence under section 13 of the Gambling Act III of 1867, as amended by the U. P. Act I of 1917. The section, as amended, reads:—"Any person found gambling in any public street, place or thoroughfare" and by the same Act "gaming" includes "wagering". The nine men, whose cases are before me, were in their respective two groups, charged in effect with being book makers, i.e., with keeping premises for the purposes of betting and themselves taking bets therein. They have been sentenced to a month's imprisonment each. A number of those who went there merely for the purpose of making bets were sentenced to various fines. Those others have not applied to this Court in revision.

The principal accused avowedly (vide the terms of their lease) took a lease of the premises concerned for the express purpose of carrying on the business which forms the subject of the charge. The "place" in question consists of an enclosure within a larger enclosure, and the public street runs along one side of the larger enclosure, and the "place", if used in the ordinary way as a place of residence, would undoubtedly be a "private" place. I mention these facts, because reliance has been placed on them by the defence, but in the view that I take the construction of the place is wholly immaterial. The only question here is "Did the accused by their action convert this place into a public place within the meaning of the Gambling Act?"

The term "public place" or a cognate expression is used in many Acts of the Legislature, but I am not aware of any statutory definition which can have bearing on the present case. It may well have different meaning for the purpose of different Acts. Where it is not specifically defined, its value must be reasonably determined by the context and the circumstances in which it has been used. It is not defined in the Gambling Act. I have, therefore, to fall back on the consideration of what is the reasonable and proper scope to be given to the term for the purpose of Act III of 1867.

Two considerations present themselves. Is the Act, which is forbidden, so forbidden because it violates a public title or because it violates moral standards publicly.

Now it is clear that the Legislature in such Acts as forbid encroachment on public property, has in view the protection of public title. It is equally clear that in enacting the Gambling Act the Legislature had in view the prevention of public injury to moral standards and cannot be conceived of as having been even remotely concerned with the protection of public title to any particular property.

In what ways then can the standard of morality be publicly injured by gaming? It is possible to gamble

(a) in a private house, entry to which is not permitted to any but friends, a select few coming by special invitation or special permission, and where the gaming can be neither seen nor heard by the public. This, whether gaming be or be not morally desirable, can clearly constitute in no sense a public injury to moral standards,

(b) under similar conditions but where the gaming can be seen by the public without the public infringing the private rights of the owner of the place. Here there is a public injury to moral standards; whether the circumstances of the gaming in a house, which is private in every sense of the term, being visible to the public or members thereof, will suffice to constitute it gaming "in a public place" is a point which I have not got to decide in this case. I content myself with noting that in view of the case Reg v. Thallman (1)

any body who so acts will at least run a risk of meeting with an adverse decision;

(c) in a place the title to which is vested in the public. Here there can be no suggestion that an offence is not committed,

(d) in a place the title to which is vested in a private individual but into which that individual, either avowedly or by implication, invites the public to come whether to gamble or as spectators.

Here again is that public injury to moral standards in an equally virulent form, as in the case (c) above, where the gambling is on land of which the title is vested in the public. The Legislature has used words "in a public place" capable equally of including in their ordinary reasonable and proper meaning "a place the title to which is vested in the public" and "a place to which, however owned, the public is allowed in effect unrestricted access". The public injury to moral standards to be prevented is equally great in the two cases and is equally obvious in the two cases, and the language used reasonably covers the two cases. It would be unreasonable to hold that both cases are not covered

In the case before me, it is not disputed that the accused invited to enter all and sundry who might wish to bet, but the case would in my opinion have been no different if the invitation had been to a class of "the public" or if there had been a merely colourable restriction on the right of entry.

My attention has been invited to a number of rulings and Statutes, English and Indian. But holding, as I have, that the matter must be decided on the language and purpose of Act III of 1867 and on that alone, I do not think it necessary further to refer to them, beyond saying that the view I have taken in effect accords with that of Mr. Justice Stuart in Sukhanandan Singh v. Emperor (2), in which he relied on Reg v. Wellard (3). The latter case has, I find, been followed also in Hari Singh v. Jadu Nandan Singh (4), Emperor v. Govindarajulu (5) and In re Musa (6).

I am of opinion that it is not the question of title to the place nor the nature of its metes and bounds, which are the decisive factors, but the use to which the place is put.

I hold that the accused were gaming in a public place.

There remains only the question of sentence. The accused plead that they did not know that they were breaking the law. I have held that they were breaking the law, and it appears to me that it had really been quite clear ever since the ruling of Mr. Justice Stuart in Sukhnandan Singh v. Emperor (2) decided on December 16th 1921, which, though it referred to gambling of a different type, specifically dealt with the phrase "in a public place." Apart from what may have been the law, it is clear that the accused at least knew that they were doing some thing, which the law had intended to forbid, and, being badly advised that there was a loop hole, deliberately tried to take advantage of it. It is clear that they have done a very great deal of mischief, and, if the case rested there, I would maintain the sentence as it stands; but it also seems that some, at least, of that mischief would have been prevented if the Police had taken action sooner. While, therefore, I think that a fine of Rs. 50 is adequate in the case of the men who merely took advantage of the facilities provided by these accused and went to bet, I think it would be wholly inadequate in the case of the men who, for their own profit, deliberately provided those facilities. I reduce the sentence in the case of each of these nine men to a period of two weeks' simple imprisonment. Some, if not all, of the applicants have already served several days. They will surrender to their bail and serve the remainder.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 397 —Sentence, when begins to run—"Already undergoing sentence of imprisonment", meaning of—Separate sentences on same day

An accused under custody begins to undergo a sentence of imprisonment passed on him from the moment the sentence is pronounced and if a second sentence of imprisonment is passed on him on the same day subsequently in a separate trial, he is "already undergoing sentence of imprisonment" within the meaning of section 397, Criminal Procedure Code [p 479, col 1].

Criminal revision of the High Court being review of an order of the Township Magistrate, Kyaiklat, in Cr. Reg Nos 145 and 146 of 1923.

Reference made by the District Magistrate, Pyapon, in his Criminal Revision Nos. 321 and 322 of 1923.

REFERENCE.—In this case the accused was sentenced to suffer one year's rigorous imprisonment by Maung Po Ywet, First Class, Township Magistrate, Kyaiklat, under section 379, Indian Penal Code, on the 11th September 1923 and to run concurrently with the sentence passed in Criminal Trial No 145 of 1923 which is also submitted for reference.

Under section 397 of the amended Criminal Procedure Code, the concurrent sentence can only be passed in a case where the accused is undergoing sentence passed in another case.

The sentences in both cases were passed on the same date, i. e., 11th September 1923, and I do not think that the sentence passed in both cases can run concurrently as accused was not undergoing any sentence when the sentence was passed in both cases and the sentence passed at separate trials must run consecutively under paragraph 325, Lower Burma Courts Manual.

Accused does not appeal in both cases which are now submitted to the High Court with a recommendation that the sentence in Criminal Regular Trial No. 146 of 1923 may be altered to run consecutively with the sentence passed in Criminal Regular Trial No. 145 of 1923 under section 379, Indian Penal Code.

ORDER.—The respondent was convicted in two separate trials on the same day by the same Magistrate. In each case he was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year. In Case No. 146 the Magistrate ordered that the sentence should run concurrently with that passed in No. 145. I think it is a reasonable presumption that sentence was passed first in No. 145.

The District Magistrate has referred the case with a recommendation that the sentences should be ordered to run consecutively. He does not go into the merits or suggest that the effective sentence of one year for the two offences was inadequate. I have read the judgments and in my opinion the sentences are sufficient as they stand.

The District Magistrate's ground for this recommendation is that as the two sentences were passed on the same day the respondent, at the time when sentence was passed in No. 146, was not "already undergoing a sentence of imprisonment" within the meaning of section 397, Criminal Procedure Code.

I am unable to agree. The respondent was in custody and in my view in such circumstances he began to undergo the sentence in No. 145 from the moment at which that sentence was pronounced. I hold, therefore, that the Magistrate's order was a proper one under section 397, Criminal Procedure Code.

No action is called for. The proceedings may be returned.

—Creditor receiving payment of debt—Subsequent denial—Offence

Accused received from the complainant, his debtor, cash and cattle in payment of the debt due by the latter. Subsequently he gave the complainant notice calling upon him to pay the debt and denied the receipt of the cash and cattle.

Held, that, in the absence of proof that the accused received payment of the debt with the pre-conceived intention of denying it later on, he could not be held to have committed an offence under section 420 of the Penal Code.

Petition, under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Karnal, dated the 13th January 1923, confirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Sonapat, District Rohtak, dated the 21st December 1921.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The case against Ram Saran, petitioner, who has been convicted of cheating under section 420, Indian Penal Code, was, that in spite of receiving from his debtor, the complainant, cash and cattle in payment of what he owed him, he gave him notice later on for payment of the debt originally due, and denied what he had already received. Counsel for the petitioner contends that even if he did this, he could not be said to have committed cheating. This point was raised in the grounds of appeal to the learned Sessions Judge, but there is no reference to it in his judgment. It is clear that there was no dishonesty or fraud in the creditor's act of receiving the cash and cattle from the debtor, nor was it alleged that he made the payment under deception. Further, there was nothing to show that the petitioner received payment with the pre-conceived intention of denying it later on. If he subsequently denied it he cannot be said to have cheated the debtor though this conduct of his was highly reprehensible. Therefore, I accept this petition in revision and acquit him and discharge him from his bail bond.

A sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment on a youthful first offender aged 14½ years for an offence of dishonestly receiving stolen property under section 411, Penal Code, is improper, and where in lieu of this sentence the offender has been ordered to be detained in a Reformatory School, the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the order for detention.

Revision from the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Patna, dated the 4th December 1922, affirming that of the Additional District Magistrate, Patna, dated the 15th November 1922.

Mr. P. C. Roy, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application on behalf of one Jagarnath Chaubey a boy of 14½ years who was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment on conviction of an offence under section 411 of the Indian Penal Code and whom the Additional District Magistrate ordered to be detained in a Reformatory School for 3½ years instead of being imprisoned. It is contended that in view of the youth of the accused he ought to have been dealt with under section 31 of the Reformatory Schools Act. The sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment on a youthful first offender in a case of this kind appears to me to have been improper and, therefore, this Court has jurisdiction to alter the order for detention in a Reformatory School [Sheikh Reasut v. Courteney (1)]. I do not think that the case is one in which it would be proper that the boy should be discharged after admonition. But if the parent or the guardian or the nearest adult relative of the boy is willing to ORDER.—In this case, a number of accused persons were charged; some of them were discharged, as there was no evidence against them. The Magistrate ordered the complainant to pay compensation to the persons who had been discharged without giving the complainant an opportunity to show cause why such an order may not be made against him. The proviso (A) attached to section 250 of the Criminal Procedure Code lays down that before making any direction as to the payment of compensation the Magistrate shall consider any objections which the complainant on information may urge against the making of the direction. This was not done in this case. The order is consequently bad in law. I accept the recommendation made by the District Magistrate of Jhang and set aside the order of the Magistrate.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 132—Unpaid purchase-money, suit for—Date of payment postponed—Limitation, operation of.

A claim for unpaid purchase-money is governed by Art. 132 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and the starting point of the period of limitation is the date of sale and not the date to which the payment of the purchase-money is postponed.

A lien for unpaid purchase-money is a statutory charge and parties cannot extend the time given by law for the enforcement of such a charge by simply putting off the date of payment.

It is however open to them to create a charge by a proper document and fix a period for the payment of the amount due.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in Appeal Suit 56 of 1920 (Appeal Suit No. 183 of 1920 on the file of the District Court of Tanjore) preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Mayavaram, in Original Suit No. 111 of 1918.

Messrs. K. Bhashyam Iyengar, and P. J. Kuppanna Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Muthusami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The first question argued in this second appeal was that Exhibit B was the consideration for Exhibit A and the plaintiff was not entitled to claim a statutory charge for the unpaid purchase-money. From a perusal of Exhibits A and B it is clear that the vendor did not accept Exhibit B as consideration for the sale. According to Exhibits A and B the arrangement was that the vendee should execute a bond for the unpaid purchase-money, undertaking to pay the amount on the happening of a certain event, namely, the attaining of majority of Dharmaraja Iyer. It cannot be said that the vendor accepted the bond as consideration for the price of the property sold. The vendee undertook to pay the price of the land sold to him on the happening of a certain event. I find against the appellant so far as this contention is concerned.

The next contention is that the suit is barred by limitation as more than 12 years have elapsed from the date of the sale. The plaintiff's case is that he had a statutory charge and by Exhibit B the date of payment was fixed as 17th July 1905 and that he, therefore, has 12 years from that date. The plaint was filed no doubt within 12 years from that date. But the real question is whether in the case of statutory charge for unpaid purchase-money, the vendor can claim the purchase-money more than 12 years after the date of the sale. It is settled law that in the case of a claim for unpaid purchase-money, Art. 132 of the Limitation Act applies, vide Ramakerishna Ayyar v. Subramania Ayyar, (1). The further question is when does the money become payable? The third column of the First Schedule against Art. 132 contains the words "when the money sued for becomes due". The price of the land sold is payable on the date of the sale. So the money becomes payable to the vendor on the date of the sale. The suit, therefore, has to be brought within 12 years from the date of the sale.

On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged that Exhibits A and B should be considered as parts of one transaction and by Exhibit B time for payment was postponed and that, therefore, the plaintiff's suit is within the period of limitation. No doubt in the case of contract between two persons it is open to the obligor to extend the period of limitation by a subsequent document. But in this case the charge was not created by the act of the parties. The charge was a statutory charge and unless the parties clearly expressed their intention to extend the period of limitation by a proper instrument, a document like Exhibit B cannot extend the period of limitation given by law. The respondent relies upon a judgment of this Court in Kavoonoor Velayuda Reddi v. Reddiyanni Narasimha

(1) 20 M. 305.

SONA PATIL v. LAXMAN.

Reddi (2). I do not see how that case can help the plaintiff. There the charge or mortgage was created by the act of the parties, it was open to the parties to vary the terms of a prior document by a proper subsequent instrument. Here as I have said the charge is given by law and the parties cannot extend the time given by law for the enforcement of such a charge by simply putting off the date of payment. As I said it was open to them to create a charge by a proper document and fix a period for the payment of the amount due. Exhibit B is not such a document and, therefore, the contention of the appellant ought to prevail.

In the result I allow the appeal and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

The memorandum of objections is dismissed but without costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 23, Sch. I, Arts 36, 37, 39—Tank closed—Crops damaged—Suit for compensation—Continued obstruction—Limitation, operation of

A suit for compensation for injury caused to crops by the closing of the main sluice of a tank is governed by Art. 39 and not Art. 36 of the Limitation Act, and if it is alleged by the plaintiff that the obstruction caused continued and he was prevented from removing it by threats of violence, it is a continuing wrong and under Art. 37 read with section 23 of the Limitation Act, the suit would be within time, if brought within three years of the last day to which the wrong continued. [p. 482, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, in Civil Appeal No. 17 of 1922 dated the 24th August 1922.

Messrs. D. T. Mangalmurti and K. K. Gandhe, for the Appellants.

Mr. Wazalwar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, who is appellant here, sued for compensation for the injury done to his dhan crop by the closing of the main sluice of a tank. In his plaint, which was filed on the 16th of November 1921, he alleged that on the 5th of October 1918 when he was taking water from the sluice, the defendants obstructed him and prevented him from taking any more, so that he got a very small out-turn; he harvested the dhan in the second half of November, so that his cause of action arose on or about the 1st of December 1918.

The written statement of the defendants dealt fully with the merits of the case but did not raise any plea of limitation an omission which is somewhat unusual. The question was, however, raised in some way, apparently by the learned Judge himself, and the plaintiff's Pleader made a further statement in which he said the defendants had threatened him with violence if he opened the sluice after they had closed it, and in fear of that violence he had not opened it again till July 1919. The suit has been dismissed in both Courts as barred by time without any trial on the merits.

In the First Court it was held that the Article of the Schedule of the Limitation Act governing the case was Art. 36, which refers to suits for compensation for malfeasance and the like not otherwise specially provided for in the Article. As there are several provisions of the Act that very clearly cover the facts alleged by the plaintiff, that Article could certainly not apply. In appeal it was contended that the provisions applicable were Art. 37 (compensation for obstructing a water channel) and section 23 (continuing wrong), but the learned District Judge held that the suit was one for compensation for trespass on immoveable property, governed by Art. 39, and that time began to run from the 5th of October 1918, as neither section 23 nor section 24 of the Act could be called in aid.

In original alleged wrongful act of the defendants out of which the claim arose was certainly a trespass on immovable property, rendered actionable by being accompanied by obstruction of a water course, and as the trespass was not repeated section 23 of the Act does not extend the accrual of the cause of action in respect of the trespass to any date after the 5th of October 1918. But there was also a separate cause of action in respect of the obstruction of the water course by itself, and the plaintiff alleged that the obstruction was continued by the defendants till the following July, in that he was prevented by threats of violence from removing it. That is undoubtedly a continuing wrong, and under section 23 and Art. 37 of the Limitation Act the suit is within time if it is brought within three years of the last day to which the wrong continued. None of the plaintiff's allegations of fact that make out that the obstruction of the water course extended at least up to the 16th of November 1918, the first day of the second half of that month, has been denied, and they must be regarded as admitted.

The suit filed on the 16th of November 1921 was, therefore, within time. The decree of the lower Appellate Court will accordingly be set aside and the case will be remanded to the First Court to be tried out on its merits. A certificate for the refund of Court fees paid on this appeal will issue. All other costs heretofore incurred will be costs in the suit.

In a suit under section 77 of the Registration Act, against the refusal of the Registrar to register a document, the same considerations should guide the Court which should guide the Registrar in considering his duty to register or refuse registration [p 484, col 1].

The question for consideration would be whether the document tendered for registration was actually in the state in which it was executed by the parties to it [ibid].

Where it is found that the document tendered bears the most apparent traces of having been tampered with, after the execution of the document in its original state, the Court should refuse to direct registration [ibid].

Mr. K. Krishnamachariar, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Rama Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—This was a suit brought under section 77 of the Indian Registration Act which enables a person who has tendered a document for registration to bring a suit in a Civil Court against the refusal of the Registrar to register it.

In this case the plaintiff tendered a document, which is before us for registration. The document bears the most apparent traces of having been tampered with. In one sheet all the glaze of the paper has been destroyed and there is a very deep discolouration. Others bear obvious signs of the surface of the paper having been chemically dealt with but throughout although the discolouration is marked, in the operative sheets of the document, the signature, which is admitted, and the stamp paper at the top are practically intact. Expert evidence has shown that the discolouration and the destruction of the glaze on the surface of the paper is due to chemical action. The inference that those alterations were made after the execution of the document in its original state by the defendants is almost irresistible. Naturally enough the plaintiff was asked what explanation he proposed to offer. The one he gave was so childish that hardly any of the learned Judges who considered this matter have treated it seriously. That being so, what is the position? Is this Court to enter into a roving enquiry into the probabilities and the surrounding circumstances and put itself the question—Does this document, whatever its history, represent the substance of the agreement between the parties? In my opinion, that is a wholly officious and irrelevant enquiry. The Registrar has got to ask himself merely this: Is this document now tendered to me to be registered actually in the state in which it was executed by the parties to it? In my opinion, he would be exceeding his functions if, he went into a roving enquiry to guess at the probabilities of its provisions; and it appears that, in a suit under section 77, the same considerations should guide the Court which should guide the Registrar in considering his duty to register or to refuse registration. Indeed, were it otherwise, the Court would be called upon to say, in effect that the Registrar was perfectly justified in refusing registration, but that the Court will nevertheless order it to be registered; and the result might be that the Court would order registration of the document which had been altered behind the back of a person who executed it and after its execution and signature on the ground not that he had ever executed it in its present state, but that it represented what had actually been agreed between the parties. In my opinion, such a conclusion is so absurd as to refute itself.

This appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

I may add that, if the facts were as the plaintiff contends, namely, that, although he has tampered with the document, the agreement was that which he contended to be, he has a remedy other than by proceeding under this Act, or at any rate he had, though perhaps by now he may have lost it by limitation.

If the impugned document has been registered in pursuance of the order of the District Judge—and we are given to understand that it has—the registration stands cancelled. This order will be communicated to the Registrar of Kistna District.

No. 125 of 1920.

Mr. C H. Raghva Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this case is one of res judicata. The appellant represents the interests of one Pitchi Reddi. The respondent represents the interests of one Rami Reddi II. Rami Reddi and Bapi Reddi brought a suit, O. S. No. 372 of 1904, and got it declared that certain alienations by the widow in possession to Pitchi Reddi and to some others respectively were not binding upon the reversioners. In that suit Pitchi Reddi and the other defendants raised the question that the property did not belong to the widow's husband, and, therefore, the reversioners had no right to the properties. They also raised the question that the suit was barred by limitation. These were the two main questions raised in that case. The District Munsif came to the conclusion that the suit was barred by limitation and dismissed the suit expressly on the ground of limitation. He also gave a finding on the issue as to title against the plaintiffs' reversioners, holding that the properties did not belong to the estate of the deceased last male holder as alleged by them. But after coming to that finding he stated in his judgment that he recorded that finding for the purpose of preventing a remand, but that he really based his judgment upon the finding on limitation. It is the finding of the District Munsif in that suit on the question of title that is now claimed to make that question res judicata between the present parties. There was an appeal from the judgment of the District Munsif by one of the reversioners Bapi Reddi; the other reversioner Rami Reddi was joined as the 5th respondent. So far as the second set of alienees were concerned the District Munsif's decree was confirmed on the finding that the suit was barred by limitation by the Appellate Court. But the Appellate Court expressed no opinion on the matter regarding Pitchi Reddi's claim as the matter ended in a compromise by which the decree of the First Court was set aside and the suit was decreed in appeal as per terms of the compromise under which Pitchi Reddi agreed that Bapi Reddi should take the properties on the death of the widow, on the footing that the alienation to him did not cover more than the life estate of the widow. There was a second appeal in the matter by Pitchi Reddi in the High Court in which this compromise decree seems to have been set aside and so far as Bapi Reddi was concerned the decree of the First Court was restored, Rami Reddi not being a party to the second appeal. This is how the matter stands. Now the lower Court has held that the finding in the previous litigation as to title is not res judicata in the present litigation on the ground that the finding of the First Court as to title had been by implication set aside by the Appellate Court and the High Court's decree restoring the First Court's decree was not binding upon Rami Reddi, because he was not a party to the second appeal. Assuming for a moment that this view is not correct, and the First Court's

findings are still subsisting, we must still hold that the question of title has not been made res judicata by those findings. The findings of the First Court on the question of title was only a tentative decision, a sort of opinion expressed by the Court that the title was not in the person whom the reversioners put forward. The District Munsif says, after finding on the question of title in favour of the alienee, in paragraph 17 of his judgment that "the finding on the first issue was beside the point, and that he ought not to have recorded the finding but for saving the suit from being remanded in case the Appellate Court disagreed with him in his finding of the other issue." He then considered the question of limitation and found that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by limitation and dismissed the suit. It is clear after this statement of the Munsif that he did not intend to base his judgment at all upon the question of title, his finding, therefore, can only be treated as an obiter dictum and not as res judicata at all. For a finding to become res judicata it is necessary that the point should have been heard and finally determined. When a Court merely for the purpose of preventing a remand records a conclusion on an issue, not necessary for the decision, we cannot hold that it has finally determined the question. This point was decided by the Madras High Court in Devarakonda Narasamma v. Devarakonda Kannaya (1). Their Lordships held: "The words in section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code 'has been heard and finally decided by such Court' do not apply to an opinion expressed in the judgment on other issues not material for the purpose of the decree, though properly determined under section 204 of the Code of Civil Procedure by the Court of the first instance." That is, if the decree is not based upon a particular finding, that finding cannot be treated as res judicata. We, therefore, agree with the Subordinate Judge in thinking that there is no res judicata in this case, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 6—Suit relating to share of jagir—Collector's certificate whether necessary—Certificate not obtained—Procedure

A suit for a declaration that plaintiff is the sole owner of a certain share in a jagir cannot proceed without a certificate from the Collector under section 6 of the Pensions Act

But the absence of a certificate is not a sufficient ground for the summary rejection of the plaintiff's appeal and the hearing may be adjourned to enable the plaintiff-appellant to obtain the certificate

Second appeal from the decree of District Judge, Delhi, dated the 31st July 1923, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, Third Class, Delhi, dated the 23rd January 1923.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mohammed Monier, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—In this case out of which the present second appeal arises plaintiff-appellant asked for a declaration that he was the sole owner of a certain share in a jagir. A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents to the effect that the suit could not proceed in the absence of a certificate granted by the Collector under section 6 of the Pensions Act XXIII of 1871. The matter was before the Collector who directed that the plaintiff should bring a civil suit but gave no certificate in proper form. Having regard to section 4 of the Act, I am satisfied that the certificate was essential, but I do not think that the absence of one is a sufficient ground for the summary rejection of the appeal. In the case reported as Ihtisham Ali v. Sham Sunder (1) the Judges adjourned the hear-

The same course was adopted in the case reported as Antaji Vasudev Kelkar v. Vinayak Keshav (2). I therefore, allow the appellant three months to obtain a certificate from the Collector under section 6 of the Act. A fresh date will be fixed after the coming vacation.

In applying the presumption allowed by section 90 of the Evidence Act, the period of 30 years is to be reckoned not from the date upon which the document is filed in Court, but from the date on which it having been tendered in evidence, its genuineness or otherwise became the subject of proof. Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Nellore, in Appeal Suit No 45 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Kanigiri, in Original Suit No. 417 of 1915.

Mr K. Krishnaswami Iyengar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. V. Ramanatha Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants raise an objection that Exhibit A, which is a registration copy of a sale-deed executed in 1888, has not been properly proved, because the presumption under section 90 of the Evidence Act cannot be drawn, as the document was less than 30 years old when it was first produced in Court. When the case was first tried, the Munsif naturally did not consider whether section 90 was applicable because the document was obviously not 30 years old at that time. But after finding that the loss of the original was not satisfactorily proved, he refused to allow the sale to be proved by secondary evidence, whether oral or documentary in the shape of Exhibit A. Therefore, although this document was marked as Exhibit A, it was not treated as evidence in the suit.

On appeal the suit was remanded for re-trial and when it came on for re-trial the sale-deed, of which Exhibit A is a copy, was more than 30 years old; and it has been laid down so long ago as Minu Sirkar v. Rhedoy Nath Roy (1) that in applying the presumption allowed by section 90 of the Evidence Act, a period of 30 years is to be reckoned not from the date upon which the document is filed in Court, but from the date on which it having been tendered in evidence, its genuineness or otherwise becomes the subject of proof. I have been referred to a decision of a Single Judge reported as Chirannji Lal v. Kallu (2) which seems to take a different view, but the same view is taken in Har Ram v. Mutsaddi (3) and in a recent case of the Lahore High Court, Ladha Singh v. Hukam Devi (4). The lower Court was, therefore, quite justified in applying section 90 of the Evidence Act to this document which was 30 years old at the time when its genuineness came up for consideration, namely, at the time of the re-trial in the District Munsif's Court. Apart from this, it might be noticed that the appellants in their written statement did not deny the genuineness of this document. They did not directly admit its execution; but paragraphs 3 and 4 of their written statement show clearly that they did impliedly admit execution; but denied the bona fides and the validity of the document. In that view also it seems rather strange that they should now question the genuineness of the document, namely, the fact of its execution. For both these reasons the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Guardians and Wards Act (VII of 1890), s. 43.
(1).—Persons not guardians, proceedings against—Power of Court to pass orders.

Under section 43 of the Guardians and Wards Act, it is only the conduct or proceedings of any guardian appointed or declared by the Court which can be called in question. The District Court has, therefore, no power to pass orders against persons not guardians except in certain specified instances.

Komma Somakka v. Kovdala Pedda Ramiah, 13 Ind. Cas. 251, 10 M. L. T. 483, (1911) 2 M. W. N. 519, 22 M. L. J. 193, 36 M. 39, relied on.

Wallace Sitha Bai v. Wallace Radha Bai, 51 Ind. Cas. 236, 36 M. L. J. 189, distinguished.

Therefore, a mother who has been appointed by Court as guardian of her minor daughter, is not entitled to apply under the section for return of the child's jewels from a relation, with whom the child was living before her appointment by Court as guardian.

Petition, under sections 115 of Act V of 1908 and 107 of Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the District Court, Coimbatore, in I. A. No. 341 of 1922; in I. A. No. 189 of 1922, in O. P. No. 91 of 1919.

Mr. A. Vasudeva Menon, for the Petitioner.

Mr. V. Narasimha Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the minor's guardian was the mother, the present petitioner, appointed on 29th November 1919. Sometime before that the minor lived with the second respondent her uncle presumably against the wishes of the mother. The girl was returned to the mother on 18th December 1919 and the present application is by the mother for the return of two jewels said to have been on the person of the minor, when she went to second respondent. The mother's attitude is a peculiar one. She denies having put in any such application and now says the District Judge has acted without jurisdiction. I think he has. The mother is no doubt a person interested in the minor under section 43 (1) of the Guardians and Wards Act but it is only the conduct or proceedings of any guardian appointed or declared by Court which can be called in question. The second respondent had ceased at the end of 1919 to be even a de facto guardian and was not such at the date of the application by the mother in 1922.

The case, therefore, in Wallace Sitha Bai v. Wallace Radha Bai (1) has no application.

The learned District Judge has proceeded on the powers conferred by section 43 of the Act. But as pointed out in Komma Somakka v. Kovdala Pedda Ramiah (2) the Act does not profess to give the District Court any power or authority over persons other than the guardian or the minor except in certain instances which do not apply here. I, therefore, think in the circumstances of this case the District Judge acted without jurisdiction and he had no right to call upon the second respondent to deliver up the jewels under section 43 of the Guardians and Wards Act. I think interference is called for and I allow the civil revision petition and set aside the order of the District Judge with costs.

If a person, in whose favour a sale is executed by an insolvent, pays off a mortgage on the transferred property, he is entitled to be entered as a scheduled creditor to the extent of the amount paid by him, even though the sale is set aside by the Insolvency Court under section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act as fraudulent and void as against the Receiver [p 489, cols 1 & 2]

The principle that where both parties to a void agreement are equally to blame in the matter the law will restore to neither of them any advantage that he may have allowed the other to get from him has no application to a case where the object of the fraud has been wholly frustrated [p 489, col 2]

Appeal against the order of the District Judge, Raipur, in Civil Appeal No. 10 of 1922, dated on 22nd February 1923.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellant.
Dr. H S Gour and Mr M. R. Bobde, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Gend Prasad, who was adjudged insolvent as from the 22nd of February 1919, executed a sale-deed in favour of the appellant Ramprasad on the 10th of December 1918 for Rs. 5,000. The property which the sale-deed purported to transfer was subject to a mortgage in favour of one Gajadhar, and the amount payable on it on that date was Rs. 4,700. This sum was paid to him in redemption of the mortgage by Ramprasad. It may be mentioned that the sale did in fact also practically extinguish another mortgage for Rs. 3,105 of the same property held by Ramprasad himself, but this was not mentioned in the sale-deed.

In the proceedings in the Insolvency Court this sale-deed was eventually held to be fraudulent and void as against the Receiver and was annulled under section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920. Later the Court ordered that the mortgage property should be sold free of both mortgages, but that Ramprasad should be entered in the schedule of creditors for Rs. 4,700, the amount he had paid in redemption of Gajadhar's mortgage. In appeal the first part of this order was maintained and the latter part set aside, it being held that Ramprasad was not entitled to share in the assets even as an ordinary creditor.

The appeal to this Court is only in respect of Gajadhar's mortgage and we are no longer concerned with the other, for which it has been held that no consideration ever passed. It is contended that the property ought to be sold subject to Gajadhar's mortgage now in the hands of Ramprasad or at the least that Ramprasad ought to be made a scheduled creditor for Rs. 4,700. It has to be remembered that what has been found to be fraudulent and void is the transfer of the property to Ramprasad by sale, so as to make it not available for the satisfaction of the claims of his creditors. The payment of the Rs. 4,700 may have been and indeed was made in the prosecution of this object, but the object was wholly frustrated and was not attained even in part.

To such a case the principle that where both parties to a void agreement are equally to blame in the matter the law will restore to neither of them any advantage that he may have allowed the other to get from him has no application: Jadu Nath Poddar v. Rup Lal Poddar (1) and Munisami Mudaliar v. Subbarayar (2). Ramprasad could, therefore, still recover his Rs. 4,700 from Gend Prasad under section 64 of the Contract Act and is certainly entitled at least to rank as a scheduled creditor for Rs. 4,700.

Further there was nothing fraudulent in the payment of Gajadhar's mortgage. That certainly took none of the available assets of Gend Prasad out of the reach of his creditors, it merely transferred from Gajadhar to Ramprasad rights in the property which Gend Prasad had lost in 1915, and it is beyond all doubt that Ramprasad paid the Rs. 4,700 with the full intention of keeping the mortgage alive for his own benefit. Ramprasad is, therefore, entitled to stand in the shoes of Gajadhar in respect of the mortgage: Chama Swami v. Padala Anandu (3).

For all these reasons the order of the lower Appellate Court in respect of Gajadhar's mortgage is set aside and it is declared instead that Ramprasad is entitled to rank as a secured creditor on that mortgage which he now holds. All the costs of the proceedings in all three Courts will be paid by the respondents in this Court.

Construction of document—Will by Hindu in favour of son's daughter—Absolute or limited estate.

The words "You shall enjoy after my death all the properties moveable and immoveable you can enjoy all the said properties attending to my obsequies after my death and settling the matters of the debts, etc., incurred by me" in a Will by a Hindu testator in favour of his son's daughter are of sufficient amplitude to convey the fullest rights of ownership and an absolute estate passes to the legatee.

Appeal against the order of remand, dated the 30th March 1922, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kurnool, in A. S. No. 14 of 1922, (O. S. No. 626 of 1919, on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Kurnool.)

Mr. B. Sitaram Rao, for the Appellant.
Messrs. Krishna Aiyar and Veera Raghavulu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case I have to determine the quantum of interest taken by the son's daughter of the testator by his Will, Exhibit A. The operative words are "You shall enjoy after my death all the properties moveable and immoveable . . . You can enjoy all the said properties attending to my obsequies after my death and settling the matters of the debts, etc., incurred by me."

The testator further recites that the properties left by him are his divided properties. The District Munsif has held that the legatee took an absolute estate and the Subordinate Judge that only a life-estate was taken. The reasons for the latter decision are, first, that the word "enjoy" could not confer an absolute estate, and secondly that as the legatee is a female, there is no presumption that she takes an absolute estate. As to the word "enjoy," in the case in Guruswami Pillai v. Sivakami Ammal (1) the words were "shall enjoy for their lives"—as opposed to "shall enjoy the whole property." The expressions were applied to females and the Privy Council laid down that where the language of a Will is clear and consistent, it should receive its literal construction unless there is something in the Will itself to suggest departure from

(1) 18 M. 347, 22 I. A. 119; 5 M. L. J. 106, 6 Sar. P. C. J. 610, 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 591 (P. O.).

it. In Kamarazu v. Venkataratnam (2) the Will applied to daughters who were directed to take possession of certain immoveable properties and "enjoy the same happily as they please." It was held the daughters took an absolute estate, there being nothing in the instrument or surrounding circumstances to point to an intention to limit the gift to a life estate. The question is really whether the words used are in the language of the Privy Council, Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (3), explaining Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (4) "of sufficient amplitude to convey in the terms of the gift itself the fullest rights of ownership, etc."

In my opinion the words are not cut down in any way and there is no disposal of the residue as would be usual if only a life estate were intended. The testator says he has no male issue and apparently there was nobody at all nearly connected with him save the legatee. The surrounding circumstances do not, therefore, point to any such limitation or restriction. Further there is the direction to pay the debts, etc. These would probably have to be paid by selling the immoveable property or some portion of it which the holder of a mere life estate could not do. I think there is no doubt that the words used are capable of passing an absolute estate.

The question remains whether there is anything against such a construction of the words from the fact that the legatee is a woman. It is contended that it must be presumed that the testator intended to confer a life estate as that would be consonant with his notions as to the quantum of interest a woman would ordinarily take. In Ramachandra Rao v. Ramachandra Rao (5), which was on a different point reversed by the Privy Council, Wallis, C. J., stated that the trend of latter decisions here, i. e., since Sambasiva Aiyar v. Venkataswara Ayyar (6) is against making any assumption that only a widow's estate should pass in the absence of any indication to give a larger estate and that the rule in Moulvie Mohamed Shumsool Hooda v. Shewakram (7) which construed the intention of the testator to have been against the gift of an absolute estate is a rule of construction only to be applied where there is some uncertainty or ambiguity in the language of the instrument. As Seshagiri Aiyar, J., pointed out in the same case, the decision of the Privy Council in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (4) shows that their Lordships thought that no difference should be made between a male and female provided the words of gift are sufficiently clear to convey the property. The same learned Judge in Namaswamy Pillai v. Kuthalalingam Pillai (8) held that if apt words are used no matter who the transferee is, whether male or female, the estate conveyed would be an absolute one. Further it is to be noted that the legatee in this case is not an heir in the ordinary sense. In Ramaswami v. Papayya (9) the presumption relied on in argument that a gift to a female is only a life estate was rejected, it not being shown that the female legatee was a widow when her father gave his property to her. In Atul Krishna Sircar v. Sanyasi Churn Sircar (10) a single learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court held that such a presumption did not exist in the case of a mother, but only in the case of a widow. With this I am disposed to agree, subject, however, to this, the presumption may even in the case of widows be rebutted by the employment of words of "sufficient amplitude" to create an absolute estate. It is I think clear that no such pre-

Under O. I, r 8, Civil Procedure Code, it is not any person that may sue on behalf of a class, but it is that person who has an interest which is the same as that possessed by the whole body of persons. Given a common interest and a common grievance, a representative suit is in order, if the relief sought is in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposes to represent. If this condition is found wanting, and if the plaintiff turns out not to be a member of the class on whose behalf he professed to institute the suit, the suit is wrongly constituted, and is not a representative suit and no member of the class is constructively a party to it. Petitions, under section 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, dated the 25th January 1923 in I. A. Nos. 95, 93 and 94 of 1923 respectively in Original Suit No. 15 of 1920 now transferred to the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sivaganga, and numbered as Original Suit No. 12 of 1923 on his file.

Mr. G. Krishnaswami Iyar, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar, R. Swaminatha Iyar, and D. Ramasami Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff instituted the suit for a declaration that the sale-deed dated the 16th September 1919 executed by the Official Assignee of Rangoon in favour of the defendant is null and void. He described himself in the plaint as a creditor of T. A. R. A. R. M. Ramanathan Chetty who was adjudicated an insolvent and whose estate was represented by the Official Assignee above mentioned. This suit was filed on the 15th of January 1920. Among other pleas, the defendant stated that he did not admit that the plaintiff was a creditor of the insolvent firm. Issues were framed on the 30th of March 1920, and the third issue runs thus—

“Whether the plaintiff was one of the creditors of the insolvent Ramanathan Chetty, and if so, whether he has no cause of action to maintain this suit?”

The trial was about to commence in January 1923 and on the 24th of January one Krishnier made an application to the Court for the purpose of being added as a plaintiff to the action. I may state that the plaintiff is a Nattukottai Chetty and was represented throughout by this Krishnier. The reason why he desired to be added as a party is set forth in paragraph 4 of his affidavit dated the 24th of January 1923: “The defendant has taken the objection that the plaintiff is not a creditor of the insolvent firm and has no locus standi to maintain the suit. In order to obviate any technical objection on that ground it is necessary in the interests of justice that the Hon'ble Court should be pleased to join me as a plaintiff and I am willing to continue the suit from the stage which it has now reached.

Mr. G. Krishnaswami Iyer, the learned Vakil for the petitioner, has contended that the suit having been instituted under O. I. r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, was a representative suit filed in the interests of the creditors of the insolvent, that, therefore, Krishnier, was throughout constructively a party to the proceedings, that the application in effect was to place Krishnier on the record eo nomine as a party and that in making the application he was merely taking advantage of the provision contained in clause (2) of r. 8. If this argument is correct, in my opinion, there will be very little difficulty in acceding to the request. But the question is, is Krishnier a party to the proceeding at all; is he a party although on the record his name does not appear? The answer to the question will depend upon the construction of O. I. r. 8. The object of this provision is that in certain cases one person or a few persons should be allowed to represent all persons interested in a suit. The rule is in fact an exception to the general rule that all persons interested should be made parties to a suit. It pre-supposes the existence of a right in the plaintiff. It assumes that under the substantive law, the plaintiff has a right of suit and the rule enables him to represent the whole body of persons whom he seeks to represent. The rule says "Where there are numerous persons having the same interest in one suit, one person may sue on behalf of all persons so interested". The "one person" indicated in the rule is the person who has an interest common to himself and the body whom he professes to represent. The community of interests between him and the others of the class as the pre-requisite is necessary to the end proposed. It is not any person that may sue on behalf of a class, but it is that person who has an interest which is the same as that possessed by the whole body of persons. "Given a common interest and a common grievance, a representative suit is in order, if the relief sought is in its nature beneficial to all whom the plaintiff proposes to represent". (Judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Bedford Duke v. Ellist (1). If this condition is found wanting, if the plaintiff turns out not to be a member of the class on whose behalf he professed to institute the suit, I am of opinion that the suit is wrongly constituted. The permission to sue is given by the Court on the assumption that the plaintiff is a member of the class and if the assumption is shown to be wrong the suit is not a representative suit and no member of the class is constructively a party to it. On the assumption, therefore, that the plaintiff in the present suit is not a creditor of the insolvent, O. I. r. 8, has no application.

The following observations of Knight Bruce, L. J., in Bull v. British Nation Life Assurance Association (2) are very relevant in this connection: "He has sued on behalf of himself and others, and notwithstanding what has been contended on the part of the defendants, I assume that there still exist persons who have a right to complain of these transactions. But that will not give the plaintiff a title to sue for them. As on one hand a plaintiff, who has a right to complain of an act done to a numerous society of which he is a member, is entitled effectually to sue on behalf of himself and all others similarly interested, though no other may wish to sue, so, although there are a hundred who wish to institute a suit and are entitled to sue, still if they sue by a plaintiff only, who has personally precluded himself from suing, that suit cannot proceed. The present case, in my opinion, stands upon the same footing as if the dissatisfied shareholders (supposing them to be dissatisfied) had sued by a plaintiff who had released the defendants". Lord Justice Turner concurs and the law is

If the plaintiff is a creditor, the assumed necessity for this application does not exist and it equally fails.

It is next contended that Krishnier may be made a party under O I, r 10. I do not propose to discuss the applicability of this rule to cases falling within O I, r 8. It is sufficient to say that it must be alleged and proved, that the suit was instituted originally in the name of wrong person through a bona fide mistake and that element is utterly wanting in the present case. No allegation is made that the mistake was bona fide. As a matter of fact, no materials—absolutely none—are placed before the Court from which an inference can be drawn in favour of the plaintiff. This application cannot, therefore, be allowed under O I, r 10. I may in passing mention that in the lower Court only this provision was relied on and that reference to O I, r 8 was made only in the course of the arguments before me. Civil Revision Petition No. 253 of 1923, therefore, fails and is dismissed.

Another application was made on the same date, namely, 24th of January 1923 by the original plaintiff himself for permission to amend the plaint. Paragraph 5 of the plaint runs thus:—

"The plaintiff states that the Official Assignee of Rangoon has, through private negotiations conducted by the Official Receiver of Ramnad, conveyed the undermentioned properties for a grossly inadequate value of Rs. 12,000 and has executed a sale-deed in favour of the defendant though several creditors of the insolvent including the plaintiff, protested against such a sale and offered much higher price." He proposes to amend the plaint by saying that the defendant was a benamidar for the insolvent and that T. S. Ramasamy Iyengar who conducted the sale as agent of the Official Assignee of Rangoon made a pretence of selling the property by public auction but really sold the property by private contract to the insolvent, the defendant being merely a benamidar for him. Thus allegations of fraud are proposed to be added. The law is stated thus in Annual Practice, page 451. "Thus, if either party seeks to amend his pleading, by introducing for the first time allegations of fraud, etc., the Court will ask why this new case was not presented originally and may require to be satisfied as to the truth and substantiality of the proposed amendment." The materials, if any, which substantiate the allegations of fraud have not been referred to in the affidavits. In the circumstances and having regard to the great delay in making this application from which want of bona fide may be inferred I am not disposed to interfere with the order of the lower Court. O. R. P. No 580 of 1923 accordingly fails and is dismissed.

Then there is a third application made by the plaintiff on the same date for adding the Official Assignee of Rangoon as a party—defendant. The defendant contends that the plaintiff's object in making this application is to delay the trial. As a matter of fact the learned Vakil for the petitioner says that he wants no relief against the Official Assignee but that for enabling the Court to do complete justice between the parties his presence is necessary. He says, if the plaintiff obtains a decree setting aside the sale and if the Court directs the refund of the purchase-money to the defendant, it may then become necessary to have the Official Assignee on the record. The answer is that if the plaintiff obtains the decree, it will be open to him to move the Insolvency Court for directions to the Official Assignee to pay the money. I do not think at this late stage this application ought to be granted. O. R. P. No 579 of 1923, therefore, fails and is dismissed.

The petitioner will pay the defendant's costs in all the civil revision petitions. (Three set of costs.)

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 20th December 1922, in Civil Appeal No 109 of 1922.

Messrs. W. R. Purank and D. W. Kathaley, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. N. Khare, R. B., and Mr. G. N. Kawaley, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff is the lambardar of Mouza Mandoghar in Wardha Tahsil, and he sues for possession of fields Nos. 27 and 30 of that village under the following circumstances. One Gajanan Balkrishna was the absolute occupancy tenant of these fields and he sold them to the defendant by a sale-deed dated 21st January 1920. Plaintiff states that this sale-deed was invalid for want of his consent and asks that defendant be ordered to deliver possession to him.

The defence is that the sale-deed was consented to by several of the co-sharer malguzars of the village and also by the plaintiff's mother and natural guardian and that the plaintiff's agent had recognized the defendant as a tenant of the holding by taking from the latter rent for it on 15th July 1921. It was further contended that plaintiff being merely a fractional co-sharer could not sue on behalf of the whole proprietary body; and that his co-sharers have consented to the sale and also have shared in the consent money.

Plaintiff denied the alleged giving of consent by other co-sharers, and the case was tried on the following issues.—

“1 Have the other co-sharers given their consent for the transfer in defendant's favour? Have the four co-sharers named by the defendant passed receipts evidencing their consent as alleged? If so, how will this affect the plaintiff's claim?”

2 Did the plaintiff's mother give her consent to the sale and she agreed not to demand more than one year's rent as consent money as alleged by defendant?

3. Was the amount of Rs. 22 deposited with the co-sharer Sadasheo at the instance of the plaintiff's mother as alleged?

4. Can the plaintiff alone maintain this suit under the circumstances of this case?

5. In what right does the defendant hold the field?

6. Can plaintiff avoid the transfer in face of the ratification of the same by the other co-sharers? Can the plaintiff claim to eject the defendant?

7. (a) Has the plaintiff accepted rent for the field as alleged by defendant?

(b) Is he estopped from claiming possession as alleged?”

The Trial Court found that the four co-sharers, viz., Krishna, D. W. No. 1, Sadasheo, D. W. No. 3, Badri Prasad, D. W. No. 4, and Chintaman, D. W. No. 6 had consented to the transfer after it had been effected. The plaintiff is a minor and the Judge of the Trial Court finds that his guardian, his mother, had not consented to the transfer. Rupees 22 were found not to have been deposited with the co-sharers Sadasheo at the instance of plaintiff's mother, and plaintiff's agent was found to have been tricked into receiving the rent of this field, and the Judge finds that it has not been established that defendant is recognised as the tenant of the holding in suit. With regard to the question whether the minor lambardar's suit should fail because some of his co-sharers had, after the sale had taken place, consented to it, the Judge writes :—

“The lot of the lambardar is indeed miserable if the tricks such as have been played by the co-sharer malguzars and the patwaris in this case should succeed on technicalities of law leading to differences of opinion. Under the Land Revenue Act of 1917 the law laid down by section 188 (2) is that the lambardar shall be deemed to be the landlord within the meaning of the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1898. It is admitted before me the above two Acts govern this case. The decisions in Ramji Patel Kunbi v. Syed Nur (1) and in Murlidhar v. Jagannath (2) were given before the passing of the new Land Revenue Act. I think it is wrong to say that the section 188 simply affirms the old pronouncements. In paragraph 13 of the Preface to the Land Revenue Act it is stated: "Many important changes have been introduced into the law. Under section 188 sub-section 2 the lambardar will be the agent of all the co-sharers, and his actions in connection with the management of the village will be binding on them. If they are dissatisfied with him they may apply for his removal. Ordinarily the lambardars represent their co-sharers in the matter of avoiding unauthorised transfers of tenancy lands: this position is admitted before me. It is, however, contended that in this case the lambardar ceased to represent the proprietary body because some of the co-sharers consented to the transfer. I have only to see if the new Land Revenue Act has changed the law."

The Judge came to the conclusion that the lambardar under the section of the Land Revenue Act quoted represented in these matters the whole of the proprietary body. He further writes:—

"The matter should be dealt with in a very simple way. The section 41 (7) lays down that any transfer in contravention of this section shall be void at the instance of the landlord. Under section 188, sub-section 2 (a) the lambardar shall be deemed to be the landlord within the meaning of the Tenancy Act of 1898. Under the law laid down by these two sections the plaintiff lambardar in this case is the only landlord entitled to avoid the transfer in contravention of the section 41. His co-sharers have got no power to revoke or restrict the authority of the lambardar. It is, therefore, immaterial whether co-sharers do or do not consent to the transfer."

The Judge held that the plaintiff lambardar was entitled to maintain the suit as the landlord and decreed his claim for possession with costs.

On appeal the District Judge confirmed the findings of fact come to by the Trial Court, and dealing with the question of law involved, the learned Judge writes:—

"But since that date the statutory law had been altered by the Land Revenue Act of 1917. In section 188 it is provided that 'landlord' under section 41 of the Tenancy Act should be deemed to mean the lambardar of the mahal. Section 41, therefore, is not to be interpreted as meaning that a lambardar of a mahal can avoid a transfer. No other interpretation of the statutory law is possible and the decision of the lower Court is correct."

I am not prepared in second appeal to interfere with the findings of fact come to by the two lower Courts and they will stand. As regards the question of law as to whether plaintiff cannot maintain the suit because co-sharers holding 10-annas share in the village have agreed to the transfer, I am of opinion that the interpretation put by the lower Courts on the relevant sections of the Land Revenue Act is correct.

It is argued here that there has been a mis-apprehension as to the interpretation of section 188 (2) of the C. P. Land Revenue Act and Murlidhar v. Jagannath (2), Barzath v. Raghunath (3) and Ganpatrao v. Pandurang (4) are quoted in support of the argument. It is to be noted that these cases were decided prior to the introduction of the present C. P. Land Revenue Act. I am also referred to Nilmani Guntia v. Jogendra Guntia (5) a case from the Sambhalpur District, in which that Court decided that a lambardar is only a representative of the proprietary body of a mahal in its relations with Government and is not entitled alone to bring a suit for ejectment. This has never been the view prevailing in these Provinces.

It is further contended that it would be absurd to allow a lambardar who holds only a fractional share in that village to go against the express wishes of the majority of the co-sharers, for, if allowed to sue in these cases, the real result would be that as soon as he obtains his decree and under the decree possession of the land not validly transferred, the other co-sharers would return their shares to the person to whom the tenant had sold and to which sale the other co-sharers had consented. This may be so; but the fact that this is the possible result of allowing a lambardar to sue in these cases does not affect the interpretation to be placed on the Revenue Act. The decision in Ramji Patel Kunbi v. Syed Nur (1) was under the old Act. The language of the present Act is precise and unambiguous and capable of reasonable meaning. I agree with Hallifax, A. J. C., in Ramakrishna Puri v. Tamba (6) in which he holds that "section 188 (2) of the Land Revenue Act 1917, concentrates in the lambardar certain powers appertaining to the whole proprietary body, which before 1917 were in almost all cases given to him by that body, sometimes expressly but more often tacitly, but need not have been so given and could be withdrawn or modified at any time. Now the lambardar has those powers of law, and his co-proprietors can neither refuse or limit them at the beginning by law, and his co-proprietors can neither refuse or limit them at the beginning nor withdraw or modify them subsequently."

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Appellant will pay respondent's costs.

Mr. K. Balasubrahmanya Iyer, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The short question for decision in all but two (Civil Revision Petitions Nos 117 and 156 of 1921) of these Civil Revision Petitions is whether the payment of process fees for issue of a warrant of arrest in execution of a decree is a step-in-aid of execution so as to save limitation.

The execution petitions under consideration were presented on 12th February 1920 and the previous execution petitions were presented on 9th January 1917, more than three years before. In the course of the latter petitions, batta memos for warrant of arrest were put in on 21st February 1917 and 23rd March 1917. The question is whether the filing of these batta memos is a step-in-aid of execution. The District Munsif held that it was not. The decree-holders have put in these civil revision petitions. The respondents, the judgment-debtors, do not appear.

A step-in-aid of execution has been defined in Kuppuswami Chettiar v. Rajagopala Iyer (1) as an application which is not an initial application for execution, but an application to take some step to advance an execution petition already pending. Whether a formal application is in all cases necessary is a matter of some doubt. There is no direct authority whether a mere payment of process-fees for an arrest warrant without a formal application for the issue of warrant is a step-in-aid, but there are cases analogous to this, in which different High Courts take different views. This High Court in Vijayaraghavalu Naidu v. Srinivasulu Naidu (2) has held that a batta memo which applies for the issue of a sale proclamation and on which a sale proclamation is issued is a step-in-aid. From the report in that case it appears that the batta memo itself asked that process may issue and the learned Judges in that case in consequence distinguish it from the Full Bench case in Mulukchand Ratanchand v. Bechar Natha (3) in which there was nothing more than the payment of batta there being no application either written or oral. Vijayaraghavalu Naidu v. Srinivasulu Naidu (2) followed the case in Ambica Pershad Singh v. Surdhar Lal (4) in which also there was an application for the issue of a sale proclamation. The previous case in Madars, Vellaya v. Jaganatha (5) is inconclusive; but seems to have held that the payment of stamps for the transmission of records for the purposes of execution to another Court would not amount to a step-in-aid unless there was an application. Two Calcutta cases seem to adopt rather a different view. In Radha Prosad Singh v. Sundar Lall (6) it was held that the deposit of costs for bringing property to sale is a step-in-aid without a formal application, and in Norendra Nath Pahari v. Bhupendra Narain Roy (7) it was held that the deposit of process-fees for service of a sale proclamation is in itself a step-in-aid. Another Calcutta case reported in Bhupendra Narayan Dutt v. Rajindra Nath Dutt (8) follows these two rulings and holds that a payment of process-fees paid at the instance of the Court after notice had been served and a sale proclamation issued, imported a request to the Court to proceed with the execution and, therefore, was a step-in-aid. It is a little curious that the Radha Prosad Singh v. Sundar Lall (6) and Norendra Nath Pahari v. Bhupendra Narain Roy (7) cases were not cited before the Full Bench in Mulukchand Ratanchand v. Bechar Nath (3) when other cases from the same volumes were cited. In Sheo Prasad v. Indar Bahadur Singh (9) it was held that the payment of process-fees for attachment without an application is not a step-in-aid. I think the case in Vijayaraghavalu Naidu v. Srinivasulu Naidu (2) indicates the then view of this Court that a mere payment of batta for process, where the batta memo itself does not apply for the issue of process will not be a step-in-aid, and I think that it is more essential in such matters that there should be uniformity of practice in each Presidency than that there should be unanimity in the views of different High Courts.

In the present memo I find no prayer for the issue of process. I am asked to infer that there must have been one because the Court has under O. XXI, r. 37, Civil Procedure Code, discretion not to issue a warrant at once. But there is nothing to show that if it did after deliberation or on application order the issue of a warrant, that application was within three years of the Execution Petition of 1920. I am, therefore, not prepared to interfere in these cases and dismiss the petition.

In two cases which I excepted at the beginning—Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 117 and 156 of 1921—the case for the petitioner is much weaker. The process memos there were merely for the issue of a notice to the second plaintiff and not to the judgment-debtors at all. Clearly this was not a step-in-aid of execution and these petitions are also dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1, 2—Withdrawal of suit—Permission for fresh suit on payment of costs—Second suit without payment of costs, whether maintainable—Champerous agreements—Public policy in India

Order XXIII, r. 2 (b), Civil Procedure Code, must be read as referring not to permission to withdraw a suit as well as, permission to institute a fresh suit, but merely as allowing the Court to give permission to institute a fresh suit in place of the one which has been withdrawn. Inasmuch as the withdrawal of the suit does not require the permission of the Court, it must be taken that the first suit is withdrawn when the order is passed and is no longer pending and the permission granted refers only to the filing of the subsequent suit on certain conditions. Therefore, where an order has been made under O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, giving to a plaintiff, who withdraws a suit, permission to institute a fresh suit on condition of paying the costs, a subsequent suit instituted without paying such costs is barred [p. 501, col. 1].

In India champerty is not necessarily opposed to public policy, and in deciding whether a 'champertous agreement should be set aside, it has to be considered whether such an agreement is extortionate, unconscionable, or one made for the purpose of gambling in litigation or of injuring or oppressing others by encouraging unrighteous suits, in which case it would be contrary to public policy and unenforceable [p. 502, col. 1].

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. N. Rama Rao and K. Ramaswara Rao, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent in both these appeals is one Subbiah, the adopted son of Ramachandrudu. He was dissatisfied with his father's misconduct and spendthrift ways and consequently wanted to file a suit for partition of the family property. As he had not sufficient funds to finance this litigation, he entered into relations with the appellant Seshayya who is a private Vakil. On the 1st of November 1916, Subbiah executed a sale-deed in favour of Seshayya for Rs. 1,000 under which he sold one half of his share in the family properties. Admittedly the consideration was fixed at a low figure on the ground that Sub-

GOOLAPUDI SESHAYYA v. NADENDLA SUBBIAH.

Subbiah's father was wasting the family property and alienating the same and that consequently the properties that would be recovered for Subbiah's share might be considerably less than what he really ought to have. It is found that Seshayya paid a sum of Rs. 600 towards the consideration for the sale-deed, and a suit was filed by Subbiah and Seshayya jointly in 1918. A decree was obtained under which Subbiah was to get as his half share of the property all the properties which had not been alienated by his father, leaving the validity of the alienations undetermined. Before the decree was passed, Subbiah agreed to certain items being decreed in favour of Seshayya, and the remainder was to fall to his share. Subsequently Subbiah appears to have thought that he had been defrauded and he filed a suit, Original Suit No. 641 of 1919, to set aside the sale-deed in favour of Seshayya. The suit was withdrawn with leave to bring a fresh suit on condition of Subbiah paying the costs of the suit. Subbiah then filed his present suit, Original Suit No. 195 of 1921, in which he again seeks to set aside the sale-deed. Seshayya also filed a suit, Original Suit No. 505 of 1921, in which he seeks to recover the property decreed to him in the prior litigation alleging that he obtained delivery through Court of the property decreed to him but that subsequently the plaintiff has obstructed his enjoyment. Subbiah's suit has been decreed and at the same time Seshayya has been given a charge upon the properties for Rs. 600 with interest. Seshayya's suit for possession has been dismissed. Hence these two appeals.

The first point for consideration is whether Subbiah's suit is not barred by reason of O XXIII, Civil Procedure Code for, it is admitted, that he did not pay the costs of his first suit until after the close of the trial in the present suit; and it is contended that he is precluded from filing a fresh suit until he has complied with the condition imposed. In Robert Fischer v. Nagappa Mudaly (1) it was held that, when an order had been made giving permission to bring a fresh suit on condition of paying the costs before a specified date, a subsequent suit was barred if the costs had not been paid by that date. That case differs from the present in that the date was specified for payment of costs, whereas the order in the case under consideration does not specify any date. Without expressing any opinion as to the correctness of the decision in Abdul Aziz Molla v. Ebrahim Molla (2) that case was distinguished. In that case it was held that subsequent payment of costs was sufficient to warrant the reception and trial of a fresh suit which had been allowed to be brought on condition of those costs being paid. In that case the costs were paid before the suit was tried. This has been followed in a later case reported as Shital Prasad Mondal v. Gaya Prasad Dingal (3) where the question is discussed somewhat fully and the reasoning adopted for the conclusion is as follows.—It is said that inasmuch as permission to withdraw and bring a fresh suit is made conditional on a certain payment, the original suit cannot be deemed to be withdrawn until those costs have been paid and it must, therefore, be deemed to be a pending suit which becomes disposed of as soon as payment is made. This case was followed in Kuldip Singh v. Kuldip Chowdhury (4) and also in Deb Kumar Roy v. Deb Nath Barna (5) but I can find no authority in this Court for holding this view, which with all respect, appears to me to be incorrect. These cases all assume that the permission granted by the Court is not only permission to bring a fresh suit but also permission to withdraw the first suit and that consequently, until the condition is fulfilled, the first suit is pending. This seems to me to overlook the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1 (1) which gives a plaintiff power to withdraw his suit at any time without the permission of the Court. Consequently, I think that we must read the latter part of clause 2 (b) as referring not to permission to withdraw a suit as well as permission to institute a fresh suit, but merely as allowing the Court to give permission to institute a fresh suit in place of the one which has been withdrawn. Inasmuch as the withdrawal of the suit does not require the permission of the Court, it must be taken that the first suit is withdrawn when the order is passed and that the permission granted refers only to the filing of the subsequent suit on certain conditions. If the first suit is still pending as held in the above cases, it would be open to the plaintiff to obtain permission under O. XXIII, and instead of complying with the conditions of that permission, to go to the Court and demand that the trial on his first suit should be proceeded with and this could be done, however long the interval might be. For these reasons, I am unable to accept the view that the first suit is still pending, for it has been withdrawn, and that withdrawal, in my opinion, takes effect from the date of the Court's order. If the Calcutta view were to be applied in the present case, it would appear, as observed in those judgments, that the trial of a second suit is barred under section 10, Civil Procedure Code, until the first suit is disposed of by performance of the conditions imposed by the order granting leave. In the present case, therefore, the whole of the trial of the suit which took place before the costs were paid would be bad under section 10, Civil Procedure Code for want of jurisdiction and the whole suit would have to be tried again. There is another case of the Calcutta High Court reported as Sajjad Hossain v. Ram Lal Saha (6) where it was held that payment might be made after the institution of the suit but that the suit would not be deemed to be validly instituted until the date of such payment. In the view that I take, I would follow Robert Fischer v. Nagappa Muddaly (1) and hold that it extends, as was held in Hare Nath Das v. Syed Hossain Ali (7) and Subal Chandra v.

Mosaraf Ali (8) to cases where no time is fixed for fulfilling the condition.

In support of the view held by the Calcutta High Court, reference has been made to other cases in which similar conditions were held not to be mandatory, Ramayyanagar v. Krishnayyanger (9) with reference to the provisions of section 539, Civil Procedure Code, Karsooth Parakote Ammu Kutty v. Manavikraman (10) with reference to the permission necessary to bring a suit against a receiver, and Mahammad Azmat Ali Khan v. Lalli Begam (11) with reference to the certificate requisite for bringing a suit under the Pensions Act. I do not attach much importance to these cases, for in all of them the Court prima facie has jurisdiction to try such suits; and, beyond imposing a condition precedent, none of the provisions referred to take away the jurisdiction of the Courts, whereas under O. XXIII, r. 2 (3) a Court is definitely precluded from entertaining a second suit when no permission has been granted. Unless, therefore, permission has been given, a Court is specifically forbidden to entertain a second suit.

In this view, Subiah's suit is barred under O. XXIII and must be dismissed. Second Appeal No. 203 must, therefore, be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout to be paid by the first respondent.

As regards Second Appeal No. 204 the Subordinate Judge has found that the sale-deed in favour of Seshayya is "vitiated by undue influence and fraud and cannot be enforced" and, consequently, has dismissed the suit which is based upon it. I may observe here that the suit is not based upon the sale-deed but upon the decree obtained in pursuance of that sale-deed, namely, the decree in Original Suit No. 12 of 1918. In giving his findings the Subordinate Judge does not definitely specify the facts which he finds to be sufficient to prove undue influence and fraud. In the plaint, the plaintiff stated that the sale-deed was brought about owing to several misrepresentations specified in paragraph 4, but there is no finding by the Subordinate Judge that these misrepresentations were made, and apparently the statements set out in the plaint are substantially correct. The cases relied upon by the Subordinate Judge for holding that the sale-deed is invalid are merely cases in which the transactions were set aside as being hard, unconscionable and opposed to public policy: Chunni Kuar v. Rup Singh (12), Loke Indar Singh v. Rup Singh (13) and Husain Bakhsh v. Rahmat Husain (14). It has been held that in this country champerty is not necessarily opposed to public policy, and, in considering whether champertous agreements should be set aside, it has to be considered whether such an agreement is extortionate and unconscionable, or one made for the purpose of gambling in litigation or of injurious or oppressing others by encouraging unrighteous suits in which case it would be contrary to public policy and unenforceable. These facts do not seem to have been considered by the Subordinate Judge. He has not found what the facts were which made the bargain unconscionable or otherwise opposed to public policy. He finds that property worth Rs. 2,000 was sold for Rs. 1,000 and that Rs. 600 cash was actually paid as consideration. The properties which have passed under the sale-deed are no doubt worth Rs. 2,000 but it was by no means certain that the plaintiff's suit would be successful, or, at any rate, successful to a large extent. Half of the family property had been alienated and, if those alienations had been found to be valid, Subbiah's share would have come to Rs. 1,000 or less, the consideration agreed to be paid, to which must be added additional compensation for Seshayya's trouble and knowledge of litigation. Here again I must note that the Subordinate Judge has not discussed the question whether the decree in pursuance of the sale-deed was obtained by fraud. There is no such allegation in the plaint, but the Subordinate Judge seems to hold in paragraph 7 of his judgment that the undue influence exercised in the suit was that of the plaintiffs' Vakil, who is not a party to this litigation, and not the influence of Seshayya; and he has also omitted to notice that Subbiah did not pray to have the decree set aside although the amendment was asked for but refused by the District Munsif. There are other points to be considered also in this appeal which have not been dealt with by the Subordinate Judge, one of these being whether Seshayya's remedy was by suit or by execution proceedings. It was on the latter ground that the District Munsif dismissed his suit without giving him an opportunity of treating the suit as an exception petition. It would also be necessary to consider what effect the dismissal of Subbiah's suit will have upon Seshayya's suit, for in execution proceedings a claim by Seshayya to these properties was allowed, vide Exhibit VI, and it has to be considered whether that was not a final adjudication of the right of the parties. Appeal No. 99 of 1922 will accordingly be remanded for disposal in the light of the above remarks. Costs in this Court will abide the result.

Court fee in Second Appeal No. 204 of 1923 will be refunded.

BAGHU SINGH v. KRISHNA DEYAL.

r. 1—Review, grounds for—"Other sufficient reason," meaning of.—Failure to refer to particular piece of evidence

The only ground upon which a review can be obtained according to O XLVII, of the Civil Procedure Code is the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, was not within the applicant's knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or the order made, or some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record or for any other sufficient reason [p. 503 col. 2]

The words "any other sufficient reason" in r. 1 of O XLVII of the Civil Procedure Code mean a reason sufficient on grounds analogous to those specified immediately previously. [Ibid]

The mere fact that a Judge has not in terms referred to certain of the evidence in favour of one party or the other is not a sufficient reason entitling that party to come before the Court subsequently and seek to have a review of that judgment [p. 503, col. 2, p. 504, col. 1]

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya dated the 20th May 1922 granting a review of a judgment of his predecessor. It appears that one of the important points to be determined in the first judgment was the date upon which the plaintiff separated from the rest of his family. The Trial Court found in favour of the defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal decided that question in favour of the plaintiff and allowed the appeal. Subsequently one of the defendants applied to the successor of the learned Subordinate Judge to grant a review of judgment on the ground that the learned Subordinate Judge had not mentioned in his judgment two documents one of which was a plaint in a suit which the plaintiff and his brothers had brought on a mortgage and in which there was apparently an admission that the family had separated at a later date than the plaintiff alleged in the present case, and the other document was a document connected therewith, it was the decree passed in that case. It is quite true that the learned Subordinate Judge who gave the decision complained of did not in terms refer to those two documents in his judgment; but he did, as far as can be gathered from reading the judgment, give what appear to have been convincing reasons for arriving at his conclusions of fact. The learned Subordinate Judge whose order is now under appeal considered that the mere fact that no mention is made in the previous judgment of these two documents was in itself a sufficient ground for granting the review and he made the order accordingly. From that decision the present appeal is brought.

It seems to me that the ground alleged is not one which comes within the purview of O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code. The only ground upon which a review can be obtained according to O. XLVII is the discovery of new and important matter or evidence which, after the exercise of due diligence, is not within the applicant's knowledge or could not be produced by him at the time when the decree was passed or the order made, or some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record or for any other sufficient reason. It has been decided by the Judicial Committee in the case of Chhajju Ram v. Neki (1) that the words "any other sufficient reason" in that Order mean a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified immediately previously. It follows from that that these words "any other sufficient reason" are not of a wide and general application so as to give the Court a discretion in such cases whether to allow a review or not. The reason there indicated must be some reason analogous to the two grounds of review mentioned immediately before. It seems to me that the mere fact that a Judge has not in terms referred to certain of the evidence in favour of one party or the other is not a sufficient reason entitling that party to come before the Court subsequently and seeks to have a review of that judgment. It is undoubtedly a matter which might be urged in appeal, if any appeal were permissible on questions of fact; but I think it would be stretching the language of the order too far to say that the mere fact that certain evidence has not been specifically mentioned in the judgment is a good reason within O. XLVII, r. 1, for granting a review.

In my opinion this appeal must succeed, the order of the learned Subordinate Judge of the 20th of May 1922 will be set aside and the decree which it reversed will be restored.

The appellant is entitled to his costs from the respondent Mahant Krishna Deyal Gir, who has appeared.

The fact that the judgment-debtor submitted to execution proceedings prior to the order for sale does not estop him from raising the plea at the time of sale [p. 505, col. 1].

JUDGMENT.—Appeal from the Appellate Order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Palghat in E. P. No. 1742 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Chowghat.

There was a mortgage with possession and lease back on the same day. The appellant sued on the lease and obtained a decree, and is attempting to bring the property to sale. The respondent resists, contending that such a sale is contrary to the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code. The lower Courts have upheld this contention, hence the appeal.

I agree that the two documents in question Exhibits A and B must be treated as one. In Exhibit B it is agreed that arrears shall be paid by the sale of the equity of redemption which appellant points to as marking a difference between the two transactions, but I do not consider that this is sufficient to justify their being treated as separate documents. Once the two documents are treated as one it must, I think, be taken as settled law (as observed below the Calcutta rulings seem to be contradictory) that although the mortgagee may obtain a decree for rent on the lease document alone, nevertheless his claim is one arising under the mortgage and within the mischief of O. XXXIV, r. 14. This has been ruled in terms in Ibrahim Goolam Husenbux v. Nihal Chand Waghmal (1) which is followed in Bhaichand Kirparam v. Ranchhoddas Maneccharam (2), Govindachandra Pal v. Konlas Chandra Pal (3) to the same effect as also the case cited by the lower Appellate Court, Kadma Pasin v. Muhammad Ali (4). Appellant would distinguish this latter case on the ground that the mortgagor had merely contracted to collect the usufruct for the mortgagee but I doubt if this affects the question which turns on the actual contract effected between the parties and on the motive which induced them to make such a contract.

The appellant relies strongly upon the ruling Uttam Chandra Daw v. Raj Krishna Dalal (5) the language of which on page 405* undoubtedly helps him. But Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal (6) it is found that a sale in contravention of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act is irregular and voidable, and the mortgagee is prevented from bringing the mortgaged property to sale in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim, related or extraneous to the mortgage page 67.

It is next urged that the above plea is not open to the respondents, because without raising this plea they submitted to prior execution proceedings which terminated in attachment and permission to the decree-holder to proclaim and sell by fresh petition.

No doubt the parties to execution proceedings are governed by the general law of estoppel, else there would be no end to the matter. They cannot continue to raise the same plea over and over again. But if the plea has never been raised before I should hesitate to apply to execution proceedings the principle of constructive estoppel.

Careful consideration would have to be given to the circumstances of each particular case. However, there is no need to consider this aspect of the matter in the present case, because the decree-holder cannot demand that the Court shall infringe a statutory provision merely because the judgment-debtor has omitted to demand that it shall not. Cf. Govinda Chandra Pal v. Konlas Chandra Pal (3). "I do not think the decree-holder can raise a plea of estoppel when he must have known that he had himself induced the Court ex parte to pass an order to which he was not entitled." As soon as a Court is aware of an irregularity, it must avoid such irregularity suo moto irrespective of the intervention of the parties or their right to intervene.

The appeal fails on all grounds and is dismissed with costs.

Where the Court decides that time is not of the essence of the contract in any particular case and extends the time for payment, the High Court will not interfere with the decision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Revision from an order of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Patna, dated the 4th June 1923.

Mr. Banwari Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Kailaspati, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—A compromise decree was passed against the opposite party ordering that upon payment of a sum of Rs. 1,000 in cash to the plaintiff immediately and the sum of Rs. 12,600 on or before the 31st March 1923 the claim of the plaintiff would be discharged in full, but that on failure to pay the above instalments the plaintiff would be entitled to realize her full claim for Rs. 20,989-9-0 with costs and future interest. Accordingly the sum of Rs. 1,000 was duly paid on the date of the compromise. But on the 31st May 1923 the defendants brought into Court a sum of Rs. 6,000 only which the plaintiff received under protest, and as regards the balance of Rs. 6,600 the defendants asked for an extension of time for one month, on the 4th June 1923 time was allowed by the Subordinate Judge and it was ordered that payment would be accepted on or before the 30th June 1923 on condition that the defendants paid a sum of Rs. 164 on account of intermediate interest to the plaintiff.

Against this order the plaintiff moved this Court on the 13th June 1923 for the exercise of the Court's revisional powers under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

Now the only question is whether the Court had power to extend the time allowed by an agreement which has resulted in a decree of Court.

It is contended by the petitioner that no extension of time can be given without the consent of the parties and reliance is placed upon Australasian Automatic Weighing Machine Company v. Walter.

(1); but the matter has been exhaustively considered in Kandarpa Nag v. Banwari Lal Nag (2) and it seems now settled that no general rule can be laid down and that although a contract may have ripened into a decree the Court will not be precluded from giving relief which it would have been competent to give if it had been called upon to adjudicate upon the contract in the first instance and without its having been embodied in a decree. There are cases which have held that when a compromise takes place between an auction-purchaser, a judgment-debtor and a decree-holder stipulating that the sale would be set aside on the payment of the judgment-debt on a certain date time was of the essence of the contract. On the other hand it seems to be now settled that where the agreement is for the payment of money on a prescribed date and that upon default of payment on that date money or land is to be forfeited, time is not of the essence of the contract. Indeed the rule is clear that in every case the Court must determine upon the facts of that case whether relief against forfeiture is to be given or not. I have no doubt that, in the present case the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to determine whether time was of the essence of the contract. He has decided that it was not and, therefore, it does not seem to me that section 115, Civil Procedure Code, can be invoked for the purpose of setting aside the learned Subordinate Judge's order. The learned Subordinate Judge in one part of his judgment expresses the view that section 148, Civil Procedure Code, is applicable to the case, but I would prefer to base his jurisdiction on the general rules of equity.

The only question that remains is whether we should further extend the time. Having regard to the fact that the application to this Court was made without much delay and that the defendants were uncertain whether the learned Judge's order would be affirmed by the High Court I think this is a fit case for granting further extension; and we give seven days, further time from this date for complying with the order of the Subordinate Judge.

We direct that if the defendants deposit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge the sum of Rs. 6,600 on account of the decretal sum together with the sum of Rs. 200 on account of intermediate interest, that is to say, a total sum of Rs. 6,800 on or before the 10th July, full satisfaction will be entered in respect of the claim as provided by the compromise decree and that on default the terms of the said decree will be duly enforced according to law.

There will be no order as to costs.

The object of section 158B sub-section (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to protect the co-sharer landlord. [p 510, col 1].

It is open, however, to the co-sharer landlord to waive the benefit of sub-section (2) of section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act [ibid].

The omission to serve upon the co-sharer landlord the notice contemplated by sub-section 2 of section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not nullify the sale or alter its character to that of a sale held in execution of a money decree where the co-sharer concerned consents to the sale [p 510, cols 1 & 2].

It cannot be maintained on principle that because a sale has been held in contravention of a statutory provision, it must, irrespective of the nature and purposes of the provisions, be deemed to be null and void [p 509, col 1].

When the provisions of a Statute have been contravened, if a question arises as to how far the proceedings are affected by such contravention the matter must be determined with regard to the nature, scope and object of the particular provision which has been violated, [p 509, col 2].

An irregularity is a deviation from a rule of law which does not take away the foundation or authority for the proceeding or apply to its whole operation, whereas a nullity is a proceeding that is taken without any foundation for it or is so essentially defective as to be of no avail or effect, whatever, or is void and incapable of being validated [p 509, col 2, p 510, col 1].

The safest rule to determine what is an irregularity and what is a nullity is to see whether the party can waive the objection, if he can waive it, it amounts to an irregularity, if he cannot, it is a nullity [p 510, col 1].

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The defendants denied the relationship of landlord and tenant during the years in claim. They urged in substance that the title of the plaintiffs had been extinguished as the result of a sale held in execution of a decree passed in a suit instituted under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The Court of first instance gave effect to this contention and dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the decree of the primary Court has been affirmed by the District Judge. On second appeal it has been argued that the question of title of the plaintiffs in res-judicata in view of a decree made on the 29th April 1915 in a previous suit between the parties. This view has been rejected by both the Courts below. It is not necessary to examine in detail the scope of the earlier suit because we have arrived at the conclusion that the question now in controversy was not directly and substantially in issue in the previous litigation and was not finally decided therein. Consequently we have to consider the effect of the sale held on the 11th September 1913 in execution of a decree for arrears of rent in a suit instituted under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It is not disputed that the interest claimed by the plaintiffs was originally held under two landlords, Dighapatia and Tagore. On the 13th July 1897 one Amarendra Nath Ghose purchased the tenancy at a sale held in execution of a decree obtained by Dighapatia against Panch Couri Ghose who was the recorded tenant. The right, title and interest of Panch Couri Ghose was subsequently purchased by Asutosh Ghose, the pro forma defendant in the present suit, and Arunadoy Ghose, the pre-decessor in interest of the plaintiffs at a sale held in execution of a money decree. The names of Asutosh Ghose and Arunadoy Ghose do not appear, however, to have been recorded in the office of the landlord. The consequence was that Dighapatia brought a suit against one Behary Lal Roy who had purchased the tenancy at a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of rent on the 9th September 1902. This suit was instituted under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A decree was obtained in due course in the presence of Tagore who was made a party defendant. No notice, however, was served upon Tagore under section 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act and yet the decree was executed. At the sale which followed Kishori Mohan Srimany under whom the contesting defendants claim, became the purchaser on the 11th September 1913. We are invited to hold that the effect of this purchase by Kishori Mohan Srimany was to extinguish the interest acquired by Asutosh Ghose and Arunadoy Ghose on the 10th March 1902. The plaintiffs contended in the Courts below that the decree obtained by Dighapatia in the suit instituted under section 148A could not operate as a decree for the entire rent according to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, inasmuch as the notice contemplated by section 158B was not served on Tagore. This contention has been negatived by the Courts below. The point consequently reduces to this what is the effect of the omission of the co-sharer landlord who has instituted a suit under section 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act to serve the notice contemplated by sub-section 2 of section 158B. The appellants contend that the result is to destroy the character of the decree as a decree for arrears of rent and to make it operative only as a decree for money so that at the sale which follows the right, title and interest of the person named as the judgment-debtor alone passes. In support of this view reliance has been placed upon the cases of Nunda Lal Choudhury v. Kala Chand Chowdhury (1), Sarip Hochan v. Tilattama Debi (2) and Ahamad Biswas v. Benoy Bhushan Gupta (3).

To determine the question raised before us it is necessary to investigate the scope and object of sub-section 2 of section 158B. That sub-section is in these terms: "When one or more co-sharer landlords having obtained a decree in a suit framed under sub-section (1) or under section 148A applies or apply for the execution of the decree by the sale of the tenure or holding, the Court shall, before proceeding to sell the tenure or holding, give notice of the application for execution to the other co-sharers. It will be observed that the section does not in express terms state the result of the failure to comply with this direction. The cases of Sarip Hochan v. Tilattama Debi (2) and Ahamad Biswas v. Benoy Bhushan Gupta (3) laid down that the provisions contained in sub-section 2 of section 158B is mandatory and not directory and the failure of the Court to serve the notice rendered the sale invalid. In support of this view, reliance was placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Raghu Nath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (4) which turned on the true construction of section 248, Civil Procedure Code of 1882, now replaced by O. XXI, r. 22 of the Code of 1908. It must be remembered in this connection that the validity of the sale in the two cases mentioned was challenged by the co-sharer concerned and it may be conceded that the co-sharer who has not received the notice required to be served under sub-section 2 of section 158B is entitled to contest the legality of the sale on that ground. In the case before us the legality of the sale has not been questioned by the co-sharer. On the other hand, as pointed out by the District Judge, that co-sharer has adopted the sale, withdrawn his share of the purchase-money and granted mutation of name to the purchaser. It may consequently be inferred that he knew of the sale and acquiesced therein. Can it be maintained, then, in such circumstances, that the sale was either a nullity or a sale inoperative as a sale under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The answer depends upon the scope and purpose of section 158B.

It was pointed out in the case of Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtania (5) that a sale held contrary to legislative enactment is not necessarily a sale absolutely without jurisdiction. It cannot be maintained on principle that because a sale has been held in contravention of a statutory provision, it must, irrespective of the nature and purposes of the provisions, be deemed to be null and void. Reference may be made to five decisions of the Judicial Committee in illustration of this principle. The cases of Tasadduk Rasul Khan

v. Ahmad Husain (6) (where a sale was held in violation of the provisions of section 290, Civil Procedure Code), Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (7) (where a sale for arrears of revenue was held in contravention of the provisions of sections 5 and 17 of Act XI of 1859) and Malkarjun v. Narhari (8), (where a sale was held contrary to the provisions of section 248 of the Code) amply show that there may be cases where the violation of an express provision of a Statute may not nullify the proceedings. On the other hand, the cases of Nusserwanjee Pestonjee v. Meer Mynodeen Khan (9), (where an arbitration proceeding was carried on contrary to the provisions of the Bombay Regulation VII of 1827) and Subrahmanya Ayyar v. Emperor (10) (where a trial was held in contravention of the rule of joinder of charges embodied in section 234 of the Criminal Procedure Code) are instances where failure to comply with the provisions of a Statute completely vitiated the proceedings. The only rule that may be adopted is that when the provisions of a Statute have been contravened, if a question arises as to how far the proceedings are affected by such contravention the matter must be determined with regard to the nature, scope and object of the particular provision which has been violated. No hard and fast line can be drawn between a nullity and an irregularity. But this much is clear that an irregularity is a deviation from a rule of law which does not take away the foundation or authority for the proceeding or apply to its whole operation, whereas a nullity is a proceeding that is taken without any foundation for it or is so essentially defective as to be of no avail or effect.

whatever, or is void and incapable of being validated. One test is well-established and is often useful, as was observed by Coleridge, J. in Holmes v. Russell (11) "it is difficult sometimes to distinguish between an irregularity and a nullity, but the safest rule to determine what is an irregularity and what is a nullity is to see whether the party can waive the objection; if he can waive it, it amounts to an irregularity; if he cannot, it is a nullity."

Now if the provision has been enacted on grounds of public policy, an individual cannot be permitted to waive it. On the other hand if the provision has been enacted for the benefit of an individual he is entitled to waive it. Tested from this point of view, what is the obvious purpose of section 158 B, sub-section 2. The object which the Legislature had in view was to protect the co-sharer landlord. The sale in execution of the decree made in the suit framed under sub-section (1) of section 158 B or under section 148 A, has the effect of a sale under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act; in other words, the tenure or holding in the hands of the purchaser can no longer be pursued by the co-sharer landlord for the realization of his dues, if any. The co-sharer landlord who has been made a party to the suit is restricted to the sale proceeds for the satisfaction of his dues. It is consequently necessary for his protection that he should have notice of the execution proceedings in time to ensure their legality or regularity. From this point of view, it is open to the co-sharer landlord to waive the benefit of sub-section 2 of section 158 B. This is precisely what has happened in this case. Here the co-sharer landlord was satisfied with the regularity of the execution proceedings. He withdrew the money which was in Court in satisfaction of his dues. In such circumstances, it is impossible for us to hold that the omission to serve upon the co-sharer landlord the notice contemplated by sub-section 2 of section 158 B either nullified the sale or altered its character to that of a sale held in execution of a money decree. The conclusion follows that the Courts below have correctly held that the purchase by Kishori Mohan Srimany on the 11th September 1913 at the sale held in execution of the decree obtained by Deghapatia was to extinguish the interest of the plaintiffs, and the relationship of landlord and tenant was not in existence between the parties to this suit during the years in claim.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed. Nos. 2249, 2252 and 2280 of 1920.

In the view we take it is not necessary to consider whether these appeals are or are not competent. They are all dismissed.

Costs will be allowed in each of the appeals where the respondent has entered appearance.

The reversioners of a deceased Hindu claimed certain kaski land belonging to the latter on the allegation that his daughter, who was immediately entitled to the property and was a defendant in the suit, had relinquished the property in their favour. The contest was between the plaintiffs and the landlord. The daughter of the deceased did not enter appearance or contest the suit. There was no evidence of a relinquishment by her before the suit, but during the appellate stage she filed a petition expressing her willingness to relinquish her rights in favour of the plaintiffs.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted on the 12th March 1919 by the plaintiffs as the sons of Dukhi Singh claiming a declaration that certain land measuring 3·87 acres and which previously belonged to their father's brother, Sheo Sahai Singh, was their kasht land and that they were entitled to retain possession of the same. As a matter of fact they were not in possession at the date when the suit was instituted because the land owing to disputes between the plaintiffs and the superior landlord, the defendant No. 1, had been attached by the Magistrate in proceedings under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The case made by the plaintiffs in their pleading was that their father, Dukhi Singh, and their uncle, Sheo Sahai Singh, had separated many years ago and that the land in suit after separation belonged to their uncle, Sheo Sahai, but that recently, when Sheo Sahai and his wife grew old and the plaintiffs' father was dead, the plaintiffs and their uncle had re-united and on the death of their uncle the latter's interest devolved on them by survivorship, and they entered into possession. In the alternative they pleaded that even if the plaintiffs and Sheo Sahai were not joint when the latter died in 1917 he left no male issue, and after his wife died (also in 1917) his next heir was his daughter, Musammatt Marachi Kuer, the defendant No. 2, and that the plaintiffs were the next reversionary heirs entitled to succeed on the death of Marachi Kuer, but that she did not want to have the estate left by her father, Sheo Sahai Singh, but stood aside and gave up her claim and that consequently all the property left by him came into their possession.

Some time shortly before this suit was instituted the landlord, who is the first defendant in the suit, had instituted proceedings under section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act claiming possession of the land on the ground that it had been abandoned by the tenant, Musammatt Marachi Kuer. What exactly was the result of those proceedings does not appear from the record before us but at the same time criminal proceedings were taken under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code with the result that the Magistrate, presumably being uncertain as to who was in possession of the property, attached the property under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code with the result that the plaintiffs have instituted the present suit claiming the declaration which I have stated.

The second defendant, Musammatt Marachi Kuer, entered no appearance and filed no written statement. The landlord, however, the defendant No. 1, did appear and filed a written statement in which the allegations set out in the plaint are traversed and he further set up a case that Sheo Sahai Singh and Dukhi Singh were separate, that no daughter was ever born to Sheo Sahai Singh and that he never had any heir at all and that the landlord had after Sheo Sahai Singh's death entered into possession of the disputed land. He denied that Sheo Sahai Singh and Dukhi Singh were brothers or any relation or that the plaintiffs had any locus standi to institute the suit.

The learned Munsif before whom the case came for trial found in favour of the plaintiffs. He held that the brothers, Sheo Sahai Singh and Dukhi Singh, were not joint, that when Sheo Sahai Singh died his daughter, the defendant No. 2, was the next heir but that she had disclaimed, to use the learned Munsif's own word, her rights in favour of the plaintiffs. He found that she never succeeded to the property of her deceased father and that, therefore, it was not a relinquishment but as she did not succeed at all it must be taken that what she did was a disclaimer on her part of her rights to the estate of her deceased father and that in these circumstances the plaintiffs were entitled as the next heirs to the estate. I may point out that there was no evidence at all apparently before the Court to the effect that Musammât Marachai Kuer had relinquished her rights or disclaimed her rights in favour of the plaintiffs except that she did not defend the suit. Indeed the attitude, as appeared from a subsequent petition, taken up by that lady was that she had no rights at all, that her father's family and that of her uncle were joint and that her only right was that of maintenance.

The case went on appeal to the Subordinate Judge who reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the plaintiff's suit, because, although he considered that a Hindu widow or daughter could, by relinquishment of her limited right in her husband's or father's estate, accelerate the reversion, he found as a fact that such a case had not been made out in the plaint or made out in the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs. There was no documentary or oral evidence to prove that before the institution of the suit the defendant No. 2 had relinquished her right in the land in favour of the plaintiffs. That was a distinct finding of fact in favour of the defendants' case and against that of the plaintiffs and by that finding of fact this Court in second appeal is bound. It appeared, however, that during the progress of the appeal before the Subordinate Judge a petition, a copy of which had been placed before us to-day, was filed purporting to be on behalf of the defendant No. 2, who up to that moment had taken no part in the case, alleging in the first instance that she had no right or title to the property left by her father, Sheo Sahai Singh, and that in any event she gave up and disclaimed any right she might have in favour of the plaintiffs, her cousins. The learned Subordinate Judge considered that the plaintiffs were not entitled at that stage to rely upon this petition or to use it in any way when they had not in their pleadings set up such a case. He pointed out that all that had been mentioned in the pleadings was that Sheo Sahai

Singh's daughter, the defendant No. 2, had stood by and had not claimed the estate. He considered that such an allegation in the plaint could not be regarded as being consistent with, far less amounting to, a plea of relinquishment by the defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiffs which was the course then taken by her in the petition.

When the case came before the learned Judge of this Court in second appeal he considered that there had been raised by the plaint an alternative case of a relinquishment by the defendant No. 2 in favour of the plaintiffs and as the defendant No. 2 had not appeared and contested this allegation it must be taken as proved. He, therefore, overruled the decision of the Subordinate Judge and granted the declaration asked for in favour of the plaintiffs.

In my opinion the learned Judge's decision on this point cannot be sustained. The mere fact that the defendant No. 2 did not enter appearance or contest the suit is not, in my opinion, sufficient to bind the defendant No. 1, the landlord, so as to preclude him from either giving evidence or from contesting the allegation of the plaintiffs, even if such an allegation had been made that there was a relinquishment in favour of the plaintiffs by the defendant No. 2. When the case came for trial there was absolutely no evidence at all of any such case. The most that could be said or the most that could be inferred from the evidence was that the defendant No. 2 did not actively assert any claim to the property in suit. Indeed the attitude taken up by her was that the parties were all joint and, therefore, that her only right was that of maintenance. Anything in the nature of an actual relinquishment of the right in favour of the plaintiffs could never in the circumstances have taken place. Whether or not the learned Subordinate Judge was right in saying that no notice could be taken of the petition filed on behalf of the defendant No. 2 in the appellate stage of the case, is not a matter which it is necessary for us definitely to determine because looking at that petition the most that could be said in favour of the plaintiffs is that although at the date when the suit was instituted there had been no relinquishment in their favour the defendant No. 2 was during the appellate stage of the case apparently willing to relinquish in their favour, but as the judgment of the Court must depend upon the rights of the parties at the date when the suit was instituted it seems to me that the finding of fact of the learned Subordinate Judge in first appeal was amply justified by the evidence before him and it is not open to this Court in second appeal to disturb that finding of fact. The result is that the decision of the learned Judge of this Court will be set aside and the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge will be restored. In the circumstances I think that the appellant is entitled to his costs of this appeal and of the appeal before Mr. Justice Ross. The order of the Subordinate Judge as to the costs before the Munsif and on first appeal will stand.

I ought to mention that this decision does not determine one way or the other anything as to the right of the landlord to enter into possession of this property. All that is necessary and all that is determined by this decision is that at the date when this suit was instituted the plaintiffs had not made out that they had any right or title to the property. I understand that the property is still under attachment by the Magistrate and the question of who is entitled to possession has yet to be determined. If the plaintiffs in this suit can satisfy the Magistrate when the question of possession again arises that Musammât Marachi Kuer, who is undoubtedly the person entitled to succeed on the death of her father and mother to this property, has relinquished her rights in favour of the plaintiffs by way of accelerating the succession then the Magistrate will be perfectly justified in handing over possession of the property to the plaintiffs because the result of the judgment in the present case is that Musammât Marachi Kuer is the person really entitled to the property on the death of her father and mother and the only reason why the plaintiffs fail is because they have failed to make out that at the date of this suit there had been any relinquishment in their favour.

Mullick, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—
Arbitration—Award out of Court—Some property
tion mentioning particular individual to carry out division—Decree in terms of award—Refusal of person nominated to act—Decree, whether execut-able—Powers of Court

Where in an arbitration out of Court the arbitrator makes an award, but leaves certain items of property undivided, and the parties apply to Court for filing the award, at the same time naming a particular individual to carry out the division of the remaining property, and the Court draws up a decree in terms of the award, if the person nominated by the parties refuses to act, the decree does not thereby become incapable of execution. If the parties do not agree to nominate any other person, the Court must appoint some one to carry out the award, or, if no one suitable can be found, proceed to carry it out itself. [p. 513, col. 2]

Under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, every Court has the power to enforce its own orders, and to vary a matter of detail in an order made by the consent of the parties when by the accident of circumstances the carrying out of such detail according to the agreement can no longer be achieved. JUDGMENT.

Walsh, J.—In our opinion there is no substance in this appeal. Questions of form have been so entangled in the argument with questions of substance that it is really difficult to say what question of principle, if any, is intended to be raised by the appeal. On the face of it the matter appears extremely simple. Such difficulties as have been created have been rather due to the absence of material from the record of the Court below, due in its turn to the objection raised in the Court below to this application having taken a very much narrower form than it has taken in the discussion before us.

The original parties to the dispute, being related, went to arbitration and the Arbitrator passed an award which left certain matters outstanding for subsequent division, such as had to be provided for by machinery created for the purpose, but not such as involved the determination of any substantial controverted question. It was agreed that a decree should be drawn, or rather that the award should be filed in the form of a decree, and the parties by their Pleaders also agreed that a certain relative, who happened also to be a Vakil in the High Court, should make division or partition of the outstanding matters in accordance with the award, and should make it without any delay, that is to say, that very day, and the parties were to have no objection to it. The appointment of this gentleman was obviously a mere piece of machinery to carry out the outstanding details which the award had left open. I attach importance to the expression in the order of the Court which was finally drawn up, as expressing the agreement of the parties; "and the parties will have no objection to it". I think what that means is, that the parties mutually agreed to waive any question which up to that time or thereafter might conceivably be raised, as to the competency of the Court to pass a decree at all, or as to the matter being considered a suit, or as to the various provisions relating to awards which differ in India according as the arbitration is undertaken with or without the intervention of the Court or as to any other matters of that kind, and have come together in a formal document with the intention, which they have carried out as fully as it was possible for any parties to do, of terminating all their mutual disputes, and have agreed that the Court shall enforce the agreement against either of them who attempts to repudiate it. That order was passed on the 13th of January 1921, and here are we in 1923 supposed to be trying to ascertain what it means. It was obviously intended to be carried out immediately, so that there should be, if possible, an end of the dispute within a few days. Unfortunately the Vakil selected for the purpose, either from misfortune or other unavoidable cause, was unable to carry out the task which he had accepted on behalf of the parties, and the present appellant seems to have taken advantage of that accident to try and render the whole compromise a nullity. Eventually the respondent applied to the Subordinate Judge to enforce the compromise or rather that part of it which was still unperformed. We are unable to see what else he could have done. The appellant's objection was that the appointment of Mr. Dang was merely a personal matter, which failed by his refusal to act, and that not only could no substitute be appointed, but the order itself could not be executed, and even the Court could not carry out its own order. In my opinion the Subordinate Judge was quite right in rejecting this view. When Mr. Dang was appointed and refused to act, it was open to the party objecting to offer a reasonable substitute, and if the parties could have agreed upon a reasonable substitute, in the same way as they had agreed about Mr. Dang, no trouble ought to have occurred. He did not even do that. He objected to the Court taking any steps in the matter at all. The Court below was clearly right in holding that it had power in the absence of an agreement between the parties to appoint what it calls a Commissioner in the place of Mr. Dang. There is no virtue in the word "Commissioner". The object of the parties would be just as much achieved by saying that they had selected an Arbitrator, or some one to report.

A great deal of argument has been addressed to us directed to showing that there is no decree in this case, that there is nothing that can be executed, and that the appointment of Mr. Dang was no part of any executable decree, and, therefore, beyond the reach of the Court. It seems to me that such a view, if sound, would turn the law as an engine for the administration of justice for the settlement of disputes, into an absurdity. I do not think it can be contended for a moment that there is not abundant provision to be found in the Code apart from section 151 applicable to this order. But even if there were none, it would not create any difficulty to my mind, because every Court obviously has the power to enforce its own orders, and to vary a matter of detail in an order made by the consent of parties, when by the accident of circumstances the carrying out of such detail according to the agreement can no longer be achieved. In my view it is sufficient for this purpose to refer to section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. I cannot imagine a state of circumstances to which that section can apply, if this is not one. Before that section was enacted the Courts in India always held themselves invested with inherent powers to do what was necessary for the ends of justice. That section preserves the right which had already been recognised by the Courts. It corresponds to some extent (in my opinion the difference is so small as not to be worth consideration) to sub-section 7 of section 24 of the Judicature Act of 1873 in England. It recognises the natural power of the Court to do all things necessary to determine matters in controversy and to prevent the ends of justice being defeated. It would be a lamentable thing indeed if, in a matter of this kind the gentleman, either from sudden illness or other inability to fulfil his task, had to retire, a compromise accepted in substance by everybody as being the best method of settling the dispute should be wrecked at the will of one obstinate party. In my view the Judge took the only view possible and this appeal must be dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Ryves, J.—I agree. I only wish to add that the parties agreed to settle the dispute between them by arbitration out of Court. The Arbitrator made his award and this was filed in Court and made a decree. The parties applied that when the award became a decree of Court, Mr. Dang should carry out the award and the Court so directed. Subsequently Mr. Dang refused to act. Some one clearly had to do what Mr. Dang refused to do to give full effect to the award. If the parties do not agree to nominate some one agreeable to both, the Court must, it seems to me, give effect to its own order and appoint some one to carry out the award, or if no one suitable can be found, proceed to carry it out itself. What the person appointed should do or should not do, does not concern us now. That depends entirely on the terms of the award which are not before us. The order under appeal shows I think that the elaborate and technical objections taken here were not pressed, even if raised, in the Court below. There the main objection was that as the parties had agreed to the appointment of Mr. Dang personally because he was related to both, no one else could be appointed. I agree in the order proposed.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is that this appeal is dismissed with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Of course the Commissioner now to be appointed by the Court on the application of the respondent, or the Court itself, if no such person can be found, must be guided in carrying out the task which it is called upon to perform by the terms of the award which have become part of the decree by the compromise.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, in Civil Appeal No. 280 of 1920, dated the 4th July 1921.

FACTS.—In Civil Suit No. 175 of 1919 plaintiff Govind Rao sued for possession of malik makbuza plot No 175 in Mouza Waddhamn for two years, on the basis of a usufructuary mortgage-deed executed on 3rd October 1917 by Musammat Zeli defendant No. 2 as guardian of the then minor Laxman defendant No. 1. It was found that defendant No. 2 was the real purchaser and owner of the field and hence the mortgage could be enforced against her. But as the two years of the mortgage-deed expired, the Judge did not decree possession but passed a personal decree against defendant No. 2 alone. Defendant No 1 was discharged and exonerated from the claim. No appeal was filed from this decree. Govindrao applied for execution of the decree against Musammat Zeli. In execution, he attached the aforesaid malik makbuza plot Laxman put in an objection petition, claiming that the field is owned by him and does not belong to Musammat Zeli. The lower Court disposed of this objection petition on the preliminary ground that the finding in the proceedings of the original suit to the effect that Musammat Zeli owns the field operates as res judicata against the defendant No. 1 and, therefore, precludes him from raising the objection.

CHAMPI V. TARA CHAND.

JUDGMENT.—The learned Additional District Judge has held that the decision in the suit cannot operate as res judicata against Laxman because he could not appeal against it. That is no criterion, though it may form part of one of the criteria mentioned in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, in addition to which I can at present think of no others that are applicable. In this case the decision in the suit that Musammat Zeli was the owner of the property was not the basis or any part of the basis of the decree. The final decision of the whole case, that is the decree, would have been exactly the same if the decision on that point had been exactly the contrary. The matter was, therefore, not "directly and substantially in issue" in the former proceeding. Indeed it was not in issue at all in the suit; it was thought to be so at the beginning of the trial, but in the judgment it was found that the whole case could be decided on two preliminary issues, and it was not necessary to decide the question of ownership at all, that is to say, that the question of ownership was not in issue. For these reasons I hold that the decision in the suit that Musammat Zeli is the owner of the property does not operate as res judicata in these proceedings. The appeal is accordingly dismissed and the appellant must pay all the costs.

But where he is properly a party to the suit—and as he is properly a party if he is represented in the record by a guardian not disqualified from acting—the jurisdiction of the Court to try and determine the cause as against the minor is complete, and such jurisdiction will not be ousted on proof that the Court did not follow the appropriate procedure for the appointment of the guardian [p 518, col 2, p 510, col 1]

JUDGMENT.

Dalal, J.—The plaintiff, Tara Chand, who has since become a major, instituted a suit for cancellation of certain decrees of Court through his next friend Musammam Persauni, his certificated guardian. He is the son of Janti Prasad, and was born on 13th November 1899. A guardian was appointed by Court of his person and property on 5th October 1907. He attained the age of majority on 13th November 1920. After the guardian was appointed, his uncle Banarsi Das adopted him. In 1916 one Musammam Champi sued Banarsi Das and others for partition of a house, and all proceedings were completed in the First Court on 20th March 1917. Judgment was reserved on that day and 30th March was fixed for delivery. Banarsi Das died between those two dates, and on 28th March Musammam Champi applied to bring Tara Chand on the record in place of his adoptive father, Banarsi Das. He appointed a Pleader and contested the suit. On 14th April 1917, a preliminary decree for partition was passed, and a final decree on the 21st June. Tara Chand himself appealed from both decrees to this Court, and the appeals were dismissed on 28th June 1920. The present suit for the cancellation of all the four decrees on the ground that they were passed against him while he was a minor, and not represented by a guardian was instituted on the 14th of September 1920.

The learned Subordinate Judge of Meerut decreed the suit, and hence two of the defendants, Musammam Champi and Musammam Sona Dei, have appealed. The grounds of appeal are: (1) that the plaintiff failed to prove that he was born on the 13th November 1899; (2) that on his adoption by Banarsi Das the guardianship certificate issued to Musammât Persauni, became inoperative, and the plaintiff attained majority at the age of 18 on 13th November 1917, (3) because the decree of the First Court sought to be cancelled is saved by the provisions of O. XXII, r. 6; (4) that the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree in this suit, because he was in no way prejudiced by the want of appointment of a guardian and he was able to conduct his defence effectively himself, and (5) that the plaintiff was barred by the rule of estoppel from questioning the decrees.

There is no force in any of these grounds. It was conceded during the argument that the plaintiff was born on the 13th November 1899. Once a guardian was appointed to him, it mattered little what other property he acquired. The adoption did not change his identity and the power of the guardian, Musammât Persauni, and of the District Court, which appointed her, continued to be the same.

Order XXII, r. 6, prevents abatement when death takes place between the conclusion of the hearing and the pronouncement of the judgment, and the decree is passed against a dead man. Obviously this provision of law covers cases where the Court is unaware of the death of a party and proceeds on the supposition that the parties are alive. It was urged that in the present case, hearing concluded on the 28th of March and judgment was delivered on the 14th of April 1917, and that the death of Banarsi Das took place between the two dates. This is not a correct way of summarising the proceedings of the Court. After the 28th March and before the judgment was pronounced, some proceedings took place, namely, those of bringing Tara Chand on the record, there was, therefore, no conclusion of the hearing prior to the death of Banarsi Das. The rule deals with a decree against a dead man and not with one against living persons. It indicates how a decree against a dead man is to be construed and can have no reference to a decree passed against living persons, Even where preliminary and final decrees were both passed against a dead person, the Patna High Court held that the final decree was a nullity and was not saved by the provisions of this rule. Jungli Lall v. Laddu Ram Marwari (1).

The four decrees sought to be cancelled were passed against a minor and were void. We have not to consider any question of prejudice to the plaintiff. The learned Counsel for the appellant quoted rulings in cases where the minor was not properly represented and the Courts refused to give him relief when it was discovered that he had not suffered any prejudice by improper representation. The first case is a Privy Council case of Walian v. Banke Behary Pershad Singh (2). A Bench case of this Court, Ram Bareshta. Ram v. Tarak Tewari (3) was similar. The most recent case is that of the Patna High Court, Pande Saldeo Narain v. Ramayan Tewari (4). In this case, one of the learned judges (Das, J.) has pointed out the distinction between void and voidable decrees at page 352* of the report —

"The Court has no jurisdiction to render judgment against one who is not a party to the suit, though it has jurisdiction to render judgment against one who is a party to the suit but who has not been brought before it by reason of the failure on the part of the Court to follow the particular procedure laid down in the Code. The one affects the existence of the jurisdiction of the Court; the other affects the exercise of it. To take a simple case, a minor is not a party to the suit, unless he is represented in the record of the suit by a guardian competent to act as such. Where the record of the suit itself shows that the minor is wholly unrepresented, or that he is represented by a guardian disqualified from acting as such a guardian under the express provision of the Statute, the result is that the minor is (1) 50 Ind. not properly a party to the suit, and a judgment rendered against the minor is without jurisdiction and null and void. But where he is properly a party to the suit—and as he is properly a party if he is represented in the record by a guardian not disqualified from acting—the jurisdiction of the Court to try and determine the cause, as against the minor is complete, and such jurisdiction will not be ousted on proof that the Court did not follow the appropriate procedure for the appointment of the guardian." A Full Bench of this Court held a decree passed against a minor without the appointment of a guardian ad litem to be void [Bhura Mal v. Har Kishen Das (5)]. This ruling was followed by a Bench of two Judges in Hanuman Prasad v. Muhammad Ishaq (6) where the force of the Privy Council case of Walton v. Bante Behary Pershad Singh (2) was explained, and the authority was quoted of the Privy Council case, Khizar Jamal v. Diam (7). In the latter case their Lordships observed.—

"Their Lordships agree that the sales cannot be treated as void or now be avoided on the ground of any mere irregularities of procedure in obtaining the decrees, or in the execution of them. But, on the other hand, the Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who were not parties to the proceedings, or properly represented on the record. As against such persons the decrees and sales purporting to be made would be a nullity, and might be disregarded without any proceeding to set them aside." The present case is similar. The decrees passed against the plaintiff are a nullity and might be disregarded without any proceeding to set them aside. In Ram Chander v. Chheda Lal (8) this Court held that where a minor was sued as a major and a decree passed against him, the decree was not binding upon him. That was a case where a certificated guardian was appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act to the minor and it was held that such a minor did not attain majority until the age of 21. In that case it was contended that a guardian having been appointed to the minor's property in one district, the minor would attain the age of majority at 18 with respect to property situated in another district. The learned Judges held that a person cannot be a major in one district and a minor in another. Similarly, it may be stated here that Tara Chand cannot be a minor with respect to the property of his father Jainti Prasad, and major with respect to the property inherited by him from his adoptive father Banarsi Das. The Calcutta High Court also has held a decree against a minor to be a nullity [Purna Chandra Kunwar v. Bejoy Chand Mahtab (9)].

As pointed out by the learned Judge of the lower Court the appellant did not come forward herself nor get any agent of hers examined to prove circumstances which would give rise to any question of estoppel. We were not told during the argument how the action of Tara Chand led the defendant, Musammam Champi, to act as she did in the previous litigation. It is not even alleged by an affidavit or otherwise that she was aware of how Tara Chand was acting, and had no knowledge of his being a minor. Her learned Counsel here represented that Tara Chand was playing a trick. Subsequent to the previous litigation, he had purchased more shares in the house (see paragraph 12 of the plaint) and by re-opening the litigation he desired to get a solid block for himself and oust Musammam Champi from the portion of the house allotted to her. I have, however, to decide a question of law and not of morality. These considerations may be submitted to the Trial Court in case there is a fresh trial of Musammam Champi's suit.

Though not mentioned in the grounds of appeal, an argument was advanced here that a declaration is discretionary for this Court to grant and the circumstances of the present case are such that the discretion should not be exercised. The decrees are a nullity and may be disregarded, so it cannot be said that the lower Court exercised its discretion wrongly in granting the declaration sought by the plaintiff. It is also urged that the plaintiff's remedy was by way of injunction to restrain the defendants from executing the decrees and not by way of declaration. The case of Kunhamed v. Kutti (10) was quoted as an authority. The facts of that case are peculiar and in no way applicable here. The remedy granted to the plaintiff was a proper one.

I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal raises the question whether a minor, who was unrepresented in the suit by any guardian, can be held to be bound by the decree passed against him, although he neither alleges nor proves that the decree passed against him is unjust or to his prejudice.

The facts of the case are no longer in dispute and are as follows. The appellant Musammam Champi filed the Suit No. 203 of 1916 against one Lala Banarsi Das and several others for the partition of a certain house. The case was duly heard and concluded except for the judgment during the lifetime of Banarsi Das. The Court reserved judgment and fixed the 30th of March 1917 for delivery of it. Banarsi Das died on the 23rd of March 1917. An application was made to the Court by Musammam Champi that the respondent, Tara Chand, the adopted son of Banarsi Das, might be brought on the record as his legal representative. This application was granted and ultimately on the 14th of April 1917 a preliminary decree was passed. The final decree for partition followed on the 21st of June 1917. Tara Chand on being brought on the record purported to appoint a Vakil and resisted the suit so far it lay in his power. He filed appeals to this Court against both the preliminary and final decrees which were, however, unsuccessful. Tara Chand was the natural son of one Jainti Prasad. On the death of Jainti Prasad Tara Chand's natural mother Musammam Persauni took out a certificate of guardianship, on the 15th of November 1907. It was after this certificate had been obtained that Tara Chand was adopted by Banarsi Das and passed into his family. Evidently everybody forgot that there was a certificated guardian and Tara Chand was throughout treated as a major. As already stated, he also regarded himself a major and accordingly resisted the suit and preferred the appeals. After the appeals were dismissed it struck Tara Chand that he might try his luck again and he accordingly brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, to obtain a declaration that the decrees passed against him were not binding on him on the sole ground that he was unrepresented in the suit, by a duly appointed guardian. He nowhere stated in the plaint how the decrees passed against him were prejudicial to his interests. He made certain allegations about the plaintiffs being aware of his minority and of her having dishonestly put him forward as a major. But that allegation has not been substantiated. As I have stated, the sole question to be decided is whether the mere fact that no guardian had been proposed or appointed for Tara Chand is sufficient to vitiate the decrees passed against him. It may be mentioned here that Tara Chand has purchased the shares of certain co-sharers in the property and possibly the sole object of the present suit is to re-open the partition and to obtain a compact share in the property which would include not only his ancestral share but also the shares purchased by him.

Before the case of Walian v. Banke Behari Prasad Singh (2) was decided it was generally believed that a formal defect in the appointment of a guardian for the suit of a minor was in itself sufficient to vitiate all the proceedings against the minor in the suit. The case of Bhura Mal v. Har Kishan Das (5) may be cited as an instance. But since the Privy Council decided the case of Walian v. Banke Behari Prasad Singh (2) it is now clearly recognised that where a minor has been substantially represented and has not been prejudiced in the litigation it is not open to him to obtain the relief of a declaration that the decree is not binding on him. Following this case, it has been held that in order to find out whether the minor was substantially prejudiced or not, it would be necessary often to go into the merits of the case. If the representation is of a doubtful character the fact that the minor has not at all suffered would go to establish that the representation was substantial. The case of Murli Dhar v. Putambar Lal (11) was of this nature.

The question, however, before me is what would be the effect of a decree in which the minor has not been at all represented. It has been urged with great force that unless the minor alleges that he was prejudiced for want of a guardian he has no right to succeed. It has been further pointed out that the objective law, namely the law of procedure, is merely a hand-maiden to justice and where a substantial justice has been done a breach of the rule of procedure cannot by itself be a ground for a suit. There can be no doubt that the last stated proposition is very correct. The Courts exist for granting redress. Where there is no prejudice, there is no grievance to be redressed. The mere fact that there has been a defect in following the procedure cannot be made a matter of grievance and there can be no redress. But the question raised in this appeal is not one of procedure but is one of substantive law. It is a question of status. There can be no doubt that a decree, however proper it may be, passed against a person who is already dead can be of no effect against the estate of the deceased. To quote an expression often used, the decree is a mere 'nullity'. The reason is this. The deceased person cannot be called upon to obey the decree and, therefore, the decree is of no consequence. The legal representatives of the deceased cannot be called upon on foot of the decree, to perform what the deceased person was called upon to perform. A minor suffers from certain disabilities under the law of minority. One of the disabilities is that he cannot come to Court either to seek a relief or defend an attack on him, except through a person who can properly represent him.

This is his disability owing to his being under a certain specified age. In this particular case that age was enhanced to 21 years owing to a certificate of guardianship having been granted to his natural mother. We have not been called upon to consider whether the factum of Tara Chand's adoption into another family in any way affected the guardianship certificate and whether his age for obtaining majority was reduced to 18 years. It has been conceded that Tara Chand was a minor when he was brought on the record as a major on the 29th March 1917. He was a minor when he preferred the appeals. Indeed, he was a minor when he brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. He attained majority during the pendency of the suit. Tara Chand was suffering from a disability to defend himself owing to his status of minority. In this particular case the minor (Tara Chand) was probably an intelligent person quite able to look after himself and his property. But he might have been only a baby one year old, when his father died. The law applicable would have been the same then, as in the present case. The question then is whether the bringing on the record of a person suffering from the disability of minority can be regarded as of no consequence if the ultimate result of the suit was in no way prejudicial to his interest. To my mind, in principle, there is nothing to differentiate the case of a decree passed against a dead man from a decree passed against a person who is suffering from the disability of minority without having a person appointed to look after his interest.

No direct authority of this Court has been cited. A number of rulings was cited at the Bar but most of them could be distinguished on account of the facts involved in each case. The only case which appears to be exactly in point is the case of Purna Chandra Kunwar v. Bejoy Chand Mehtab (9). In this case a decree for arrears of rent had been obtained against a minor who had been sued as a major without anybody to represent him in the litigation. It held that the decree could not be binding on him and was a nullity. On principle and authority, therefore, Tara Chand would be entitled to have it declared that the decrees are not binding on him.

It was urged that, having regard to the peculiar fact of the case, namely, the arguments having been concluded during the lifetime of Banarsi Das, the provision of O. XXII, r 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure was applicable and the decree passed was binding on the estate of Banarsi Das. Assuming, but without deciding that O. XXII, r 6 of the Civil Procedure Code has any application to the facts of this case, it is clear that as a matter of fact no decree was passed against Banarsi Das. On the other hand, the only decree that was passed was against Tara Chand himself. The provisions quoted, therefore, can be of no avail to the appellants.

The further question, however, still remains whether the plaintiff, Tara Chand, should wholly succeed in the suit or whether the Court should go into the merits of the case and see whether or not he was bound by the decree that was validly passed against the remaining defendants. For if the decree be such as to bind Tara Chand, without its having been specifically passed against him, he should not be allowed to escape the liability on the decree for the simple reason that he was without a guardian in the proceedings. He cannot be in a better position than he would have been in if he had not been at all made a party. In the Calcutta case Purna Chandra Kunwar v. Bejoy Chand Mehtab (9) the High Court remanded the case for a trial of the question whether the minor was or was not liable along with the other defendants on account of the arrears of rent. The minor in that case had sued for the recovery of decree-money already paid and it was held that if he was liable, as a matter of fact, he could not recover the money he had paid. Similarly, in the case of Ram Chunder v. Chheda Lal (8) issues were remanded for ascertaining what advantages, if any, had been derived by the plaintiff by the decree impeached. In this case the decree impeached is a decree for partition. Tara Chand could not be bound by a decree passed against any other of the defendants. The result of a declaration that the decrees are not binding on Tara Chand would be that the partition suit will be re-opened at the stage at which Tara Chand came in. No relief in the nature of a refund has been asked for. There is no prayer that the costs paid under the decree should be paid back to him. In the circumstances there seems to be no bar to the plaintiff obtaining the declaration that the preliminary and final decrees, whether passed by the Court of first instance or appeal, are not binding on him.

The result is that the appeal fails.

By the Court.—The appeal is dismissed with costs here on the higher scale.

Custom—Alienation—Alienation by non-proprietor of site of house—Sarhall Kalan, Tahsil Tarn Taran, District Amritsar—Sale, proof of, effect of

There is no custom in the village of Sarhall Kalan in the Tarn Taran Tahsil of the Amritsar District whereby a non-proprietary resident has an unrestricted power to dispose of the site on which his house is built. [p. 525, col 2]

As regards sales by non-proprietors in a village, proof of particular sales having taken place without objection would be very good evidence of the title of the purchaser to the lands actually sold. But while such sales would give a good title to individuals in particular portions of the village site, they would not prove that the rights of the proprietary body over the remainder of the site had been extinguished, and that possession whether by proprietors or non-proprietors had come to be the only measure of right. [p. 525, col 1]

Second appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 31st January 1917.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case are some of the proprietors of the land in Sarhali Kalan, Tahsil Tarn Taran, District Amritsar. The defendants are non-proprietors. Buta, the ancestor of defendants Nos. 1 to 4, was originally in possession of the house in dispute. On his death it was inherited by defendant No. 1 and the father of defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The shares of the other defendants were acquired by Jani, defendant No. 1, by transfer, who sold it to defendant No. 5. The present suit for possession of the house was instituted by the plaintiffs on the allegation that the house belonged to their ancestors, and that it had been given to Buta for residence on condition that he was to occupy the house as a kamin without any right of alienation. It was also alleged that the non-proprietors of Sarhali Kalan had no right to alienate their houses without the consent of the proprietors. The suit was resisted by the defendants on the ground that it belonged to Buta, and that the plaintiffs were not the owners thereof, and further that Sarhali Kalan was a town and that the non-proprietors had unrestricted powers to alienate their houses. The two principal issues in the case were issues Nos. 1 and 4; viz.—

(1) Was the house in suit given by the grandfather of the plaintiffs to the ancestors of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 for residential purposes?

(2) Are the non-proprietors in Sarhali Kalan entitled to mortgage or sell their residential houses?

Upon the first issue both the Courts below have concurrently held that the house in suit was never given to the defendants or to their ancestors by the plaintiffs' ancestors. The decision on this point has become final and no question is raised with regard to it now. On the 4th issue the defendants produced both oral and documentary evidence. The documentary evidence consisted of a large number of mortgage-deeds, sale-deeds, sale certificates, and a few judgments in other cases. The plaintiffs also produced some documentary evidence and examined a larger number of witnesses to rebut the evidence given by the defendants. After considering the oral and documentary evidence on both sides the Trial Court held that the defendants had succeeded in establishing a special custom according to which the non-proprietors in Sarhali Kalan had an unrestricted right of alienation in respect of their houses and dismissed the suit.

The plaintiffs appealed to the lower Appellate Court which agreed with the Trial Court and upheld the decree.

The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal to this Court, and the only question which has been argued before us and which requires decision is whether the non-proprietors of Sarhali Kalan have an unrestricted right of alienating their residential houses. The general custom which may be taken to be the common law of the land is thus stated in paragraph 236 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law—

"In the absence of a well-established custom a non-proprietary resident in a village cannot dispose of the site on which his house is built, or a right of residence in the house, without the consent of the proprietors of the village, but he is ordinarily entitled to sell the materials, and the purchaser must remove the same within a reasonable period." A large number of authorities are quoted in support of this rule. It has been held in various cases that there is a presumption in favour of the right of alienation by non-proprietors in a town. It was accordingly contended on behalf of the defendants that Sarhali Kalan had attained the position of a Kasba or a town and, therefore, on the evidence given in the case, the non-proprietors of this place ought to be held to possess an unrestricted right of alienation. The admitted facts with regard to this point, are as follows:—

The population of the place consists of 5000 souls, there is no Municipality or notified area, there is no hospital, and the place possesses no commercial importance. It merely supplies troops, and is generally inhabited by blacksmiths, carpenters, weavers, etc., besides the proprietors.

The District Judge has quoted a passage from the Amritsar Gazetteer of the year of 1892-1893 Edition which gives the description of the village in the following words:—

"Sarhali Kalan is a large Sandhu Jat village in the south-western corner of the Tarn Taran Tahsil. It has now a population of 5,750, and is a purely agricultural village, in no way deserving the name of a town. The land revenue in this tract, the Khira Manjha, has always been light and Sarhali Kalan now pays Rs. 6,500. It lies on the broad high road, to Harikiferry from Tarn Taran, leading Ferozepur. The only public building is a Police Station, opposite to which is a serai with a rest-house in one corner, and a post office in the other. The encamping ground is rarely used except by Civil Officers on tour, and the bazaar is small and unimportant. The village supplies many recruits to the native army, and the money order business at the post office is extensive. There has never been a Municipality, nor is there ever likely to be any need of one."

The learned Judge, after considering the particulars given in the above passage and other evidence produced by the parties, was not able to hold definitely that Sarhali Kalan was a kasba, but he has tried to get over this point by adopting a middle course, and has held that though not a kasba it might very well be said to have, by this time, reached the dignity of a kasba. This conclusion can hardly be supported on the evidence in the case. Moreover, even if the learned Judge be right in his view and Sarhali Kalan may be said to be a village of some importance the presumption attaching to a town can hardly be applied to it, for it is after all a village.

We will, therefore, proceed to decide the question of custom involved in this case on this basis, namely, that Sarhali Kalan is an agricultural village, and must be governed by the general custom applicable to agricultural villages unless the special custom set up by the defendants is established. The evidence to be considered in this case was given in three different cases which were tried together by the Courts below. The three cases were Nos. 1886 and 1887 of 1912 and No. 446 of 1913. In cases Nos. 1886 and 1887 of 1912 the plaintiffs were the same, but the defendants were different. In case No. 446 of 1913 the principal defendants were the same as the plaintiffs in cases Nos. 1886 and 1887 of 1912. The question of custom involved in all the three cases was the same. The parties, therefore, gave their statements in all the three cases and relied on the oral and documentary evidence produced in all of them. According to the summary given in the judgment of the Trial Court the defendants in Case No. 1887 produced 156 documents, and in Case No. 446, 96 documents including 61 mortgage-deeds executed by non-proprietors in favour of proprietors, 67 mortgage-deeds executed by non-proprietors in favour of non-proprietors, 3 mortgage-deeds executed by proprietors in favour of non-proprietors, 29 sale-deeds executed by non-proprietors in favour of proprietors, 59 sale-deeds executed by non-proprietors in favour of non-proprietors, 10 sale-deeds executed by proprietors in favour of non-proprietors and 23 sale certificates. Fifty-nine witnesses were examined by the defendants in Case No. 1887 of 1912 and the same number of witnesses was produced in Case No. 446 of 1913. In addition to the above evidence the defendants also produced copies of judgments, Exhibits Nos. 144 and D. 156 in Case No. 1887 of 1912 and Exhibits Nos. P. 11, P. 12, P. 14 and P. 21 in Case No. 446 of 1913.

At first sight the documentary evidence produced by the defendants appears to be formidable, but no evidence was given to show under what circumstances the sale-deeds and mortgage-deeds, etc., were executed.

In the case of Bishen Chand v. Jawanda Mal, No. 1313 of 1876 quoted at page 250 in P. R. of 1882, [Kharak Singh v. Alladitta (1)] the Court pointed out that the abadi or village

site belongs to the proprietary body of the village and observed that "what has been done hitherto by the non-proprietary tenants in regard to selling the sites of their houses can afford no guide for the future. They may have been allowed so to do. But to carry this peculiar leave and license on the part of the proprietors so far as to hold that thence arises the evidence of a custom that the non-proprietary should sell what is not their own, never was their own, and cannot be made their own, without special agreement or some such causes operating, is going much too far." The learned Judges who decided the case reported as Kharak Singh v. Alladitta (1) after quoting the passage made the following pertinent observation:—

"Proof of particular sales having taken place without objection would be very good evidence of the title of the purchaser to the lands actually sold. But while such sales would give a good title to individuals in particular portions of the village site, they would not prove that the rights of the proprietary body over the remainder of the site had been extinguished, and that possession whether by proprietors or non-proprietors had come to be the only measure of right."

The rule laid down in the case above cited appears to have been consistently followed in the Chief Court of the Punjab and applying this rule to the present case we have to see whether there is any evidence as to the circumstances under which the sales and the mortgages were effected. If the contention of the defendants were to be accepted they would practically become the owners of the sites of their houses, for they would have an unrestricted right of transferring their houses along with the right of occupation over the sites to others.

In the case of Mahomed Usman v. Babu (2) a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court at page 63* made the following pertinent observation with regard to the respective rights of the proprietors and the non-proprietors:—

"The evidence in support of alleged custom is most unsatisfactory. Several sale-deeds of houses in the village were put in evidence in support of it, but there is nothing to show under what circumstances these sale-deeds were executed. We think that the evidence in support of the custom is entirely insufficient to establish the custom, and that the case is governed by the ruling of a Full Bench of this Court in Rama Bilas v. Lal Bahadur (3). There is a tendency in this Province to set up in villages, customs which are subversive of the rights of property, as for example, in the present case a custom which in fact takes from the zemindar the right to the site of a tenant's holding on the determination of the tenancy. The claim of a tenant to transfer a right of residence really amounts to this, for it means that the tenant may by assignment transfer to a stranger a right of residence without the consent of the zemindar, and so force upon the latter a tenant who may be distasteful to him. It prevents the landlord from resuming the occupation of his land when a tenant, selected and approved of by him, chooses to give it up. It is the change of a right of tenancy into a right of permanent occupancy."

Every word of this passage is applicable with equal force to the present case. No doubt, in addition to the instances supplied by mortgage-deeds and sale-deeds, the defendants have produced a few judgments in support of their claim, but only two of them, viz., Exhibits Nos. P11 and P21 relate to the village Sarhali Kalan. The majority of the instances cited on behalf of the defendants are of recent dates. Only one mortgage-deed of 1857 has been produced and a sale-deed of the year 1870. Sale-deeds of 1877, 1881, 1886, 1891; and some sale certificates of 1883 have been filed. The rest of the transactions relied upon are of recent dates only. It is not possible, therefore, to hold in this case that the general custom has

The oral evidence in this case is equally useless, because the witnesses have either simply expressed their own opinions or have cited instances of certain transfers without stating the circumstances under which they were made. Thus there is no evidence, oral or documentary, on the record disclosing the circumstances under which the documents relied upon were executed. We are, therefore, constrained to hold that the evidence produced in this case is legally sufficient to establish the alleged custom, and the suit ought to have been decreed.

We accordingly accept the appeal, and setting aside the decrees of the Courts below, decree the claim of the plaintiff-appellants with costs in all Courts.

Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz—Interpretation—Ambiguity, effect of—Pre-emptive clause containing extraneous matter—Presumption of custom, whether a use—Custom of pre-emption—Burden of proof.

Plaintiffs sued for pre-emption alleging that they were co-sharers in the thok while defendants were strangers. It appeared that the village comprised two thoks, that the plaintiffs were co-sharers in the thok in which the property in suit was situated and that the defendants were co-sharers in the other thok. The paragraph of the wajib-ul-arz dealing with the right of pre-emption provided that in the case of a transfer by sale or mortgage but not by a gift, the claim to the right of pre-emption shall belong first to an own brother, and nephew, then to a paternal cousin, a partner in the property, then to the co-sharer in the thok and then to the co-sharer of the village. It provided further that "gift will be made in favour of an own brother and nephew or daughter's son or for a charitable purpose and not otherwise".

Held, (1) that the inclusion of extraneous matters in the same clause which could not possibly be the subject of a custom, precluded the possibility of the clause being treated as a record of custom in regard to any of the matters of which that clause formed a part; [p. 529, col. 2.]

(2) that the terms of the wajib-ul-arz were ambiguous and capable of two interpretations; [p. 532, col. 1.]

(3) that for these reasons the plaintiffs' claim was bound to fail [p. 530, col. 1.]

Mathura Singh v. Ram Lal Singh, 64 Ind. Cas. 486, 19 A. L. J. 903, followed.

Per Kanhaiya Lal, J.—A wajib-ul-arz is in the absence of intrinsic or extrinsic evidence to the contrary a prima facie evidence of the custom it records [p. 527, col. 2.]

Dugambar Singh v. Ahmed Sayed Khan, 28 Ind. Cas. 34, 37 A. L. J. 236, 19 O. W. N. 393, 17 Al. L. T. 193, 2 L. W. 303, 21 O. L. J. 237; 28 M. L. J. 556; 17 Bom. L. R. 393, (1915) M. W. N. 581, 42 I. A. 10 (P. O.), Sher Muhammad Khan v. Parbhulal, 79 Ind. Cas. 41, 46 A. L. J. 801, followed.

Each wajib-ul-arz must be interpreted according to its own terms, and in the absence of any terms of limitation in a pre-emption clause confining its operation to a transfer in favour of a stranger, the right of pre-emption can be enforced, so far as it may be, between the persons belonging to the different categories mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz inter se [p. 528, col. 1.]

Where all the lands belonging to the parent khata are held in severalty, the mere existence of a common khata containing certain barren, uncultivated or abadi lands, which usually remain the property of all the co-sharers of the village till a partition is formally effected, cannot make a person who belongs in other respects to one class or category, a joint co-sharer with another who belongs to another class or category, as regards any separate interest the latter may sell. [p. 529, col. 2.]

Where a wajib-ul-arz contains matters which cannot properly or possibly be the subject of a custom, then the ordinary presumption that the wajib-ul-arz is a prima facie record of a custom is overturned by the internal evidence afforded by the other terms embodied therein though they may be separable from the rest. [p. 530, col. 2; p. 530, col. 1.]

Per Sulaiman, J.—The burden of proving the custom of pre-emption lies on the plaintiff. The plaintiff pre-emptor cannot succeed by merely proving that a custom of pre-emption exists in the village. He has to show that that particular custom exists which would entitle him to a decree against the defendant vendee [p. 530, cols. 1 & 2.]

If the only evidence which the plaintiff can produce is ambiguous, that is to say, is capable of two interpretations, and if on one of such interpretations the suit cannot succeed, then the suit must fail, and it is not the duty of the Court to give it necessarily the other interpretation which would entitle the plaintiff to a decree [p. 530, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Kanhaiya Lal, J.—This appeal and the cross-objection arise out of a suit for pre-emption and the main question for consideration is whether the plaintiffs-respondents are entitled to a preferential right of purchase as against the defendants vendees. The sale in question was effected by the defendants Nos. 3 to 13 in favour of the defendant No. 1 and the father of defendant No. 2 for a consideration of Rs. 22,000 on the 27th of May 1919; and the property sold comprised a 3 biswas share in patti No. 14 with the rights appertaining thereto in shamilat pattis Nos. 17 and 18 in the thok, known by the name of thok 12 biswas in the village Kadipur. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that they were co-sharers in that thok and that the defendants vendees were strangers. The Court below found that the village Kadipur comprised 2 thoks, that the plaintiffs were co-sharers in the thok in which the property in suit was situated and that the defendants vendees were co-sharers in the other thok. It further found that the plaintiffs were entitled to a preferential right as against the defendants vendees and that the sale consideration actually paid was Rs. 22,000. It accordingly decreed the claim of the plaintiffs subject to the payment of the above amount.

Paragraph 14 of the Wajib-ul-arz of the village Kadipur, dealing with the right of pre-emption states that in the case of a transfer of property by a sale or mortgage but not by a gift, the claim to the right of pre-emption (dava haq shafa) shall belong first to an own brother and nephew then to a paternal cousin, a partner in the property, then to the co-sharers in the thok and then to the co-sharers of the village. The contention here is that the right to claim pre-emption arises only when a sale or mortgage is effected in favour of a person outside these categories and that no right of preference is given by the wajib-ul-arz between the co-sharers of the different categories inter se. In other words it is argued that the right of pre-emption is at best recognised only where a sale or mortgage is effected in favour of a stranger and not where it is effected in favour of a member of one or other of the categories above mentioned. It is further urged that the clause itself does not establish any custom of pre-emption in the village because it mentions that which could hardly be the subject of a custom, namely, that no gift could be made by a co-sharer except in favour of an own brother and nephew or a daughter's son or except for a charitable purpose. The last condition is clearly extraneous to the scope of the paragraph, which purports to deal with the right of pre-emption. But it is contended that if that entry could not be the record of a custom the previous entry could hardly be treated as a record of a custom of pre-emption.

The questions raised present features of some difficulty. As pointed out in Digambar Singh v. Ahmed Sayed Khan (1) and Sher Muhammed Khan v. Prabhu Lal (2), a wajib-ul-arz is in the absence of intrinsic or extrinsic evidence to the contrary a prima facie evidence of the custom it records. It may, however, record a custom about certain matters and a contract as regards others. If it records a custom, the incidents of that custom and the occasion which would give an opportunity for its enforcement may be proved by its production or by external evidence or by both.

The wajib-ul-arz here produced does not say that the right of pre-emption or a claim to enforce that right would only accrue where a co-sharer has transferred his share to a stranger or a person outside the co-parcenary body. It mentions the different classes of persons who can enforce that right in their due order whenever a transfer is effected. Such a transfer may, however, be effected in favour of a stranger or in favour of a person belonging to a remoter category to the prejudice of a person belonging to a nearer category. In the absence of any terms of limitation, the right of a pre-emption can be enforced, as far as it may be between the persons belonging to the different categories inter se. Each wajib-ul-arz requires to be interpreted according to its own terms. While in some cases it has been held on the interpretation of the particular wajib-ul-arz produced that the co-sharers belonging to the different categories have preferential rights inter se, in other cases it has been held that such preferential rights only exist where a sale is effected in favour of a stranger.

The Court below relying on the decisions in Ram Lal v. Niadar (3) and Gurdial v. Mathura Singh (4) has found that such a right of preference exists even where a co-sharer of one thok sells to a co-sharer of another thok. In the former case, the wajib-ul-arz provided that in the event of a sale a co-sharer should sell his property to his own brother or ekjaddi and after him to co-sharers in the patti or thok and after them to other co-sharers, and further said that the person falling within the first category would have to give the same price as was offered by a stranger. The view taken by this Court was that a right of pre-emption was given to the successive categories of the pre-emptors inter se, that is one against the other and that such right did not arise only in the event of a sale to a stranger. In the latter case the custom record in the wajib-ul-arz gave a right of pre-emption, in the case of a sale or mortgage to a co-sharer in a patti, then to the pattidars of the mahal, then to the owners of the other mahals, and in case of their refusal to an outsider at the same price as a stranger would be willing to give. The view taken by this Court was that a right of pre-emption between the persons mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz was enforceable inter se.

The learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants has referred to the decisions in Khatun Bibi v. Sayda Bibi (5) and Mathura Singh v. Ramial Singh (6) where under circumstances said to be similar to the present case, no right of pre-emption as between the co-sharers of different categories inter se was allowed.

Personally speaking, it appears to me questionable how far we can import into the terms of a wajib-ul-arz a limitation or restriction, which does not there exist. The wajib-ul-arz does not in terms say that the right of pre-emption would be available only where there is a sale to a stranger. It is wide enough in its terms to govern all cases where a sale is effected in favour of a person whether he is a stranger or belongs to one or other of the categories mentioned. It merely declares the order in which the right of preference is to be exercised as between the different classes of co-sharers or as against a stranger. For the purpose of enforcing the right of pre-emption, the village is practically divided into different concentric circles. One of those concentric circles is the thok and the other is the village unit. A person who belongs to an inner concentric circle is entitled to claim pre-emption as against a person who belongs to an outer-concentric circle, because so far as the former is concerned the latter is virtually a stranger. A claim to a right of pre-emption does not necessarily connote a suit. It may be enforced either by private treaty or by suit. It implies an assertion of a right which may be asserted before a transfer is effected or after it is effected.

LALOHAND v. RAM CHAND.

It may be asserted out of Court or, if the vendee refuses to reconvey the property, by a suit. The right arises from a sale if the order of preference laid down by the wajib-ul-arz is disregarded by the vendor. If it had been intended to limit the exercise of the right to an occasion when a sale was made to a stranger, the wajib-ul-arz would have said so.

In Sukhdeo Singh v. Bahadur Singh (7) where a wajib-ul-arz provided that if a co-sharer wanted to sell his property he should do so for whatever price was obtained from others, first to a near co-sharer in the same patti, secondly to any other co-sharer in the same patti, thirdly to a near co-sharer in another patti, fourthly to a co-sharer in the mahal and fifthly to an outsider, it was held that the right conferred was a right enforceable between the different classes of persons mentioned inter se.

In Sukhdeo Singh v. Bahadur Singh (7) where the pre-emptive clause described the right of pre-emption as existing in (1) a near co-sharer in the same patti, (2) any other co-sharer in the patti, (3) a near co-sharer in another patti, and (4) a co-sharer in the mahal for whatever price was obtainable from another, the contention that the right of pre-emption arose only in case of a sale to a stranger was repelled.

In Dhanraj Misir v. Rameshwar Misir (8) no such restriction was read into the terms of the wajib-ul-arz as is now contended for.

It is urged in differentiation of those cases that where the pre-emptive clause of the wajib-ul-arz imposes no duty on a co-sharer to offer the property in the first instance to a person of the class first named and then to the persons mentioned in the other classes in their order, no cause of action can accrue to the co-sharers of the different classes inter se, by a sale to a member of one of those classes. But there is no difference in principle between a clause which casts a duty on a co-sharer to sell the property to the different classes of persons mentioned in their order, and a clause which defines the classes of persons among whom the right of pre-emption would be enforceable whenever a sale was effected by a co-sharer in respect of his share. Obviously if a pre-emptive clause contains no restriction, limiting its operation to a sale or transfer in favour of a stranger, it will be doing violence to the spirit and intention of the framers of the wajib-ul-arz to import that limitation and preclude a person belonging to a superior category from enforcing it as against a person who, so far his thok is concerned, is as much a stranger as a complete outsider.

Where all the lands belonging to the parent *khata*s are held in severalty, the mere existence of a common khata containing certain barren, uncultivated or abadi lands, which usually remain the property of all the co-sharers of the village till a partition is formally effected, cannot, make a person who belongs in other respects to one class or category, a joint co-sharer with another who belongs to another class or category, as regards any separate interest the latter may sell. No account is taken of the appurtenances in the *shamilat khata*s for the determination of his right of pre-emption.

Interpreted, however, in the light of the Full Bench decision in Randhir Singh v. Rappal Misir (9) which follows a previous decision in Balwant Singh v. Hari Singh (10) and is binding on us the inclusion of extraneous matters in the same clause which could not possibly be the subject of a custom, precludes the possibility of the clause being treated as a record of custom in regard to any of the matters of which that clause forms a part. It has been there pointed out that where a wajib-ul-arz contained matters which could not properly or possibly be the subject of a custom, then the ordinary presumption that the wajib-ul-arz was a prima facie record of a custom was overturned by the internal evidence afforded by the other terms embodied therein though they might be separable from the rest.

The claim of the plaintiffs must in these circumstances fail and it is hereby dismissed with costs. The cross-objection is not pressed and is also dismissed with costs. The costs in either case will include fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Sulaiman, J.—It is notorious that before the year 1911 there were numerous cases on pre-emption, which were more or less irreconcilable. In that year a special Pre-emption Bench was, therefore, constituted with the professed object of laying down certain principles which should as far as possible be consistently followed. Ever since that year the principle of stare decisis has been rigorously attempted to be followed.

Now in these Provinces two kinds of custom of pre-emption generally prevail. The first is of a kind where it is the duty of every co-sharer before he sells his property to offer it to the other co-sharers in a certain prescribed order. The other kind of custom is that when a property has gone out of the hands of the co-parcenary body by a sale to a stranger certain classes of pre-emptors have a right to pre-empt the sale in a certain order of priority. Under the second kind there is no right inter se, that is to say, no right of pre-emption, when a sale takes place in favour of any of co-sharers, but there is a priority of claim when rival suits of pre-emption are instituted against a stranger transferee. That both these kinds of custom do exist in these Provinces cannot for a moment be disputed.

Instances of the second kind of custom are to be found in cases like Sheobalak Singh v. Lachmidhar (11), Khatun Bibi v. Sayida Bibi (5), Narain Saran Singh v. Sidh Sarain Singh (12) as well as in a number of other cases to some of which I shall refer later on.

It has been well established that the burden of proving the custom lies on the plaintiff. The plaintiff pre-emptor cannot succeed by merely proving that a custom of pre-emption exists in the village. He has to show that that particular custom exists which would entitle him to a decree against the defendant vendee. The Pre-emption Bench has always held that if the only evidence which the plaintiff can produce is ambiguous, that is to say, is capable of two interpretations, and if on one of such interpretations the suit cannot succeed, then the suit must fail, and it is not the duty of the Court to give it necessarily the other interpretation which would entitle the plaintiff to a decree: vide the cases of Bechu Singh v. Lachmi Narain Singh (13), Jahangiri v. Amir Singh (14), Din Dayal v. Ramdhan (15) and Nageshar Prasad v. Ram Harakh Pande (16).

In the present case the wajib-ul-araz contains a clause which when literally translated runs as follows: "The claim to (or suit for) a right of pre-emption in case of transfer of property by sale and mortgage, except a gift, shall be first, to own brother and nephew and then a paternal uncle's son, a partner in the property, then co-sharers in the thok and then co-sharers in the village." ("Dawa haqqi shufa dar surat intiqal haqiat ba zaria bai wa rehan sewar heba arwal bhai bhatija haqqi phir bhai chachazad sharik haqiat phir hissadaran thok phir hissadaran gaon ko hoga.") With the other portion of the clause I am not concerned at this stage.

It is clear that the clause is not like the clauses which are found in many wajib-ul-araz and which say that in case a co-sharer wishes to transfer his property he should offer it first to one class of co-sharers and then to another class. Obviously in such latter cases, if no offer is made to the first class of co-sharers, the condition is broken, which gives a co-sharer of the first class a right of pre-emption even if a sale takes place in favour of a co-sharer of the second class. In the present case the right comes in after the transfer has taken place. If the word "transfer" in the clause were given its wide meaning so as to include even a transfer to any of the classes of pre-emptors mentioned therein, the clause as it stands cannot in its entirety be operative. For instance, let us substitute the words "transfer to own brother" in place of the word "transfer," the clause would then read "in case of transfer to own brother of property by sale and mortgage except a gift, first own brother and nephew and then a paternal uncle's son, a partner in the property and then co-sharers in the thok and then co-sharers in the village shall claim right of pre-emption." Such a provision is of course absurd. Similarly if for the word "transfer," we substitute "transfer to any of the other classes of pre-emptors mentioned," part of the clause would be meaningless, as no right of pre-emption can exist in favour of persons of that class or an inferior class.

The learned Counsel for the respondents is accordingly, forced to admit that in such cases either the whole or a portion of the clause must be omitted as being inapplicable. It follows that if we give the word "transfer," its general meaning so as to include transfers to persons mentioned in the various categories, then the whole clause as it stands may not be applicable. On the other hand, if no portion of this clause is to be omitted in any possible case, then the only meaning which can consistently be given to the word "transfer" would be a transfer to a person not coming within the categories mentioned.

No case has been brought to our notice which contains a clause similar to the one before us, and where it has been held that there is necessarily a right of preference inter se. The cases referred to by the Court below as well as the cases cited in argument on behalf of the respondents are all cases where the clause expressly provided that the vendor should offer or transfer his property first to one class of co-sharers and then to another class. In such cases if the transfer or the offer is not made to the first class of pre-emptors then the custom has not been complied with and the members of that class have a right to claim pre-emption even though the sale has been made to co-sharers in other categories. On the other hand there are at least three cases which support the view that a wajib-ul-arz of this kind is at least capable of an interpretation that the right was intended to be given only when a sale had taken place in favour of a person other than those coming within the categories mentioned therein. This would imply that at least one meaning of the wajib-ul-arz may be that when a transfer of property has taken place by sale or mortgage other than a gift then among the persons who will have the right to institute a suit would be first own brothers and nephews, then paternal uncle's sons, then co-sharers in the property, then co-sharers in the thok and lastly co-sharers in the village. The last mentioned co-sharers would not have been mentioned unless the transfer under contemplation was one in favour of a stranger.

This was the view clearly expressed in the case of Mathura Singh v. Ramlal Singh (6). Tudball, J., (who had been a member of the Pre-emption Bench from the very beginning of its constitution) joined in coming to the conclusion that a wajib-ul-arz of that kind was ambiguous and capable of two interpretations and that, therefore, the plaintiff pre-emptor could not succeed. This case was referred to subsequently by Lindsay, J., and myself in the case of Dhanraj Misir v. Rameshwar Misir (8) which, though different on facts, is certainly a case where the distinction sought to be drawn by the Pre-emption Bench was very prominently brought out, and the earlier case of Mathura Singh v. Ramlal Singh (6) distinguished. I may note that the wajib-ul-arz in the case reported as Mathura Singh v. Ramlal Singh (6) was very much similar to the one before us. We have sent for the record of that case and the words of the wajib-ul-arz were as follows—"In the case of transfer of property the claim to (or suit for) pre-emption shall be first to heirs descended from a near common ancestor, then to co-sharers in the patti, and after them to co-sharers in the 'village'. (Bahalat intiqal haqiyat kisi hissadar ke, dawa shufa pahle wamsan ekjaddi qaribi zan bad hissadaran patti pas az shurkayan mauza ko paunchhega)"

In the case of Ganpat Rai v. Jamna Prasad (S. A. No. 78 of 1924, decided on the 31st of January 1924) the Pre-emption Bench (Lindsay, J., and myself) had before it the wajib-ul-arz which was almost identical in its terms with the one in the present case. The words of the wajib-ul-arz in the latter case were as follows, "The claim to (or suit for) a right of pre-emption in the case of transfer of property by sale and mortgage, except a gift, shall be, first, to own brother and nephew, a paternal uncle's son, a partner in the property, then, co-sharers in the thok and then co-sharers in the village." "Dawa haq shufa ka dar surat intiqal haqiyat bazaria bai idā rehan sewar heba ke awwal bhar bhatiya heqar, aur phir bhar chachazad sharik haqiyat aur phir shunkayan patti zan bad hissadaran deh ko hoga".

It is apparent that with the exception of two or three synonymous words all the words were exactly identical with the words in the wajib-ul-arz before us. That case also came from the same district, Mainpuri. It was held therein that the terms were ambiguous and capable of two interpretations, and that the plaintiffs' suit must, therefore, fail.

I find it impossible, therefore, to distinguish the present case from the case reported as Mathura Singh v. Ram Lal Singh (6) and Ganpat Rai v. Jamna Prasad (S. A. No. 78 of 1924). It is also noteworthy that in all these three wajib-ul-araz the word "dawa" is used which in ordinary parlance means a 'suit', and that word does not occur in any of the cases cited on behalf of the respondents.

Now that the Pre-emption Act has been passed and all subsequent cases would be governed by it, cases of the present kind have lost much of their importance. But as regards cases which are not yet governed by the new Act, I would consider it lamentable if this High Court is to accept two different interpretations of wajib-ul-araz of exactly the same language and prepared at the same Settlement in the same district. And, therefore, even if I had entertained any doubt as to the correctness of the interpretation, which was adopted in the cases referred to by me, I would not have felt inclined to deviate from that interpretation. My conclusion is that the documentary evidence adduced by the plaintiffs in this case was capable of two interpretations according to one of which the plaintiffs' claim cannot be decreed. The evidence was, therefore, wholly insufficient to establish the claim against the defendants.

The suit also fails on another ground. After reciting the right of pre-emption, the same clause goes on to add, "gift will be made in favour of an own brother and nephew or daughter's son or for a charitable purpose and not otherwise". This is a part of the same clause which records a right of pre-emption. It is intended to lay down that gift to persons other than those mentioned therein or for the purposes mentioned therein are altogether invalid. It is obvious that such a rule cannot be the result of the growth of a custom. It has been held in a number of cases [vide Fazal Husain v. Muhammad Shariff (17), Saraj Bali Singh v. Mohammad Nasir (18) and Balwant Singh v. Hari Singh (10) as well as the recent Full Bench case of Randhir Singh v. Rajpal Misir (9)], that if the clause of pre-emption contains matters which cannot possibly be a record of custom, then the ordinary presumption which arises that the entry is one of custom, is negatived. Here we have a part of the clause which cannot possibly be the result of the growth of a custom. It follows, therefore, that there is internal evidence to show that the entry in paragraph 14 cannot be a record of custom. It is also noteworthy that the word "custom" itself is not mentioned in paragraph 14. The exact year when this wajib-ul-arz was prepared is not given in the copy, but it is noted therein that this is a record of the former Settlement. The entry, therefore, if it was a record of contract, cannot now be in force as that Settlement has come to an end.

In my opinion, therefore, on both these grounds the appeal should be allowed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed.

The respondents have filed certain cross-objections, but they are not pressed. In the view which I have taken they also could not have been allowed.

By the Court.—The appeal is allowed and the claim of the plaintiffs-respondents dismissed with costs here and hitherto including in this Court fees on the higher scale. The cross objection is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Mr. Nilkant Atmaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. H B. Gumaste, for Respondent No 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff to recover possession of the lands mentioned in the plaint on the ground that the sale-deed executed by her husband on the 13th December 1913 in favour of defendant No 1 was merely a paper transaction and was not intended to be operative. The plaint referred to misrepresentation and fraud on the part of defendant No 1, but no further particulars of the alleged fraud or misrepresentation were given, and in substance the suit was based on the ground that the transaction was an inoperative and hollow transaction. The defendant No 1 was the step-uncle of Gurubasappa, the husband of the minor plaintiff, and the suit is filed by the plaintiff's next friend, her father, Sangappa Basappa.

The defendant No 1, who is the principal defendant, contended that it was a genuine and real sale by Gurubasappa to him, that it was passed for valuable consideration, and that he was rightfully in possession. He also contended that the claim was time-barred under Arts. 91 and 95 of the Indian Limitation Act. The issues framed on those pleadings were these :—

1. Whether the conveyance, Exhibit 16, was intended to transfer ownership over the lands mentioned therein to defendant No. 1 as alleged by him?

2. Whether he paid any and what consideration therefor?

4. Whether the suit is barred by Art. 91 of the Limitation Act?

The learned Trial Judge was satisfied on the evidence that the conveyance was not intended to transfer ownership over the lands mentioned in Exhibit 16, and that in fact it was a hollow transaction. He also held that the consideration of Rs. 600 was not proved. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim for possession and mesne profits.

The defendants appealed to the District Court, and the learned First Class Subordinate Judge, with appellate powers who heard the appeal, came to the conclusion that Exhibit 18, which is a yad, said to have been passed by defendant No. 1 after the execution of the sale-deed, was not admissible in evidence, as it was not registered. He also came to the conclusion that the evidence as to the payment of consideration was not "quite unreliable" and that the burden of proving the payment of consideration was wrongly thrown on the defendant. He ultimately came to the conclusion that the sale-deed was not proved to be hollow or to have been the result of any misrepresentation or fraud. He also held that under Art. 91 or 95 the claim of the plaintiff was barred. He accordingly allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court from the decree of the Appellate Court. The first point that has been urged in support of the appeal is that the lower Court was wrong in its view that Exhibit 18 was not admissible in evidence for want of registration. That document is in these terms :—

"To

Gurubasappa father Basangowda residing at Hireyarakkeri Pavti (lit. receipt)

to wit. The receipt passed by me Puchangowda father Huchangowda residing at Hireyarakkeri is as follows :—I shall without any objection give up your land at any time that you may ask me to give up. Dated 25th December 1913."

It is signed by defendant No. 1 and attested by two witnesses. We do not think that this document could be held to be inadmissible for want of registration. It is at the most an agreement to reconvey when Gurubasappa would ask him to give up the property. In the Trial Court when the objection was taken the point as to registration was disallowed and the document was admitted in evidence on the footing of its being an agreement after the usual penalty for want of stamp was paid. We are not at all sure that the document in terms comes under section 17 (b) or (c), Indian Registration Act. It does not purport to do any of the things mentioned in that section, clause (b) or (c). But even if it did, it seems that it would clearly be saved under clause (v), sub-section (2) of section 17 of the Indian Registration Act.

As to the execution of this document, the Trial Court found that it was duly proved. That Court disbelieved the evidence of the witness Jaffar, one of the attesting witnesses, and believed the evidence of Basappa, as to the execution. and defendant No. 1 admitted his signature on it.

No objection seems to have been taken before the lower Appellate Court as to the genuineness of this document and in any case as there is no finding on that point, it is open to us under section 103 of the Civil Procedure Code to determine, if necessary, the question as to whether this document was executed by defendant No. 1.

We have heard Mr. Gumaste for the respondent No. 1 on this point, and we have heard nothing from him which would go to show that the finding of the Trial Court on this point is open to any objection. The Trial Court was perfectly right in its conclusion that the document was executed by defendant No. 1, SANGAWA V. HUCHANGOWDA.

As the document is admissible in evidence and as the decision of the lower Appellate Court is based upon the view that it ought to be excluded from evidence, it seems to us that the findings of the lower Appellate Court cannot be accepted. It is difficult to say that the lower Appellate Court could have come to the conclusion at which it arrived, if it had been of the opinion that this document, Exhibit 18, was admissible in evidence. That document affords very strong proof of the case made by the plaintiff that the sale-deed of December 1913 was intended to be a mere paper transaction. Indeed the document does not even mention that Huchangowda will have no objection to give up the land at any time if he was called upon to give up the same on payment of any sum. But it is an unconditional undertaking on his part to give up the land when called upon to do so, which is consistent only with the view that at the time no consideration really passed.

The next point to be considered with reference to the main question of fact as to whether the transaction was a hollow transaction or not, is whether there was any consideration for it. On that point the Trial Court came to the conclusion that no consideration was proved to have been paid. Issue No. 2 on this point was not framed in a proper way. Undoubtedly the burden in the first instance lay upon the plaintiff. But on the evidence adduced by both the parties, the case made by defendant No. 1 as to how the consideration was made up had to be considered. According to the defendant's allegation the sum of Rs. 600 was paid in three parts, each consisting of Rs. 200. The learned Judge dealt with each item of consideration in detail, and came to the conclusion with reference to each that the story was not reliable, and that the allegation was not proved. In the document itself there is no such specification of the consideration.

The Appeal Court has dealt with the question of consideration in a halting manner. As to the item of Rs. 200 said to have been paid to Sangappa Kelur, the learned Judge has referred to Exhibit 68, which is the judgment of the mamlatdar in a vahivati suit. With regard to the sum of Rs. 200 said to have been paid to Gurubasappa himself, the learned Judge has relied upon the evidence of Jaffer which was disbelieved in terms by the Trial Court, and that too because in his opinion the other two items are proved. As regards the third item of Rs. 200 said to have been paid to one Sangabasappa Gardi, the lower Appellate Court simply refers to the fact that the account-books show a payment of Rs. 177, but does not deal with the further difficulty in the case that the payment evidenced there appears to have been made in the month of May, 1914, whereas according to defendant No. 1, the sum was paid on the day after the sale-deed of December 1913. The lower Appellate Court relies upon the evidence of Jaffer, which was entirely disbelieved by the learned Trial Judge who saw him in the witness box. In fact the learned Trial Judge referred to that part of the story as being clearly an after-thought on the part of defendant No. 1.

On a close examination of the judgment of the lower Appellate Court on this point it seems to us that the finding as to consideration cannot be accepted in second appeal. No doubt the question would still remain as to whether under the circumstances it is necessary to call for a fresh finding on the question from the lower Appellate Court, or we should deal with the case here. Having regard to all the circumstances and particularly to the fact that Huchangowda agreed to give up the lands at any time when he was called upon to do so, it seems to us to be unnecessary to remand the case for any fresh finding.

We have considered the case as stated in the judgment of the Trial Court and having regard to the reasons given by the lower Appellate Court on the question of consideration, it seems to us to be unnecessary to remand any issue to the lower Appellate Court on this point. Exhibit 18 puts quite a different colour upon the whole case, and after hearing the arguments urged on behalf of respondent No. 1, we are satisfied that as defendant No. 1 executed the yadi, and as that yadi is held to be admissible in evidence he has really no just or honest answer to the plaintiff's present claim.

As regards the question of limitation it presents no difficulty. If this transfer was inoperative, and a mere paper transaction, it would not require to be set aside. It would be enough to refer on this point to the observations in Petherpermal Chetty v. Munandi Serrai (1) and to the decision of this Court in Narsigunda Saravanganda v. Chavaganda Adgunda Patil (2). The Article that would apply to a case of this kind where the document is found to be inoperative is Art. 144 and then the claim would be in time.

We reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Trial Court with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court on the respondents.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 91—Purchase of goods through commission agent—Consignment by Railway, uninsured—Loss in transit—Agent's liability—Interests Act (XXXII of 1839), whether exhaustive—Interest, award of—Discretion of Court.

A purchase of goods by a commission agent, implies as between the principal and agent, only a contract of agency and not one of purchase and sale, though it will attract to the commission agent certain reliefs ordinarily open to a vendor viz., the right of stoppage in transit. The property in the goods passes to the principal immediately on purchase by the agent irrespective of the manner of delivery. To such a case section 91 of the Contract Act does not apply [p. 538, col. 1].

The measure of reasonableness as to the method of delivery of goods as between agent and principal has to be decided on what the parties themselves in their usual course of business and trade custom consider reasonable. It is not the same as that laid down in section 91, Contract Act, as between vendor and purchaser [p. 538, cols. 1 & 2].

Where a commission agent for a buyer was usually sending goods to him uninsured without objection and certain goods so consigned were lost in the way.

Held, that the property in the goods on purchase passed to the buyer, and non-insurance being the implied customary method, the agent by sending goods uninsured was not guilty of any negligence and was not liable to bear the loss. [p. 538, col. 2].

The Interests Act is not exhaustive of all cases in which interest is allowable. The award of interest is more or less a matter of discretion for the Court and not a matter of law [ibid].

Muhammad Abdul Gaffur Rowther v. Hamida Beem Ammal, 52 Ind. Cas. 505, 42 M. 661, 25 M. L. T. 212, 30 M. L. J. 456, (1919) 41 W. N. 484, relied on.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kumbakonam, in A. S. No. 98 of 1919, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Kumbakonam, in O. S. No. 613 of 1917.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Iyer and K. V. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Duraisami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The original suit was to recover a sum of Rs. 1,691, principal and interest due on account of dealings by the defendants with the plaintiff in silk goods. It is not denied that the plaintiff was a commission agent in Bombay for the defendants at Kumbakonam, for the purchase of silk thread. In his capacity as such, the plaintiff had purchased two bundles of silk thread for the defendants and despatched them by rail to the defendants. One of them lost on the way. The plaintiff in his present suit for the balance due in the matter of his agency account included the price of the lost bundle. The defendants repudiate liability for this and claim that it was lost through the plaintiff's negligence in not insuring the bundle as required by Railway Rules to ensure safe transit of all parcels of such a nature whose value is over Rs. 100. The defendants also call in aid section 91 of the Indian Contract Act.

The District Munsif held that section 91 did not apply to a case of a commission agent and that no negligence had been proved. The lower Appellate Court held that section 91 applied and that the plaintiff had not followed its provisions and was guilty of negligence and the loss must fall on him.

The chief point argued in appeal by the plaintiff was whether section 91 applied to the case of a commission agent. Section 91 comes under Chapter VII, which is headed "Sale of Goods" and under the sub-heading "Delivery", and no doubt it applies to the case of an ordinary vendor and vendee. The question then is whether a commission agent and his principal stand on the same footing of vendor and vendee when goods have been purchased in the ordinary course of the agency by the commission agent for the principal and despatched to him. Defendants rely on the dictum of Lord Blackburn in Ireland v Livingston (1) that "it is quite true that the agent who in thus executing an order, ships goods to his principal, is in contemplation of law a vendor to him." The legal effect of the transaction between the commission merchant and the consignee, who has given him to the order, is a contract of sale passing the property from one to the other and consequently the commission merchant is the vendor and has the right of one as to stoppage in transitu. But the learned Judge goes on to point out that the contract between principal and agent is in no way superseded by this quasi-sale but that "this superseded sale is not in any way inconsistent with the contract of agency existing between the parties".

This dictum has been explained in a later case by Brett, M. R., and Fry,

L. J., in Cassaboglou v. Gibb (2). It is clear from the notes of argument in that case that the question was clearly raised whether, if any foreign agent has purchased goods for his principal and shipped them, the position of the agent to his principal is not that of vendor and purchaser. The other side there pointed out that there was no contract such as would be between a vendor and a purchaser, that the plaintiff should have the goods, whether or not they were procurable and that it had never been decided that damages for any breach of duty by an agent was to be assessed on the same principle as they are in the case of a vendor and purchaser. The clear question which the Master of Rolls put to himself there was, was a breach of duty by an agent as agent not a breach of contract as vendor and, if there was a breach what damages has the plaintiff suffered thereby? And the idea that the plaintiff was entitled to get damages as though his agent was a vendor bound to supply him with the goods ordered by him was negatived. It was pointed out that Lord Blackburn "has not said that as long as the contract between principal and agent is executory, the principal can sue the agent and make him pay as though the contract was that of vendor and purchaser," and the learned Judge goes on to say "It is obvious to my mind that the contract of principal and agent is never turned into a contract of vendor and purchaser, for the purpose of settling the damages for the breach of duty of the agent." No doubt it can be argued that in that case, since the agents did not ship the goods ordered but inferior ones, they can never have been in the position, as regards their consignee, of a vendor; while in this case the plaintiff did send the actual goods ordered.

I can find nothing in these judgments—tending to show that the legal effect of the transaction of a purchase of specified goods by a commission agent has the effect of turning his contract as between principal and agent wholly into one as between vendor and purchaser. They imply only that the agency contract is in some respects analogous to that of a contract of purchase and sale; and not identical with it, analogous in the sense that it will attract to the commission agent certain reliefs ordinarily open to a vendor, for example the right of a stoppage in transitu. On the other hand property in goods specified would pass to the principal immediately on purchase by the agent. The passing of the property in the goods would not depend on the manner of the delivery.

Let us take a case where the principal has definitely instructed his agent to purchase and forward specified goods by railway without the insurance insisted on by the railway as the price of its responsibility for the carriage, I do not imagine it would be reasonably contended that section 91 would nevertheless apply, on the principle that the agency contract was, on consignment by the agent, wholly converted into a contract as between vendor and purchaser. Clearly the agency contract and its terms are throughout the dominating feature of the transaction and damages for loss are to be calculated on the footing of that, and not as between vendor and purchaser. I am, therefore, clear that section 91, Indian Contract Act, does not in terms apply to the case. Hence if plaintiff is liable for the loss it must be on proof of negligence or proof of breach of duty as agent.

It is then argued that even if section 91 does not apply in terms, the principle of it applies, that is, that the plaintiff as agent was bound to take reasonable care in the despatch of the goods, and that reasonable care is what has been statedly set out in section 91, that the plaintiff having neglected to despatch the goods in such manner that his principal could hold the carrier responsible for safe delivery, is guilty of the negligence involved. Now I am clear that it cannot be laid down in all cases that the measure of reasonableness as between agent and principal is what is laid in section 91 as the proper method of delivery as between vendor and purchaser. It has to be decided on what the parties themselves in their usual course of conduct and trade custom considered reasonable. It is in evidence here that not only before the loss but even after it, the defendants have sent similar orders for silk thread valued at over Rs. 100 and have received them, sent uninsured, in the same manner from the plaintiff. The non-insurance was clearly acquiesced in by the principal prior to this loss and after it, and the plaintiff even after this loss has not received any instructions that such goods should be sent insured. I conclude the non-insurance was the implied customary method. I see no reason, therefore, to hold that the plaintiff is guilty of negligence in sending them in the manner, implicitly, if not explicitly, approved of by his principal, who was evidently prepared to take the risk of loss. He has implicitly told the plaintiff that he does not want the goods to be sent insured and he cannot, while refusing thus to incur the cost of insurance, put the whole risk of the loss on the plaintiff and charge him with negligence in following his own implicit instructions.

I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff is entitled to the value of the lost silk bundle and that the lower Appellate Court's decision on this issue was wrong. I, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif on this point. Plaintiff will get his costs throughout.

There is a memo of cross objections filed by the defendants that the plaintiff is not entitled to the interest decreed by the lower Courts, the contention being that he is not entitled to any interest at all. It is urged that no custom to charge interest on the agency account is alleged or proved, and that no demand for interest was made. The charging of interest is not excluded by the Interests Act which is not exhaustive of all cases in which interest is allowable—See Muhammad Abdul Gaffur Routher v Hamida Beem Ammal (3), where the matter is discussed at length. It follows that the award of interest is more or less a matter of discretion for the Court and not a matter of law. Both the lower Courts have on the evi-

For the purpose of section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, an appeal is a continuation of a suit [p 540, col 1]

In order to attract the operation of section 10, Civil Procedure Code, it is necessary that every matter in dispute should be directly and substantially in issue in the two suits. Application by the defendants under section 10, Civil Procedure Code

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Dipchand Chandmal, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 10, Civil Procedure Code, for the stay of Suit No 1138 of 1920 pending in this Court on the ground of a prior suit filed in the Court of the First Class Sub Judge, Delhi, which is between the same parties and in which the matter in issue is directly and substantially in issue in the suit filed in this Court

The facts of the case are similar to those set out by me in my order in Jai Narain Babu Lal v. Naraindas Janimal (1) except that in the present case Jai Narain Babulal instead of referring the disputes between him and Nathoomal Manoharlal to arbitration, has filed a suit against the latter for the recovery of damages for failing to take delivery of certain white Mulls which they had contracted to purchase. The suit in this Court was filed on the 26th October 1920. Now on the 14th May 1920 the firm of Nathoomal Manohar Lal filed a suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Delhi, asking for a declaration that there was no contract between the parties, that in any case the contract was void and unenforceable and that an injunction be issued against the defendants restraining them from referring the disputes to arbitration. (It may here be mentioned that the written contract between the parties contain the usual reference clause to arbitration and that Jainaram Babulal had expressed their intention of referring the disputes to arbitration). This suit was dismissed on a preliminary point on the 23rd October 1920 and an appeal was filed on the 19th January 1921 which has been admitted to regular hearing in the High Court, Lahore, and is at present pending. A written statement has been filed to the suit in this Court though no issues have yet been framed. Two main points which are identical in both the suits are (1) that there was no contract between the parties and (2) that in any event the contract is void by reason of fraud and misrepresentation. The other issues in the two suits would be divergent. In the suit in this Court apart from the issue as to jurisdiction, the Court would have to try the question as to the quantum of damages and whether the real sale was justified and none of these points arise for decision in the Delhi suit. Further Mr. Rupchand has contended that in the Delhi suit the main relief sought was for an injunction to restrain Jainarain Babulal from proceeding to arbitration and that it is necessary before a suit is directed to be stayed under section 10, Civil Procedure Code, that not only some but all the matters in issue are identical in the two suits. Two preliminary observations may be made (1) that though the Delhi suit has been disposed of yet an appeal has been filed against the judgment of the lower Court and has been admitted, and an appeal is reckoned as a continuation of the suit and (2) section 10 has now been made applicable though the relief claimed in the subsequent suit is not the same as that in the first suit. Now the object of section 10 is to prevent Courts of concurrent jurisdiction from simultaneously trying two parallel suits in respect of the same matter in issue. As said in the case of Balkrishnan v. Kishan Lal (2) "the policy of the law is to confine the plaintiff to one litigation, thus obviating the possibility of contradictory verdicts by two or more Courts." Section 10 lays down that "no Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties". Must the words "the matter in issue" be taken as comprising all the points in issue between the parties? Various judgments reported in the Volumes of Indian Cases have been cited by the respective Pleaders.

Mr Dipchand argued that the words "the matter in issue" as used in section 10 means any of the matters in issue, and it is not necessary to justify the application of the section that all the matters in issue should be identical. It is remarkable that no decided case pertinent to the point is to be found in the Indian Law Reports, but there is a judgment of an eminent Judge, Sir Austosh Mukerjee reported in 36 Indian Cases 641 [Behari Behary Mozumdar v. Jogendra Chandra Ghosh (3)] where it was held that the expression "the matter in issue" has reference to the entire subject in controversy between the parties and that if it was the intention of the framers of the section to hold the expression as equivalent to any of the questions in issue, as Mr Dipchand now contends, appropriate words might have been used to bring out such sense. This view of the words "matter in issue" has been adopted in Sital Singh v. Sital Baksh Singh (4) and in Kesho Prasad Singh v. Shiva Saran Lal (5) where it was held that "in order to attract the operation of section 10 it was necessary that every matter in dispute should be directly and substantially in issue in the two suits." Lastly there is a judgment of the Bench of this Court which is binding on me, Civil Revision Appeal No 62 of 1920 [Kurparam v. Dataran Munshiram] where it was held that section 10 did not apply "as the whole matters in issue in the Karachi suit were not directly and substantially in issue in the Sialkote suit." The only case on which Mr. Dipchand has relied as justifying his interpretation of the words "the matter in issue" is Wahid Ali v. Nusrat Ali (6) where it was held that there should be in both suits or in the suit and appeal some matter which is directly and substantially in issue in both cases. This is the judgment of a Single Judge and at any rate I am bound by the judgment of our High Court.

The result is that I must reject the application for stay with costs.

This order governs No 1277 of 1920.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Saugor, dated the 3rd July 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 32 of 1923.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. V. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this appeal are extremely simple and only one question of law arises.

The plaintiff and the defendant are related, their wives being sisters.

The plaintiff lives at Lucknow and the defendant at Saugor. The plaintiff's father obtained a decree against a debtor at Saugor. In execution of that decree the judgment-debtor's house was attached and sold. The plaintiff wrote to the defendant at Saugor to obtain the permission of the Court to allow the decree-holder to bid and to purchase the house at the auction in the decree-holder's name. The defendant did not obtain the permission and purchased the house in his own name. For four years he admitted the plaintiff's title and then set up an adverse title in himself. The plaintiff sued for possession, but his suit was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by section 66, Civil Procedure Code, and on appeal the decree was confirmed by the District Judge, Saugor.

Plaintiff makes this second appeal.

The learned Counsel for appellant has quoted a very large number of rulings of all the High Courts and the Privy Council to show that the present suit is not one falling under section 66, which is meant solely to check benami transactions and does not apply where the purchase is made, not benami for plaintiff, but for the benefit of plaintiff.

In order to appreciate this distinction it will be necessary to deal with these rulings in detail.

Section 66, Civil Procedure Code, is to the following effect.

"(1) No suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court in such manner as may be prescribed on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims"

The second part of the section does not apply. This is not a suit to obtain a declaration that the name of the purchaser was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser. It is found by the Courts below that there was no fraud at the date of the purchase and for some years after, and the plaintiff was fully aware of what had taken place and raised no objection till the defendant denied his title, and, therefore, the plaintiff's consent must be presumed.

Admittedly the plaintiff asked the defendant to buy the property in the plain-tiff's name, it is true, but on the plaintiff's allegations it is clear that the purchase was made on his behalf.

Prima facie, therefore, section 66 applies. The learned Counsel for the appellant relies on the following cases:—

Bodh Singh Doodhoooria v. Guneschund-er Sen (1), Patrachariar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (2), *Aghore Nath Chuckerbutty v.

Vavilala Jalayya* (8), Sankunni Nayar v. Narayanan Nambudiri (9) and Kumbalinga Pillai v. Ariaputra Padirachi (10)

The respondent relies on Ganga Baksh v. Rudra Singh (11), Rama Kurup v. Sridevi (12) and Hanuman Persad Thakur v. Jadunandan Thakur (13). It may at once say that after reading all these cases the only one that gives rise to any difficulty is Patrachariar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (2) and I will deal with that last.

The first case quoted, Bodh Singh Doodhoortia v. Guneschunder Sen (1), lays down that the provisions of section 260 of Act VIII of 1859 (which correspond to section 66 of the present Code) were designed to check the practice of making benami purchase at execution sales and cannot be taken to affect the rights of members of a joint Hindu family, who, by the operation of law, are entitled to treat as part of their common property an acquisition, howsoever made, by a member in his sole name, if made by the use of the family funds.

This has no application to the facts of the present case.

Aghore Nath Chuckerbutty v. Ram Churn Chuckerbutty (3) has no application. The facts were that at a sale in execution of a decree against the plaintiffs, the Pleader who had acted for the plaintiffs purchased their property with his own money, but in the name of his clerk and; for a very inadequate sum.

The remedy that was asked for was not against the certified purchaser, which at once distinguishes it from the present case and the suit was not upon the ground that the purchase was made by the Pleader "on behalf" of the plaintiffs.

Lokhee Narain Roy v. Kallypuddo Bandopadhyaya (4) was a suit by the certified purchaser against the real owner who was in possession.

Section 66, Civil Procedure Code, deals only with a suit against the certified purchaser, like the present. Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (5) lays down that section 317 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, is designed to create some check on the practice of making so-called benami purchases at execution sales for the benefit of judgment-debtors and in no way affects the title of persons otherwise beneficially interested in the purchase. That was a case of joint decree-holders, one of whom purchased the property at the sale. This differentiates it from the present case.

Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (6) does not deal with the point at all, except for a few lines, holding that section 317 of Code of 1882 applies to certain property purchased at auction. No details are given, and the rest of the judgment deals with the Hindu Law of the joint family.

Ramathar Vadivelu Mudaliar v. Peria Mamicka Mudaliar (7) approving Amrutam Venkatappa v. Vavilala Jalayya (8) is a case in which fresh agreements were made to convey subsequent to the purchase, and I may remark that on page 649* their Lordships seemed disposed to hold that if the agreement entered into before the auction stood alone, the suit would be barred by section 66, Civil Procedure Code. They say: "The object of section 66 was to put an end to purchases by one person in the name of another, and the distinction between a purchase on behalf of another, and a purchase coupled with an undertaking to convey to another at the price of purchase, is somewhat narrow." I draw special attention to these words because in some of the cases referred to above the object of the section has been stated to be the prevention of benami purchases on behalf of the judgment-debtors, and it might be urged that benami purchases on behalf of the decree-holder should be looked on less unfavourably. But their Lordships of the Privy Council have in this very recent case in unequivocal language laid down that the section is meant to put an end to purchases by one person in the name of another, whoever he may be. This case was expressly decided on the reasons laid down in Amrutam Venkatappa v. Favallala Jalayya (8) that an agreement subsequent to a purchase is not affected by the section and this differentiates it from the present case.

Sankunni Nayar v. Narayanan Nambudri (9) is a case of a purchase by the manager of an infant and is based on the fact that he bought the land as such.

Kumbalinga Pillai v. Ariaputra Padiachi (10) is also a case of an agreement by the certified purchase to execute a conveyance to the plaintiff.

It will thus appear that all the decisions quoted by the learned Counsel for the appellant are distinguishable from the present case, and I now proceed to consider the case of Patrachariar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (2) which at first sight seems to support his contentions.

I may briefly refer to a local case quoted by the appellant's Counsel, Abdulla Khan v. Jalam Singh (14), which lay down that section 66, Civil Procedure Code, does not make benami transactions illegal. That is not the point in the present case. The case on which the appellant chiefly relies is Patrachariar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (2). It lays down that section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, is not bar to a suit brought by the principal against the agent for the recovery of properties purchased by the agent in his own name but with the principal's money and for the principal's benefit in a Court auction, though without the knowledge of the principal.

If the plaintiff does not seek relief on the ground that the certified purchaser is a namelender, but relies on a certain state of facts as establishing certain other kinds of legal relations between himself and the certified purchaser, and entitling him to the property purchased, he can rely on such facts and circumstances notwithstanding section 66 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the facts of this case are exactly similar to those of the present case.

The facts in that case were that the defendant was the paid agent of the plaintiff, that the plaintiff obtained a decree against the judgment-debtor to whom the plaintiff house belonged and that in execution of that decree the plaintiff house was sold and purchased by the first defendant with his master's money in his hands and for the benefit of his master, the plaintiff, though without the knowledge of his master.

It will appear, therefore, that the plaintiff did not instruct the defendant to buy the house for him, and that it was purchased without his knowledge. Sadasiva Aiyar, J., appeared to have felt some doubt on the point, for he admitted that if section 66 had to be construed in an absolutely literal manner there would be very great force in the contention of the appellant that it barred the suit, because on such construction the plaintiff could not succeed in this suit except on the ground that the purchase by the first defendant was made by him on behalf of the plaintiff as the plaintiff's agent. The Judges, however, considered that the point was covered by the authority of the Privy Council in Bodhi Singh Doodhoo-ria v. Guneschander Sen (1) and Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (5) and that the same view had been taken by the Madras High Court in Sankunni Nayar v. Narayanan Nambudri (9) and Kumbalinga Pillai v. Ariaputra Padiachi (10) the facts of which last case they considered to be in principle on all fours with the present case.

I have already discussed all these cases in the preceding portion of this judgment. I have already pointed out that Bodh Singh Doodhooia v. Gunesh-chunder Sen (1) is a case of the rights of members of a joint family to share in an acquisition made by one member, that Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (5) is a case of joint decree-holders, that Sankunni Nayar v. Narayanan Nambudri (9) was a case of the manager of an infant's estate, and that Kumbalanga Pillai v. Ariaputra Padachi (10) was a case of an agreement by the certified purchaser to execute a conveyance to the plaintiff. In each of these cases, therefore, there was some legal relation between the plaintiff and the certified purchaser other than that of a name-lender, and though I find it difficult to see the similarity between the facts in Patrachariar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (2) and those of Kumbalanga Pillai v. Ariaputra Padachi (10), I can appreciate that the fact of the defendant being plaintiff's agent and of the plaintiff having no knowledge of his purchase at the Court sale may furnish reasons for taking the case out of the operation of section 66, Civil Procedure Code.

In the present case, however, the defendant was not the plaintiff's agent except in respect of this particular transaction, nor was the purchase without his knowledge. On the contrary, it was at the plaintiff's request that defendant bid at the auction, though he did not carry out the plaintiff's instructions as regards the obtaining of permission for the decree-holder to bid, and purchased the property in his own name.

Paragraph 10 of the plaint states that the plaintiff's father and plaintiff acquired the ownership of the house by virtue of the purchase made by the defendant while executing the decree as their agent. The plaint further shows that the defendant was instructed to purchase the house in the name of his father.

It appears to me that every person who at the request of another purchases in his own name for the other's benefit becomes his agent for that particular transaction. If that takes the case out of the section, the section would be a nullity.

The plaintiff was the decree-holder and, therefore, could not purchase without permission. A decree-holder who has not got permission is, in my opinion, in precisely the same position as a decree-holder to whom permission has been refused, as in the case quoted by the lower Appellate Court, Ganga Baksh v. Rudar Singh (11).

The respondent further relies on Hanuman Persad Thakur v. Jadu Nandan Thakur (13).

In the present case it has been found that the defendant made the purchase on behalf of the decree-holder. It appears that the plaintiff gave the defendant's instructions to bid at the sale, after obtaining permission for the plaintiff to bid, it is true. None the less, had the defendant not had these instructions, he would possibly not have bid. It is clear that he purchased on behalf of the decree-holder under his instructions which is exactly what section 66 is intended to prevent. All the cases quoted to the contrary, with the exception of Patrachariar v. Ramaswami Chettiar (2) are clearly distinguishable, and that case may also be distinguished on the ground that the purchase was made without the knowledge of the decree-holder and hence could not be considered a benami transaction, while in the present case the purchase was made with the decree-holder's knowledge and under his instructions, though the instructions were not completely carried out.

In these circumstances I am of opinion that the view of the lower Appellate Court is correct. No question of equity arises, as, if the plaintiff succeeds, he will have successfully evaded the provisions of O. XXI, r. 72, Civil Procedure Code, to say nothing of section 66.

The appeal is consequently dismissed with costs.

Appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad Division at Sultanpur, dated the 14th March 1924.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Appellants.

ORDER.—This appeal was presented to me in Court on the 13th May 1924 by Mr. Hyder Husain, Barrister-at-Law on behalf of the appellants, Ram Autar and Rahmat, who are prisoners in Jail. Previous to this presentation, a petition of appeal was sent on their behalf by the officer in charge of the Jail to this Court and it was rejected summarily by one of the Judges of this Court on the 5th April 1924.

While presenting the present petition of appeal Mr. Hyder Husain contended that its entertainment was not barred by order of the 5th April already mentioned. I am unable to accept this contention. The latest ruling of this Court on the subject was given by Mr. Daniels, Permanent Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, in July 1921 and is reported as Gaya Din v. Emperor (1). Having regard to the practice which has prevailed in this Court for some years past, I am not prepared to disagree with the ruling just now mentioned. I may respectfully add that the view taken by Mr. Daniels is correct in law.

The procedure under which the learned Judge of this Court disposed of the petition of appeal received from Jail is expressly sanctioned by the provisions of section 421 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. His order was, therefore, valid in law and under section 430 of the Code, judgments passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal are final. The order of the learned Judge, therefore, cannot be re-opened by presenting the present petition of appeal. The matter was recently discussed at some length by the High Court at Allahabad in the case of Khali v. Emperor (2) and a previous decision of this Court in the case of Hulai v. Emperor (3) was not followed. I am of opinion that the view taken in the Allahabad case is a correct one. The appeal is, therefore, rejected.

to cheat the Government of India of large sums of money in respect of the supply of linseed oil, turpentine, and water-soluble oil, and of having thereby committed an offence punishable under sections 120B and 420, Penal Code", though not clearly worded, is capable of being interpreted as alleging one general conspiracy to commit an offence or offences under section 420, Penal Code, the three transactions mentioned constituting overt acts, from which the conspiracy might be inferred, and the defect in the charge is not fatal if the accused are fully aware of the charge being of one general conspiracy and not of three different conspiracies [p. 547, col. 1.]

A charge under section 420, Penal Code, should contain an allegation of the person or persons alleged to have been deceived and induced to part with property as the result of that deceit. [p. 569, col. 1.]

But where the charge against an accused is that he cheated the Government of India by dishonestly inducing the Government to deliver a cheque, the property of Government, in payment of fraudulent bills and thereby committed an offence under section 420, Penal Code, an omission to mention therein the person, or persons alleged to have been deceived and induced to issue the cheque, is not a fatal defect in the charge, if the accused is not misled and there is no failure of justice by reason of the omission. [ibid.]

If in the course of a transaction between two persons different false and fraudulent bills are presented for realization at different dates, that does not make them matters for so many different offences under section 120, Penal Code, inasmuch as an offence in relation to any one of them is not complete until the money is paid or the cheque is issued and if one cheque is obtained through the inducement of all such bills, there is only one offence and not so many different offences of cheating. [ibid.]

If in a charge intended to allege one general conspiracy, several transactions are mentioned in which the accused took part in pursuance of that conspiracy, they are to be taken as so many overt acts from which a general conspiracy to commit offences might be inferred. [ibid.]

The gist of the offence of criminal conspiracy to commit offences lies in the agreement or common intention of the accused and the question whether such an agreement or common intention exists, is a matter of inference to be deduced from the facts of the case and the acts of the accused proved in evidence and alleged to have been committed by them in pursuance of such agreement or common intention [p. 548, col. 1.]

If between the dates of different matters alleged as overt acts amounting to criminal conspiracy of the accused there are transactions by them which are not false or fraudulent, they are not inconsistent with the existence of a general conspiracy. [p. 568, col. 1.]

Under section 237, Criminal Procedure Code, an accused may be convicted of an attempt to commit an offence even though he has not been charged with it [p. 571, col. 1.]

However guilty an accused person may be, it is most undesirable that he should be subjected to the strain and anxiety of prolonged proceedings unless it is absolutely unavoidable, and such delay may be legitimately taken into consideration in passing the sentence. [p. 571, col. 2, p. 572, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 28th November 1922.

Mr. B. C. Chatterji, Babus Satindra Nath Mukerjee, Manmatha Nath Mukherjee and Bir Bhushan Dutt, for the Appellants in Appeals Nos. 646 and 649 1922.

The Advocate-General, Messrs. J. Camell, N. C. Sen and Babu Romoni Mohan Banerjee, for the Crown in Government Appeal No. 1 of 1923 and in Appeals Nos. 646 and 649 of 1922.

Mr. Arabinda Ray, Babus Satindra Nath Mukerjee and Santosh Kumar Pal, for the Respondent in Government Appeal No. 1 of 1923.

JUDGMENT.—Nos. 646 and 649 of 1922 are appeals by Billinghurst and Michael against conviction by the Chief Presidency Magistrate who found them guilty on each of the two charges and sentenced them to one year's imprisonment. Blackburn and Stoddart were charged with the same offences but were acquitted by the Magistrate.

The first charge is as follows:—"That you, J. Stoddart, H. P. Blackburn, P. E. Billinghurst, and P. H. Michael, during the period from June 1918 to July 1919, in Calcutta conspired with each other and with C. S. Waite and other persons unknown to commit an offence punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code, to wit, to cheat the Government of India of large sums of money in respect of the supply of linseed oil, turpentine, and water-soluble oil by Messrs. Spalding & Co., to the Munitions Board, Calcutta, and you thereby committed an offence punishable under sections 120B and 420, Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of my Court."

Objection was taken by learned Counsel on behalf of Billinghurst to the first charge on the ground that it contained allegations amounting to charges of three different conspiracies and that consequently it was a bad charge.

BILLINGHURST V. EMPEROR.

The learned Advocate-General admitted that the first charge might have been framed in a better and clearer manner but he contended that it was intended to allege one general conspiracy to commit an offence or offences under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code by cheating the Government of India of large sums of money and that the transactions in linseed oil, turpentine, and water-soluble oil were overt acts from which the conspiracy might be inferred.

It is clear from the judgment of the learned Magistrate that this was explained to the Counsel, who appeared for the accused at different periods of the trial. The petition of Billinghamurst, dated the 31st August 1921, paragraph No 38, stated as follows:—"That the charge against your petitioner is one of conspiracy to cheat and three overt acts are alleged in proof of that conspiracy—(1) in case of an order for linseed oil your petitioner supplied short measure; (2) in case of turpentine the price charged was excessive and that your petitioner had not the quantity of turpentine required in stock while representing that they had; (3) in case of an order for water-soluble oil the price was excessive and the quality was not up to sample. No money was paid in respect of this and is put forward as a case of an attempt to cheat."

The petition of all the accused dated the 8th December 1921, paragraph 20, was as follows:—"That in so far as the first count of the charges is concerned your petitioners have been advised and beg to submit that regard being had to the nature of the charge, which is one of a general conspiracy entered into by the said Mr. O. S. Waite and your petitioners to cheat the Government of India during the period of one year from June 1918 to July 1919, of large sums of money, and to the importance and magnitude of the same in which the Crown has engaged the services of the learned Advocate-General of Bengal from its very inception, it is desirable that the case should be tried by a Jury."

It is clear, therefore, that the accused fully understood the nature of the charge. In our judgment the first charge is capable of the meaning which was placed upon it by the prosecution and which every one connected with the trial thoroughly understood and consequently the objection raised by the learned Counsel cannot be sustained.

The next objection to the first charge was taken both by the learned Counsel appearing for Billinghamurst and the learned Vakil appearing for Michael.

It was urged that, assuming the first charge to be a charge of one general conspiracy, the prosecution had not proved it, but that if they had proved any conspiracy at all, they had proved three conspiracies, and consequently the first charge must fail.

This objection must depend upon the evidence and the inference to be drawn from the proved facts, and we will state our conclusion on this point after dealing with the facts of the case.

Another objection was taken by the learned Vakil that the charge alleged a conspiracy to commit an offence punishable under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code, to wit, to cheat the Government of India of large sums of money in respect of the linseed oil, turpentine, and water-soluble oil.

It was urged that in order to substantiate this charge it must be proved that there was an agreement to commit the offence of cheating under section 420, Indian Penal Code, in respect of each of the three transactions; that the facts proved in respect of the turpentine and water-soluble oil cases did not constitute cheating within the meaning of that section. In other words, that it was not proved that what the alleged conspirators intended was cheating within the meaning of the above-mentioned section 420, Indian Penal Code.

On behalf of the prosecution it was argued that it had been proved that such of the transactions, alleged as overt acts, if completed, would have constituted an offence under section 420 of the Indian Penal Code.

But it was further argued by the learned Advocate-General that in order to sustain the first charge, it was not necessary to prove that each, or indeed any of the above-mentioned transactions if completed, would have constituted an offence under section 420, but that it would be sufficient if the facts which had been proved and materials which had been placed before the Court showed that there was a criminal conspiracy between Waite and the two appellants to commit an offence or offences under section 420, Indian Penal Code, by cheating the Government of India of large sums of money.

There is no doubt that as regards the first charge the gist of the alleged offence, viz., a criminal conspiracy to commit an offence or offences under section 420, Indian Penal Code, lies in the agreement or common intention of Waite and the two appellants, and in our judgment, the question whether such an agreement or common intention existed, is a matter of inference to be deduced from the facts of the case and the acts of the parties which have been proved in evidence, and which are alleged to have been done by them in pursuance of such agreement or common intention.

It is necessary, therefore, to examine the facts of the case which are relied upon by the prosecution, and the explanations and defences put forward by the two appellants respectively.

We do not think it necessary to deal in detail with the numerous documents which have been referred to in this case. This has been done at great length by the learned Magistrate who tried the case, and our attention has been drawn to them many times during the hearing of the appeal by the learned Counsel and the learned Vakil, who appeared for the appellants, and the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Crown.

On the 2nd November 1917, Waite was appointed Deputy Controller of Inspection in connection with the Munitions Board at Calcutta.

His duties were to assist the Controller of Munitions at Calcutta, to apply an independent check on the quality of stores and materials procured under the Munitions Board's orders for various intending officers and to scrutinize and advise on the suitability of rates paid for them.

On the 2nd May 1918, in addition to the other duties, he was appointed purchasing officer as regards oils and manufactured metals. In such capacity it was his duty, on receiving an indent from the Indian Munitions Board, Sunla, to purchase the materials required. It was his duty to get the materials at the cheapest rate possible, as long as they were in accordance with the indent or specification. If firms asked too high a price it was open to Waite to ask the Controller to commandeer the materials, the price to be settled later by arbitration.

Waite went on leave on 23rd January 1919 and his service under the Munitions Board terminated on or about 23rd February 1919.

Michael was alleged to be a broker. From the evidence it appears that he was on intimate terms with Waite, he was frequently, almost daily, in Waite's office, and sometimes was seen at Waite's house. It was Michael who negotiated the business with which this case is concerned, all the orders from the Munitions Board having passed through Michael. He was also frequently in the office of Messrs Spalding & Co., and he was largely interested in the transactions which took place between the Munitions Board and Spalding & Co.

The total value of the orders given to Spalding & Co., was a little less than three lakhs and Michael's bills, according to his own statement, for excess rates and commission, amounted to no less than Rs. 49,777. We are satisfied on the evidence that in the transactions in question the position of Michael cannot be correctly described as that of a mere broker. The part taken by him in the various transactions will be dealt with when they are separately considered.

Billinghurst was a member and head of the firm of Messrs. Spalding & Co., and it was through the instrumentality of Michael that the firm obtained orders to the extent of about Rs three lakhs from the Munitions Board, which orders were given by Waite.

The first order in point of date was given to Spalding & Co., on the 15th June 1918, for 600 gallons of raw linseed oil and 1,000 gallons of double boiled linseed oil. On the day prior to that, viz., on the 14th June 1918, an agreement was entered into between Spalding & Co and Michael to the following effect:—

Letter, dated 14th June 1918, from Messrs. Spalding & Co. to Mr. Michael.

"Dear Sir.

"We confirm the arrangements made with you to-day and agreed upon, whereby we appoint you exclusively to represent us for the sale of boiled and raw linseed oils for which we have the sole selling rights, and also for the sale of varnishes and bithulithic paint manufactured by us and for any other paints, varnishes, and oils that we may be interested in hereafter upon the following terms —

"1. That we agree to pay you a commission of 1 per cent on orders for linseed oils on prices as per list handed you.

"2. We agree to pay you a commission of 2½ (two and-a-half) per cent. on all orders for varnishes and bithulithic paints on prices as per list handed you. That we agree to pay you the above commissions on all repeat orders for linseed oils, varnishes, and paints directly or indirectly received by us.

"3. That we further agree to pay you in addition to the commissions, as stated above on linseed oils, varnishes, and bithulithic paints any extra amount you may fix with the buyer and consumers on the prices quoted to you by us as per list.

"4. That all orders to be secured in the name of the firm of Messrs. Spalding & Co.

"5. That the agreement stands good for a period of 12 months from date provided we get reasonable orders

"6. In the event should you be unable to secure orders owing to illness or any other unforeseen circumstances, this agreement becomes null and void, but you shall continue to receive your commission and excess prices on all repeat orders.

"Yours faithfully,

"SPALDING & Co."

It was urged on behalf of the prosecution that there was no evidence to show that Messrs Spalding & Co. had any sole selling rights in respect of any linseed oils, and it was to be noted that the agreement referred not only to linseed oils but also to any other paints, varnishes, and oils that Spalding & Co. might thereafter be interested in.

It is not unreasonable to infer from this, as was urged by the prosecution, that Michael must have been in communication with Waite before the date of the agreement, inasmuch as on the 15th June 1918, in addition to the two orders already mentioned Messrs Spalding & Co. obtained orders from the Munitions Board for 50 gallons raw linseed oil, 80 gallons double boiled linseed oil, and 600 gallons Copal varnish.

On the 17th June 1918 Waite received an indent dated the 12th June 1918, from the Indian Munitions Board, Simla, for 150 tons of oil, linseed, genuine boiled. It was marked "Very urgent." The oil was to be shipped to the Deputy Controller, Transit for Munitions Board, Bombay. On the 20th June 1918 Waite gave an order for 50 tons of the oil to Messrs. Spalding & Co. at the rate of Rs. 3-12-0 per gallon and with a note in "cask of 40 gallons."

A suggestion apparently was made on behalf of the defence in the Trial Court that the words "in cask of 40 gallons" were not in the order when it was sent to Spalding and Co. and that they had been added after the documents were seized by the Police in order to support the case for the prosecution.

The evidence of J. N. Bhattacharjee, in our judgment, shows that the suggestion is without foundation, and that the words were placed on the order by him at the time the order was given and in consequence of the note appearing on Exhibit 42.

On the 27th June 1918 a further order of 100 tons of linseed oil was given by Waite to Messrs Spalding & Co. at the same rate, Rs. 3-12-0 per gallon.

Messrs Spalding and Co. had to purchase the oil in order to comply with these two orders. They got six consignments of oil from the firm of Mohin & Co. ranging from the 2nd July 1918 to 12th July 1918. The remainder of the oil was purchased from Messrs. Birla Brothers, the deliveries ranging from 4th July 1918 to 5th September 1918. Spalding & Co. paid for the oil purchased by them at a rate less than Rs. 3-12-0, viz., at about Rs. 3-8-0 or Rs. 3-8-9.

The net amount of oil received by Spalding & Co. and paid for by Spalding & Co. was 32,038 gallons or 32,029, it is not quite clear which is the correct figure. The oil was delivered in cask by Mohin & Co. and Birla Brothers direct to the Railway in Calcutta for transit to Bombay.

Spalding & Co. presented bills to the Munitions Board in Calcutta in respect of this oil for 39,975 gallons. In other words, taking the measure of about 9 lbs. to the gallon; which was the rate at which Spalding & Co. purchased from Mohin & Co. and Birla Brothers, they charged the Munitions Board for about 7,937 gallons of oil more than they purchased from Mohin & Co. and Birla Brothers. It is to be noted that this extra charge was made in respect of the identical casks of oil delivered by Spalding & Co.'s sellers to the Railway in Calcutta for transit to Bombay.

The prosecution case is that Spalding & Co. took the gross weight of the casks and the oil, reduced such gross weight to lbs., and then divided the total number of lbs. by 9; and thereby ascertained the number of gallons. The prosecution urged that by so doing Spalding & Co. were charging the Munitions Board for 7,937 gallons of oil which they had not delivered, and that such additional weight was represented by the weight of the casks for which Spalding & Co. charged, as if it were oil.

It was pointed out by the prosecution that if the gross weight of the various consignments is divided by 9, the resultant in gallons is the same as the number of gallons charged for by Spalding & Co., in their bills with a variation of a fraction in some instances.

The defence of Billinghamurst in this respect is that Messrs. Spalding & Co. did, not charge for the weight of the casks at the price of oil. It was stated that the number of gallons in each bill presented by Spalding & Co. was ascertained by taking the gallon to represent $7\frac{1}{2}$ lbs. and not 9 lbs. or thereabouts. It was contended that this measure was known in Calcutta, and that although Spalding &

Co. bought the oil at the rate of about 9 lbs. to the gallon, they were entitled to sell at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ lbs. to the gallon, especially as Spalding & Co. were to take the risk of the oil in transit to Bombay.

In support of Billinghamurst's case in this respect some documents which have been called EEEEE were put in on behalf of Billinghamurst at the trial for the purpose of showing how the number of gallons charged for was ascertained. The documents were put in cross-examination by the learned Counsel for Billinghamurst to a witness Ashutosh Dutt, who had been an Accountant in the firm of Messrs. Spalding & Co. They were not found by the Police when the search for documents was made at Spalding & Co.'s premises.

It appeared from Dutt's evidence that when Spalding & Co. were purchasing oil from Mohin & Co. and Birla Brothers, one of Spalding & Co.'s sircars used to be present at the weighing. He used to bring the difference of the tare weight on slips of paper and before bills were made out calculation used to be made on sheets of paper. The slips were alleged to represent the actual weight of the casks before they were filled with oil and the calculations were alleged to have been made in the handwriting of a lady typist. Neither the sircar nor the typist was called as a witness by the defence. Ashutosh Dutt, however, said he had no doubt that the slips were brought to him by the sircar and he knew the handwriting of the lady typist.

The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that the documents marked EEEE were not genuine and were fabricated for the purpose of the defence. He gave his reasons in full and we need not repeat them here.

The evidence of the witness Ashutosh Dutt was described as untrustworthy both by the learned Advocate-General and by the learned Vakil for Michael and in our judgment there are some valid reasons for that conclusion.

Mohin & Co.'s bills were not produced but Messrs. Birla Brothers in delivering the accounts to Spalding & Co. deducted the tare weight of the casks, the tare weight being given on each bill. Spald.

BILLINGHURST V. EMPEROR.

ing & Co. accepted these tare weights as correct. Yet it is to be noticed that in the calculations and documents known as the EEEE, Spalding & Co. allowed for the tare weight of the casks in every instance less than the tare weights given by Birla Brothers. Birla Brothers' tare weights were arrived at by weighing the casks before they were filled with oil, and it is not reasonable to suppose that they would allow Spalding & Co. more than the actual tare weight. It is, therefore, surprising to find that in the calculations EEEE, Spalding & Co. give the tare weights in all cases as less than those given by Birla Brothers. If this matter had been an honest and straightforward transaction and if Billinghamurst honestly thought they were entitled to charge the Munitions Board at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ lbs. per gallon instead of about 9 lbs. per gallon, we are at a loss to understand why Spalding & Co. did not take net weights of oil given by Birla Brothers arrived at after the deduction of the tare weights and divide the net weight by $7\frac{1}{2}$ in order to obtain the number of gallons.

If the matter was an ordinary business transaction there does not seem to have been any good or valid reason or necessity for the elaborate calculations contained in the Exhibit EEEE. But apart from this, we are of opinion that these documents contain in themselves evidence (as was pointed out by the learned Advocate-General) which goes to show that they were not genuine documents.

We, therefore, come to the conclusion that they were made for the purpose of the defence in this case.

In this connection it is necessary to notice an argument put forward by the learned Counsel for Billinghamurst; he argued that if we come to the conclusion that the Exhibits EEEE were not genuine documents, the Court should still hold on the evidence that Billinghamurst was not aware of the extra number of gallons charged for, and was innocent of any misrepresentation.

It is difficult to follow the argument; for if Billinghamurst was in fact innocent of any misrepresentation, as alleged, we do not understand why it was thought necessary to put forward documents which were not genuine, to support the method upon which, it was alleged, the bills were made out.

In our judgment the reason alleged for Spalding & Co. selling at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ lbs. to the gallon, when they bought at the rate of about 9 lbs to the gallon, viz., that Spalding & Co. were to take the risk of transit to Bombay, has no substance in it.

The 23 bills in respect of the supply of linseed oil were signed in the name of Spalding & Co. by Billinghamurst and were submitted by Spalding & Co. to Waite. The first twelve bills were sent direct by Waite to the Deputy Controller of War Accounts (Munitions Branch), Simla, the remainder were forwarded by Waite to Simla through the Deputy Controller of War Accounts (Munitions Branch), Calcutta.

Inasmuch as the order for the linseed oil was placed before the 1st August 1918, these bills were passed on by the Deputy Controller, War Accounts, Calcutta, without any audit or check in accordance with the practice then prevailing as to orders placed before August 1918.

In the office of the Deputy Controller of War Accounts, Simla, the audit officers passed the bills, the evidence of J. P. Dutt being that his only concern was to see that the bills were duly countersigned by the purchasing officer, who in this case was Waite, and that they were arithmetically correct.

The audit officers being thus satisfied, endorsed the bills and passed the amounts of the bills and another officer relying on the audit officer's endorsement, drew cheques for the bills. The bills were paid before the duplicate bills were received from Bombay.

It was urged on behalf of the appellants that the authorities at Bombay must have realized that the casks contained about 50 gallons each, according to the bills, which showed that the gallon must have been taken to be $7\frac{1}{2}$ lbs. and that they accepted these as a correct rate.

We are not prepared to accept this suggestion. The evidence shows that the Bombay authorities did not check the contents of the barrels, nor did they weigh them, unless there was something out of the ordinary, such as bad leakage.

Ordinarily the barrels were not weighed before being put into the ship, if there was no leakage.

If there was a leakage they checked the portion of the consignment in which the leakage occurred and in respect of the leakage only the weight.

The goods were checked as regards number of packages with the Railway Receipts and vouchers. In view of this evidence, it is not possible to hold that the authorities at Bombay accepted the weight of the oil as correct.

There are two entries in Spalding & Co's journal showing how the profits made in respect of the 23 bills for linseed oil were dealt with.

The first entry under date 29th October was cancelled and another entry under the same date appears on a subsequent page after another entry dated 13th November.

The second entry contains the words "being 23 bills made out by Mr Michael" and "now considered as part of profits" which were not in the first entry.

Ashutosh Dutt said in his evidence that both entries were made by him and that the second entry [Exhibit 85 (3)] was made by him because Michael asked him to write the entry.

Michael now disputes this: but he does not seem to have disputed it at the trial.

We do not understand, however, why Michael should be anxious to have it noted in the journal of Spalding & Co, that he had made out the bills.

The entry "now considered as part of profits" is applied to the "difference realized on excess measurement" and it is relied upon as supporting Michael's case that he was not aware of the excess measurement being made by Messrs. Spalding & Co. until after the bills were sent to Waite by Spalding & Co and that when he did ascertain this he claimed half the difference realized by reason of the excess measurement.

The entry is to this effect—

BILLINGHURST v. EMPEROR.

These entries show that in respect of the linseed oil transaction Michael was either paid or credited with Rs 8,673-0-3 in respect of the extra price which he obtained from the Munitions Board.

He obtained Rs 1,589-0-9 for commission, Rs. 4,500 as per his statement of 9th October 1918, and Rs 10,953-1-10½, which represented his half share of the difference realized by reason of excess measurement or a total of about Rs 25,715.

The statement of 9th October 1918, referred to, has not been produced and no explanation has been given in respect of what the Rs. 4,500 was recognised as payable to him. Spalding & Co. received in respect of these transactions a commission from the sellers of the oil and half the excess profits realized in respect of the excess measurement.

Michael gave a receipt on the 6th September 1918 to Spalding & Co for Rs. 10,000, being payment in part, viz, about 75 per cent of his share of the excess profit as arranged on linseed oil supplied to the Indian Munitions Board exclusive of the excess rate of three annas three pies per gallon and commission of one per cent, due and payable to him.

It was pointed out on behalf of the prosecution that this receipt of 6th September 1918, was given at or about the time of the last delivery of linseed oil in respect of the 150 tons and a considerable time before the Government of India made the final payment and that Michael then knew how much he was entitled to in respect of the excess profits by reason of the difference in measurement, inasmuch as, on the figures being ascertained, it appears that Rs 10,000 was only Rs 143 less than 75 per cent. of Michael's share.

Another receipt, dated the 19th December 1918, for Rs. 2,500, was given by Michael to Spalding & Co being further payment on account of certain bills for commission, difference in rates, and division of excess profits on double boiled linseed oil as per statement, and this was debited to his account and paid by cheque.

This transaction, even when considered by itself, is an extraordinary one and having regard to the above-mentioned facts, it is not possible to accept the suggestion put forward by Michael that he was a mere broker, and that the sums which he received were in respect of the services which he rendered as broker.

It is true that Ashutosh Dutt said that he posted these entries to the credit of Michael's "Commission Account"—which apparently is correct, inasmuch as the account to which these sums were credited was called "Commission Account."

In this case, however, the name under which the account was carried, conveys little indication of the real character of the transaction.

The question inevitably arises why Spalding & Co were willing to pay such large sums to Michael in respect of the transaction of linseed oil. No broker in the ordinary sense could possibly be entitled to such remuneration. He received 1 per cent commission, but over and above that commission he was allowed to receive the sum realized by the difference between the price quoted by Spalding & Co and the price paid by the Munitions Board for the oil and half the excess profits realized by the difference in measurement. In addition to these sums, the amount of Rs 4,500, in respect of which no explanation is forthcoming, was either paid or credited to him. The allegation of the prosecution is that this can only be explained by the fact that Michael was as much a principal as Billinghamurst.

The prosecution further point to the fact that Michael took part in the correction of some of the bills which were initialled by him, that he was constantly in Spalding & Co's office, and that in other transactions he had taken an active part in Spalding & Co's business; as for instance, the water-soluble oil case in which Michael had arranged with Grandage, Moir & Co., for the supply of 50 gallons of water-soluble oil to Spalding & Co.

We are satisfied that Michael was not a mere broker but that he was acting with Billinghamurst and that he knew as much as, if not more, than Billinghamurst as to the details and nature of the transaction in linseed oil.

There was no evidence of any of the money received by Michael in respect of this linseed oil transaction passing into the hands of Waite; and the learned Advocate-General admitted that if the case of linseed oil stood by itself it would not be sufficient to prove that Waite was involved in the conspiracy alleged by the prosecution, though he argued there was much ground for suspicion, having regard to Michael's intimacy with Waite, the large sums of money received by or credited to Michael, and the entire absence of explanation as to the reason why the Rs. 4,500 was paid to Michael, the suggestion being that some of the money must have been paid to Waite.

The evidence, however, goes to show that the checking of the bills in Waite's office was of a meagre kind.

The Accountant merely took the figures from the bill, satisfied himself that the rate was correct and then multiplied the number of gallons given in the bills by the rate and saw that the arithmetical calculation in the bills was correct.

The bills were then laid before Waite for signature and he signed them and the forwarding letter as well, relying on the clerks who placed them before him, and without making any calculation or check on his own account.

If the bills had been checked in Waite's office in a proper way, especially having regard to the note on the order that the casks were to be 40 gallons, the real nature of the transaction would probably have been discovered. There is, however, no evidence that they were properly checked and we agree, therefore, with the learned Advocate-General that, if the linseed oil case stood by itself, it would not be sufficient to prove that Waite was involved in the alleged conspiracy.

Turpentine—As regards the turpentine transaction, on the 26th June 1918, the Board of Munitions at Simla despatched a telegram in the following terms which was received by the Controller of Munitions, Calcutta, on the 27th June and referred to Waite as Deputy Controller, Inspection, "for favour of disposal and report within 10 days":—

"Require 5,000 gallons genuine turpentine. What quantity can you obtain and at what price? Also say whether Indian or imported. Must know rate. Difficulty in obtaining full requirements from Forest Department."

Then follows, in the official file, a note in Waite's handwriting of quotations given to him by Mr. Pratt, a dealer in the article:—

"American, 200 gallons, price (20 cases)—per case Rs. 50; Rs. 5 per gallon.

Government, 25 to 30 gallons—Rs. 26 per 5 gallon drum.

Yellow, No. 1, containing 250 gallons—5 gallon drum at Rs. 4-12-0 per gallon

Habbcock's 500 gallons—Rs. 13-12-0 per gallon."

There is also a note in Stoddart's handwriting of Messrs. Spalding & Co's. quotation:—

	Ra.
"Black Japan, as per specification sent (2,500 gallons)	20
Turpentine, Java, No 1 (5,000 to 10,000 gallons)	9
Turpentine, Java, No. 2 (5,000 to 10,000 gallons)	8
Turpentine, special, imported, 2,000 gallons	13
Immediate delivery."

On 1st July, Waite telegraphed to Simla, Spalding & Co's quotations for Java, Nos. 1 and 2, and Special American (2,000 gallons at Rs. 13). He also mentioned Pratt's quotation for Habbcock's No. 1. Simla inquired whether he considered Java, No. 2, quite suitable and suggested that he should consult Director of Ordinance Factories. Waite or Stoddart, the latter being Waite's personal assistant, and under his immediate orders then telephoned to Spalding & Co. for samples and received three bottles of Java, No 1, Java No. 2 and best American. These were sent to the Director who replied on 6th August that Java, No. 1 and No. 2 were not correct to specification and that the American sample was correct. Copies of the Director's letter were sent to Spalding & Co. and Pratt with an inquiry as to the quantity of turpentine available in stock. There is a reply from Pratt, dated 23rd August, stating that he could supply immediately 20 cases American turpentine and 2,500 gallons in November. It will be remembered that the price given by Pratt to Waite for American turpentine was Rs. 5 a gallon. There is no reply from Spalding & Co. on the record and no further reference was made by Waite to Simla. His next step, taken on the 31st August, was to place an order with Spalding & Co. for 3,500 gallons at Rs. 13 a gallon to be delivered at once.

It is not clear why he ordered that quantity. The original inquiry from Simla mentioned 5,000 gallons. In his own telegram to Simla he had given the quantity of American turpentine available as 2,000 gallons. We can only suppose that the order was the result of personal communications between Waite and Michael.

It is now, however, clear beyond dispute that Spalding & Co. could have had nothing approaching 3,500 gallons available for immediate delivery at the time. In any case, Waite's action was precipitate to the point of recklessness and it is difficult to accept the suggestion that he was under a double misapprehension both as to Spalding & Co.'s ability to supply so large a quantity and as to the instructions which he had received from Simla. Simla had in fact given him no final instructions to buy turpentine and in the state of the market ought to have had the opportunity of considering Pratt's offer of 2,500 gallon in November at Rs. 5 a gallon.

Having secured this order, on the 3rd September, Spalding & Co., in a letter to Michael, confirmed their quotations to him for the supply of turpentine to Munitions. "Any rate," they added, "that you have quoted or may quote over and above the prices quoted you the excess or difference in rates are payable to you as remuneration for services rendered." The rate given to Michael for English or American turpentine was Rs. 8 per gallon.

It may be assumed that in the usual course a copy of the order of 31st August was sent to Simla and on the 12th September

Waite telegraphed to Simla referring to the inquiry of 26th June as "your telegraphic indent of 26th July (apparently a mistake for June) for 5,000 gallons turpentine" and asking for despatching instructions. The Controller, Indian Indents, replied by letter dated 17th September, that "no further quantities are wanted at present as arrangements have already been made to secure our requirements from elsewhere." Waite did nothing on this letter. It is said that by the words "no further quantities" he understood Simla to mean that no more was required beyond the 3,500 gallons already ordered. But, if so, why were no despatching instructions given in respect of that quantity? After a delay of more than a month Waite again telegraphed to Simla referring to the telegraphic indent of 26th July (meaning June) and said that 3,500 gallons were "waiting despatching instructions." These words are misleading. In the order of 31st August, Spalding & Co. had been directed to deliver the turpentine to the Munitions Stores Depot at Narauldanga. Waite was moved to obtain despatching instructions not by Messrs. Spalding & Co. but, in anticipation of delivery by the depot, to which a copy of the order had been sent. Up to the 29th October not a single gallon of the turpentine had actually been delivered. On the 9th November Simla replied through the post, merely enclosing a copy of their previous letter of 17th September. Then on the 15th November Waite wrote to Spalding & Co. and asked them to treat the order of 31st August as cancelled.

Here again the suggestion can hardly be resisted that the delay which occurred after receipt of the Simla letter of 17th September was deliberate in order to give Spalding & Co. more time in which to deliver the turpentine. The order was not cancelled till Waite felt that he could delay no longer.

Spalding & Co., however, did not accept the cancellation of the order. On the 21st November, Michael called on Mr. Peterson, then Controller of Munitions, who noted that he had told Spalding & Co. "that they should reply to us stating that they do not see their way to cancel the contract and request us to take delivery." He added "I think we will have to take the material. For the present their letter may be awaited."

Spalding & Co's letter 22nd November illustrates the firm's methods. "Our Mr. Michael," it says, "called on you yesterday and explained our position that we are unable to sell this stock, when you were good enough to inform him that you will stand by the order. Kindly have the letter cancelling the order withdrawn. We also await your instructions to deliver the quantity ordered." Mr. Peterson was thus asked to believe that the firm had the whole quantity ordered in stock. But it was as true in the months of November and December 1918 and January 1919, as at the time of the order that Messrs Spalding & Co. had nothing like 3,500 gallons available for delivery.

Mr. Peterson did not at once reply to Messrs. Spalding & Co's letter. Mr R. D. Bell, Controller of Oils and Paints, had been sent from Simla to inspect Waite's office. On the 28th November he recorded a note, to which both sides have referred, stating among other things that "the rate Rs. 13 per gallon charged by Spalding seems exorbitant" but that he did not see how the order could be cancelled. Acting on this note, Mr. Peterson on the 29th November called on Waite for an explanation which was received later on on the 14th January.—

At this stage of the negotiations, Billinghamurst, on behalf of Spalding & Co. addressed a letter, dated 16th December, to Michael which we had better give in full, as Billinghamurst's learned Counsel placed considerable reliance upon it on his client's behalf. The letter runs—

"16th December 1918.

"P. H. MICHAEL, Esq., Calcutta

"Dear Sir,

"Against the Munitions Department order for 3,500 gallons of turpentine which was purchased and which we delayed sending on your advice till the full consignment had been collected and which is now left in our hands owing to cancellation of order, we would ask you what we are to do with this large expensive stock on which heavy interest charges are accruing. We understand that while we quoted you Rs. 8 per gallon leaving us a bare 10 per cent. difference to cover leakage, cartage and profit, you quoted, Rs. 13 per gallon to the Munitions Department, which extortionate price probably caused the cancellation of the order, that is, while Messrs. Spalding & Co. would have cleared a legitimate profit of about Re. 0-8-0 to Re. 0-12-0 per gallon, you would have bled the department to the tune of Rs. 5, and this without risk to yourself of any business losses. As the appointed receiver of this firm I am naturally anxious to prevent any loss and, therefore, ask you what is to be done with this stock and write to you to learn if you have any prospects of selling this.

"Yours faithfully,
(Sd.) SPALDING & Co."

Learned Counsel argued that this letter showed that Billinghamurst was not responsible for any guilty dealings Michael may have had with Waite. But in the first place the letter is not ingenuous. As it begins and ends, it merely follows the line which had been taken at and after Michael's interview with Mr. Peterson on the 21st November and regard being had to Michael's relations with Spalding & Co. we cannot suppose that it was not as well known to him as it was to Billinghamurst that the full consignment had not been collected. Then as to the price, Spalding & Co had adopted the price quoted by Michael to Waite and the letter shows that they knew perfectly well that the department was being bled. We regard the letter merely as a hint to Michael that he was to do his best to obtain the restoration of the order on the lines already agreed upon between him and the firm. We may add that the exhibit is not the original letter but the copy taken from Spalding & Co's press copy book. No answer to the letter from Michael is forthcoming.

On the 9th January Spalding & Co. wrote again to Mr. Peterson: "We beg to inform you" they said, "that storage charges and interest on the above

BILLINGHURST v. EMPEROR.

Waite's explanation was, as we have said, received on 14th January. As regards the giving of the order of 31st August and the price agreed to, the explanation, in view of all the facts, is insufficient and unconvincing. But in his concluding paragraph, Waite said this: "If the Controller desires that the order should be cancelled on the firm, there should, in my opinion, be no difficulty. As the firm did not make any attempt at delivering the turpentine. I am rather inclined to stand by my letter of cancellation owing to the reason of their failure or non-compliance of the order." Waite must, therefore, be acquitted of being a party to the representation made by Spalding & Co. to procure the withdrawal of the letter of cancellation. It must be remembered that Waite's conduct of his office had come under examination and it was incumbent on him at this stage to be circumspect. The main question, moreover, is not whether the re-instatement was procured by mis-representation but whether the original order was or was not collusive and dishonest.

Mr. Peterson then had before him Mr. Bell's opinion and Waite's explanation. Neither Mr. Bell nor Mr. Peterson, however, was aware of the arrangement under which Michael was to receive Rs 5 on every gallon of turpentine sold to Munitions, so that Spalding & Co. must have expected to make a profit on their share of Rs. 8 a gallon. Mr. Peterson may, perhaps, have noticed that Waite's statement that Spalding

& Co. had made no attempt at delivering the turpentine was inconsistent with the case they were making that they had been asked to store the turpentine. On the 15th January he replied to Spalding & Co.'s letters of 22nd November and 9th January in a letter from which the following paragraphs are taken.—

"2. If you can prove to me that you have contracted for the supply of this turpentine on our account before receipt of Mr. Waite's letter No. 5535-P—292, dated the 15th November 1918, cancelling the order, I should be obliged if you send your representative to me with the papers giving evidence of this.

"3. You state in your letter, dated the 9th January, that you were requested to store the turpentine on our account in September last, pending despatching instructions. I should be obliged if you would let me know whether this was a verbal arrangement or whether you have any document to this effect as the order for supply was, for immediate supply and was not apparently complied with.

"4. If you can satisfy me on the above points, I am prepared to take delivery of the turpentine in accordance with the order."

On the same date, 13th January, Mr. Peterson wrote to Simla that he had been endeavouring to cancel the turpentine order but was doubtful whether he would be able to do so as the firm insisted on delivery being taken.

On the 29th January Spalding & Co. replied in a letter of some length headed "without prejudice" in the course of which they said:

"On the 1st September we received Deputy Controller, Inspection, Demand No. 3379-P—292, dated 31st August 1918, for 3,500 gallons of turpentine. About the 9th September our Mr. Michael approached the Deputy Controller, Inspection, for instructions for making the cases which had been omitted on the order, when he was asked to await his instructions which would be given in a few days.

BILLINGHURST V. EMPEROR.

"A week later, we again asked for instructions to mark the packages to enable us to proceed with the delivery when we were informed not to deliver the turpentine at Narauldanga, as there was no room to store combustible goods under cover, all the space there being urgently required for other valuable stores, and we were instructed to store the turpentine until we received despatching orders.

"Our representative informed the Deputy Controller, Inspection, that we would store the turpentine, but we could not accept any responsibility for damages or loss by fire, and at the same time we would charge a nominal rent for storage, this was accepted by the Deputy Controller, Inspection, which we had confirmed, vide our letter, dated 18th September 1918.

"Since then we did not trouble the Deputy Controller, Inspection, any further and awaited his instructions for despatching. On 17th November last we received Deputy Controller, Inspection, letter No. 5535-P-292, dated the 15th, which was most surprising and inexplicable to us. At that time our Mr. Michael, who had this matter in his hands was away at Simla and on his return he called on the Deputy Controller, Inspection, when he was informed that he was ill, not attending office, Mr. Michael then called on your goodself and explained the position when you assured him that you would stand by the order.

"Under the circumstances you will see that there was no delay or want of attention on our part; we had to the best of our endeavours and at a loss of interest on the outlay, gone much out of our way to assist the Deputy Controller, Inspection, in agreeing to store the turpentine and it is matter of deep regret to us that we should now be placed in such a position, which we least expected, more particularly in view of the fact that on all occasions we were very prompt in supplying and despatching all indents placed with us.

"We request that you will be good enough to take delivery of the turpentine, without further delay, as it is impossible for us to suffer the loss of interest and run any further risks. You are, no doubt, aware that the bank rate of interest has increased and our loss in this direction alone will be great.

"As regards your request to produce the correspondence in connection with this order, we shall be glad to comply with same if you will kindly appoint a day when it will be convenient for you to see them".

The comments we have already made apply to this letter for which Billinghurst was undoubtedly responsible. It is only necessary to add as regards the reference to a letter of 18th September, that no such letter is forthcoming and there is no copy of it in Spalding & Co's. press copy book. Mr. Peterson has left Calcutta and has not been called as a witness. There is no evidence that he accepted Spalding & Co's offer to show him their correspondence or that he made any further enquiry. Spalding & Co's reiterated statements that they had been storing the turpentine, which we regard as wholly false, were certainly calculated to mislead.

On the 11th February, Mr. Peterson wrote to Spalding & Co., directing them to deliver the 3,500 gallons after test and inspection by the Deputy Controller, Oils and Paints. There was some further correspondence as to the samples which Spalding & Co. submitted. But in the result a sample was approved. Spalding & Co. delivered 3,499 gallons and their bills, dated 30th April 1919, for Rs. 45,487, signed by Billinghurst in the name of Spalding & Co., was duly paid.

It must be emphasized that an examination of Spalding & Co's books shows, and that it is not now denied, that the firm could never have supplied anything like this quantity of turpentine from their own stock. Their books show that their stock increased from 8 gallons in June to 168 gallons in November 1918, and dwindled to 90 gallons on the 14th March 1919.

BILLINGHURST v. EMPEROR.

It is proved that of the 3,499 gallons ultimately supplied, 3,026 gallons were purchased from the Standard Oil Company, on various dates, ranging from the 17th to the 28th April, at the rate of Rs. 34 per 5 gallon drum or just over Rs. 6-12-9 a gallon.

Michael's share of the Rs. 45,487 paid to Spalding & Co. came to Rs. 17,495 for which he submitted a bill and received payment.

As regards this transaction, we conclude that when Waite sent a copy of his order of 31st August to Simla, he must be taken to have presented that he had done his duty and that the order was a proper order at a reasonable price. It may be that at the time there was a scarcity of turpentine with a consequent rise in price, but it is evident that Spalding & Co. were in no position to fulfil the order till the market was replenished when the price would fall and in that state of things, the price charged was preposterous. No tenders were called for from such firms as the Standard Oil Company and in the circumstances it is not surprising that the transactions seemed to the authorities to demand inquiry and examination. The whole of the facts were not then elicited. Regard being had to the close relations which existed between Waite and Michael and to other facts which have now come to light, the transaction, even if it stood alone, would arouse a strong suspicion that an unlawful agreement existed between Waite and Michael to which Billinghamurst, on behalf of Spalding & Co., and possibly other members of the firm, were willing parties. But the transaction does not stand alone and it must be considered along with the other two transactions which are in question.

On the evidence as a whole, we are forced to the conclusion that this was a dishonest transaction. In our opinion it was engineered by Michael in conspiracy with Waite and there is equally no doubt as to Billinghamurst's complicity. There is the arrangement between the firm and Michael and there is the fact that Billinghamurst was responsible for the letters and representations by which the restoration of the order was induced. Michael was too closely associated with the firm to make it possible to accept the suggestion that he acted independently and the undertaking involved in the acceptance of an order for the immediate delivery of 3,500 gallons could not have been honest. We must accept the conclusions arrived at by the learned Magistrate.

Water-soluble oil.—We turn to the transaction relating to water-soluble oil. The indent from Simla for this oil is dated 19th August, 1918, and was registered in Waite's office on the 23rd August. The indent was for 1,800 gallons, 800 to be supplied at once and the remainder at the rate of 200 gallons a month. It appears that this oil is used in the Ichapur Rifle Factory in connection with machines for the cutting of component parts of metal fittings and the indent stated in its column 2 that the oil was required "for cutting compounds." In the same column Waite was instructed that "particulars of any substitute other than those proposed should be communicated for acceptance before the order is placed" and that "samples should be sent through the Superintendent, Rifle Factory, Ichapur." Then still in the same column, the statement is made that "the Asiatic Petroleum Company has an oil and the Barma Oil Company a composition which is suitable". It is clear that this oil and this composition are referred to in the antecedent phrase "particulars of any substitute other than those proposed."

In the remarks column, opposite the entry in column 2 referring to the Asiatic and Burma Companies, the note occurs.

"Sample is being sent separately by parcel post registered." It does not appear of what oil the sample consisted or what became of the sample, but it is clear that Waite's attention was expressly drawn to the fact that the Asiatic Petroleum Company had an oil which was suitable. It is further beyond dispute that in August, 1918, the Company had an ample and immediately available stock of a water-soluble oil which they called "turnol," and which they were selling at Rs. 2-14 a gallon. If Waite be credited with nothing more than ordinary intelligence, there was no room for mistake on his part. He had only to apply to the Company and he would have obtained at the price stated an oil which would have satisfied the urgent needs of the Ichapur Factory.

He did not, however, take that simple course. In the first place, he was dilatory. He did nothing till he received a reminder from the Director of Ordnance Factories, Bengal, referring to the Simla indent, upon which he noted that "samples of this and home oil have been promised by Spalding & Co." Then comes a letter, dated 20th September signed by P. H. Michael "for Spalding & Co.," informing Waite, that they were in a position to supply him with his requirements and forwarding a sample in a pint bottle of an oil which they were prepared to deliver at Rs 12 per gallon packed in one gallon tins. For the present we pass by the question of what oil the sample consisted.

On the same date, the 20th September, Spalding & Co. wrote to Michael to confirm their quotations to him "for water-soluble oil as per sample handed to you for the Indian Munitions Board at Rs. 8 per gallon packed in one-gallon tins." They continued "You are at liberty to cover yourself with any extra price. Such difference or excess price obtained by you will be payable to you as your remuneration for services rendered."

The sample in the pint bottle was sent on the 21st September, under Waite's order given on the 20th to the Ichapur Factory with a statement that it had been received from Messrs. Spalding & Co.

Another reminder, dated 20th September, this time from Simla, requesting the very early supply and despatch of the oil required, did not lead Waite to make further inquiries or change his line of conduct.

By a letter, dated 5th October, the Superintendent informed Waite that the sample had been "tested and found suitable" and asked him "to arrange for a supply as soon as possible." On the 10th October Spalding & Co. were informed by letter of the result of the test and that an order would be placed for the supply and that deliveries must be made immediately. Nevertheless, the formal order was not issued till the 23rd October. The order was for the immediate delivery of 1,800 gallons of "oil water-soluble as per sample approved" at the rate, including all charges, of Rs. 12 per gallon. By a foot-note Spalding & Co. were directed to despatch the oil direct to the Ichapur Factory.

Thus there was a delay of two months in placing an order which might have been placed at once and much more advantageously if Waite had made proper inquiries in the quarters indicated on the face of the Government indent.

Learned Counsel for Billinghamurst suggested that Waite was concerned to obtain "real" water-soluble oil. But the term is merely descriptive. The evidence shows that there are various preparations in the market which come within the description. They differ in their qualities and composition, some having a basis of vegetable oil and some a basis of mineral oil. Under his instructions it was Waite's clear duty to obtain as quickly and cheaply as possible an oil which would serve the purposes of the Ichapur Factory. It was not a question of academic chemistry but a practical question and there is no room for doubt that the Asiatic Company's oil at Rs. 2-14-0 or Rs. 3 a gallon would have been a very much better bargain than the oil supplied by Spalding & Co. at Rs. 12 a gallon.

The delay did not end with the issue of the order of the 23rd October. Another reminder, dated 31st October, was addressed to Waite by the Director of Ordnance Factories which led to Spalding & Co. being told that "if no intimation is received" of the despatch of the oil ordered, "before the 13th instant, the demand will be cancelled on you." This letter bears date the 14th

November, though the sentence quoted shows that the draft must have been prepared before the 13th. The office copy exhibited is not initialed but as issued the letter must have been signed by or for Waite and a copy was sent to the Director. Replying on the 15th November Spalding & Co. informed Waite that 240 gallons of water-soluble oil had been despatched on the 14th November and that they expected to forward the balance during the ensuing week. As a matter of fact the Railway Receipt shows that the first consignment of 6 barrels was despatched on the 16th November.

What appears is that when Spalding & Co. stated as far back as the 20th September that they were in a position to supply water-soluble oil, they were promising more than they could then perform.

Towards the middle or end of October they addressed some forty firms in Calcutta, including Messrs. Shaw, Wallace & Co., (agents for the Burmah Oil Company), Messrs. Healty & Gresham, and the Asiatic Petroleum Company asking for quotations for water-soluble oil.

These inquiries were for the most part infructuous and at the hearing of the appeal learned Counsel for Billinghamurst obtained leave to prove a letter, dated 26th October, received from Mr. Edwin William Harlow of Messrs. Gillanders, Arbuthnot & Company, the agents of the Asiatic Petroleum Company.

Mr. Harlow was accordingly examined in this Court. He proved his signature on the letter which stated inability to supply the quotations asked for. In cross-examination, however, by the learned Advocate-General, he explained that he had water-soluble oil at the time but he understood that the inquiries were made on behalf of the Government and he or his firm wished to keep all Government business in their own hands with a view to supplying the Government direct.

In this case at any rate refusal to furnish Spalding & Co. with the quotations for which they asked did not mean that Waite could not have obtained water-soluble oil if he had himself made the inquiries made by Spalding & Co. On the contrary, this evidence shows that if Waite had done what he ought to have done, viz., inquired of the Asiatic Petroleum Company, he would have obtained the oil at a reasonable price.

The oil which Spalding & Co. eventually supplied was obtained as to two barrels from Messrs. Healty & Gresham and as to the remaining 38 barrels from Messrs. Grandage, Moir & Co.

The transactions with the two firms named are on record. To begin with there is a bill, dated 26th October of Messrs. Grandage, Moir, against Michael for Rs. 20 on account of five gallons of their oil, called "koolkut" at Rs. 4 a gallon. The receipt on the bill shows that it was paid by cheque on the same date.

There was some dispute at the trial whether Messrs. Healty & Gresham supplied one or two barrels of their oil called "thresol." Before us the learned Advocate-General did not press the point and it seems to us on the evidence that as contended for the defence, Spalding & Co. received two barrels from this source, the first on the 29th October and the second on the 14th November.

On the 9th November, Messrs. Spalding & Co. gave an order to Messrs. Grandage, Moir & Co. for 500 gallons at Rs. 4 a gallon as arranged by Michael and understood that "you will deliver us at the rate of 80 gallons or two casks, each containing 40 gallons from next week." On the 21st November Messrs. Grandage, Moir & Co. were asked for a further 500 gallons and were told that "it is very important that we should have further quantities delivered to us daily."

15th November 1918	... 4 barrels.
21st do.	... 4 do.
28th do.	... 6 do.
4th December 1918	... 10 do.
2nd January 1919	... 6 do.
6th do.	... 5 do.
9th do.	... 3 do.

BILLINGHURST v. EMPEROR.

It is very pertinent to compare the dates on which Spalding & Co. were negotiating for obtaining their supplies with the delay on Waite's part in placing the order and with the date—14th November—on which Spalding & Co. were threatened with the cancellation of the order. It is difficult to resist the inference that the order was delayed to enable Spalding & Co. to feel their way and that the threat to cancel was held back till Spalding & Co. had some prospect of obtaining supplies on a sufficient scale. In other words, the principal parties to the transaction were acting in concert.

On the 29th November the Ichapur Factory wrote to Spalding & Co. acknowledging the receipt (through the Gun and Shell Factory where they had been mis-carried) of the six barrels despatched on the 16th. The case for the defence is that the six casks included the two casks supplied by Messrs. Healy & Gresham, and the first four casks supplied by Messrs. Grandage, Moir & Co. The Factory complained that all the barrels were not equally full. They added: "Please also note that the barrels do not appear to contain the same quality of oil; it is, however, all soluble."

By the 20th December the Factory had received 25 barrels and by a bill of that date Spalding & Co. claimed payment of Rs. 14,340, the equivalent of 1,195 gallons at Rs. 12 a gallon. The bill was sent to the Factory for verification under cover of a letter, dated 8th January 1919. By a letter also of 8th January signed by Meek for the Deputy Controller, Inspection, (Waite was at the time absent from the office), Spalding & Co. were requested to consider the order cancelled in respect of the balance of the 1,800 gallons, namely, 605 gallons. On the 9th January, Spalding & Co. replied that they had already complied with the demand in full, and on the 23rd January they submitted a further bill for Rs. 7,752 as for 646 gallons.

The position taken by Spalding & Co., therefore, was that they had supplied 1,195 gallons in 26 barrels before the 20th December and 646 gallons in 14 barrels thereafter. The last three of the 14 barrels were received by the Factory on the 10th January. By computation the 26 barrels contained an average of just under 46 gallons a barrel and the 14 barrels an average of just over 46 gallons a barrel.

It had to be conceded in argument that the total of 1,841 gallons was from 80 to 100 gallons in excess of the whole quantity of oil originally supplied by Messrs. Healy & Gresham and Messrs. Grandage, Moir & Co. The excess may have been more but it was certainly not less than from 70 to 80 gallons.

We have said that Spalding & Company's bill was sent to the Factory for verification. It drew from the Superintendent, Captain Kinloch, a letter, dated 14th January 1919, of which some part must be quoted. Captain Kinloch began by regretting that he could not certify the bill as correct in respect of the quantity or condition of the goods supplied.

As regards quantity he said: "Had the barrels sent all been full, the quantity would have been correct, but 10 of them were not, and as my reducing a bill without reference to the firm causes annoyance I wrote to them, under my No. 393, dated 29th November 1918, pointing out that the oil was not all of the same quality, and asking them to say what the measurement of the doubtful barrels was, but up to now they have not answered and I have accordingly not completed the measurement. Could you kindly ask them to send some one along to see to this?"

As regards conditions he said this: "As far as condition goes, No. 3 barrels seem to be alike. Out of the whole consignment, only two appear to be really soluble oil. The others are slightly emulsified and they vary each from the other. I send you three samples marked A, B, and C. I had two of them analysed. The sample marked 'A' had a specific gravity of .925, that marked 'B' 1.001, and the latter was reported to be in a semi-emulsified condition. It is evident they are not the same, and if one of them is according to the sample supplied by the firm the other cannot be."

Then he turned to the price and said: "I notice from the bill that the price charged is Rs. 12 per gallon; surely this is an error. I purchased a really good soluble oil from the Asiatic Petroleum Company during 1917 at Rs 2-6-9 per gallon, and I notice that on the D O F. No 14638-S, dated 13th August 1918, transferring the order to the Indian Munitions Board, a note to the effect that the Asiatic Petroleum Company supply a suitable oil, is mentioned."

He continued "For example, if the whole quantity invoiced had been received from Messrs Spalding & Co., i e, 1,195 gallons, as each gallon as supplied makes 11 gallons for use at the machines, the total quantity of lubricants produced would have been 13,145 gallons, and the cost Rs 14,340—17 44 per gallon. Of the Asiatic Petroleum Company's compound only 215½ gallons would have been required to make the same quantity of lubricant and the cost would have been Rs 598-10-0—62 per gallon"

"I recognize that the price has been agreed upon with Messrs Spalding & Co and had the oil supplied all been the same and up to sample, I should have had no legal ground for complaint, but as it is not all the same and is mostly very inferior, and as these costs are all debited to the rifles produced here, I should be glad if you could see your way to obtain a reduction of the rate"

He concluded by asking that a representative of the firm might be sent out to discuss the matter with him and see the supply in bulk

A copy of this letter was sent to Spalding & Co. and acknowledged by them in a letter, dated 30th January "In reply" they said, "we beg to state that we were not asked to supply water-soluble oil to any specified specific gravity, nor had we undertaken to do so. The indent placed with us distinctly stated 'water-soluble oil' only and in accordance with this indent we have supplied the required quantity commencing from November last, and it was not till our bill was presented in January that for the first time the question of price and specific gravity have been raised by the Superintendent, Rifle Factory, Ichapur."

They went on to say that "when the enquiry for water-soluble oil was placed with us for the required quantity, there was no contractor who was in a position to comply with this order" That shows how little they knew of the market. "We are, however," they added, "quite prepared to meet the Superintendent as desired by you."

In answer, Meek, on the 26th February drew the attention of Spalding & Co to the fact that the order of 23rd October distinctly stated "oil water-soluble as per sample approved," and to the further fact that the result of the test of their sample had been communicated to them.

Spalding & Co did not write again till the 29th April, when in a letter headed, "without prejudice" they maintained their position. "We supplied the oil," they then said, "according to the sample approved in November 1918, and it was not until end of the January 1919 after our bill had been presented for payment, that the question of specific gravity and price was raised by the Superintendent, Rifle Factory. We were never asked to replace any of the oil and were, therefore, satisfied that the soluble oil supplied by us must have been approved. As regards the rate, we were asked to tender our rate for the oil by the Deputy Controller, Inspection, the same had been accepted; vide your office demand * * *; dated 23rd. October 1918. Under the circumstances we see no justification for reducing the value of the oil supplied and delivered by us. We trust you will be pleased to pass our bills for same as these had been considerably overdue. Bank interest is accruing on the amount and we cannot afford to suffer further loss."

In speaking of 'the sample approved in November 1918,' Spalding & Co. were apparently referring to the Factory's letter of 29th November in which it was said that while the oil supplied was not all of the same quality, it was all soluble. That letter was in the nature of a complaint rather than an approval and what the firm had contracted to do was to supply oil according to the sample in the pint bottle. On the 30th April, Meek, acting under instructions from the Controller, Oils and Paints, Simla, with whom he had been in communication, finally refused to pass Spalding & Co.'s bills, which he returned. At the same time, he requested them to remove the rejected materials.

This last request was also made under a direction from the Controller, Oils and Paints, to the effect that so much of the oil as had not been used should be returned. A word must be said as to what followed.

According to the Factory, they had used the contents of 26 barrels of Spalding & Co.'s oil, amounting to 1,040 gallons (or an average of 40 gallons per barrel). They proposed to return the balance of 14 barrels. This appears from a letter dated 16th May, addressed by Capt. Kinloch to the Controller of Munitions. Michael had visited the Factory on behalf of Spalding & Co., before the letter was written and Capt. Kinloch begins his letter as follows: "The 14 barrels of oil which it is proposed to return to Spalding & Co. have not been measured, 10 of them were not correct when received and a representative of the firm recently called here and satisfied himself that the quantity was not correct."

Further on Capt. Kinloch says: "The statement of the representative of the firm that the oil was correct to the sample, cannot be admitted. He called here, saw the oil and had to admit that no two barrels were alike except two which contained an oil utterly different to any of the others."

Capt. Kinloch then referred to the analysis which had been made of samples taken from three different barrels.

Further details as to Michael's visit were given in the witness-box by Mr. Fitzpatrick who was in 1919 Head Overseer of Stores of the Rifle Factory. In reference to Capt. Kinloch's letter he corroborated the statements therein made and said that Michael was the representative of Spalding's firm. He also said: "With regard to there being only two barrels alike Michael explained the Spalding's chemist had been carrying out experiments and that probably accounted for the two barrels being utterly different from any other. In my opinion the sample sent to us had been made of oil of the quality in the two barrels which were alike."

On the 5th June a copy of Capt. Kinloch's letter was forwarded by Mr. Meek to Spalding & Co. with the request that they would submit a revised bill for the 1,040 gallons actually used and remove the remainder from the Factory.

Spalding & Co. replied in a letter, dated 8th July, the signature of which "Spalding & Co." is in Billingham's handwriting. The firm did not dispute the fact of Michael's visit nor did they challenge the statement that at the time of the visit there were at the Factory 14 barrels of their oil unused. They addressed themselves to the quality of the oil and stated their reasons for refusing to take back the 14 barrels.

Before we deal with the quality of the oil, it may be mentioned that ultimately the Factory sent away 14 barrels. Spalding & Co. refused to take delivery and the oil was sold. There has been some dispute whether 12 of these 14 barrels contained Spalding & Co.'s oil, but the point is really immaterial. There is some confusion and obscurity in the evidence and some mistake may have been made as regards the barrels sent away. We will take it that at one time or another the Factory consumed the contents of 38 of the barrels received from Spalding & Co.

As to the quality of the oil it is common ground that two different kinds of oil were supplied, namely, the oil in the two barrels probably those obtained by Spalding & Co. from Messrs. Heatly & Gresham, and the oil in the 38 barrels, all of which probably come from Messrs. Grandage, Moor & Co. We gather from Capt. Kinloch's letter of 16th May that the two barrels contained an oil of identical kind and quality, utterly different from the oil in the 38 barrels. As to the latter oil it was all similar in kind though chemical analysis showed that it might vary somewhat in quality or composition from barrel to barrel. The oil or preparation in the two barrels had mineral oil as a basis while the basis of the preparation in the 38 barrels was a vegetable oil, probably castor oil.

Now we have said that according to the defence the sample in the pint bottle, which was found satisfactory, was a sample of the oil in the two barrels. The matter is not free from doubt but the contention is supported to some extent by the evidence of Mr Fitzpatrick to which we have referred. But if the contention be accepted, it is obvious that the oil in the 38 barrels was not in accordance with sample. On the other hand, on the footing that the contract for the supply of the oil was a valid mercantile contract, untainted by fraud, Spalding & Co might well have said that the Factory had not taken either of the two courses indicated in section 118 of the Contract Act. They had not within a reasonable time rejected the oil altogether as not being up to sample nor had they within a reasonable time given notice that they would accept the oil but intended to claim compensation or damages. If the letter of 29th November was in the nature of a complaint as regards the first consignment, it was hardly a sufficient notice that damages would be claimed in respect of the oil taken into use.

The Factory apparently did not use the oil in the two barrels which Mr Fitzpatrick considered was according to sample and it is not disputed that these two barrels at any rate were among the 14 ultimately sent away. The explanation probably is that the quantity in the two barrels was insufficient to meet the Factory's needs for any length of time, and that the best had to be made of the bulk of the oil supplied of which at least 26 barrels were used. Referring to the quantity used in his letter of 16th May, Captain Kinloch said: "The reason why this large quantity (1,040 gallons) had to be used was that I had nothing else available and the quality was so poor that large quantities had to be used to make the correct emulsion for use at the machines."

But on the footing that the contract was valid, it was quite unnecessary for Michael to invent imaginary experiments by an imaginary chemist or for Billinghurst to make the statement which follows in the firm's letter of 8th July:—"At the time when the enquiry for the oil was placed with us there was no such oil available in the market, and as this demand was a pressing one, we were asked to manufacture the oil. In this connection, we had to go very much out of our way to prepare this oil in order to meet the demand, in doing so we felt that we were assisting the Munitions Board at a needful time."

Such explanations of the variations in the kind and quality of the oil supplied, were wholly disingenuous and dishonest. The suggestions made in argument before us, that Spalding & Co. wished to conceal the fact that they were mere middlemen, because they were afraid of losing Government custom, cannot be entertained. In July 1919 Spalding & Co. could have had no prospect of receiving any further orders from Government in any of its departments. The desire to conceal the fact that they were middlemen must have been the product of other motives. Doubtless, they were unwilling that discovery should be made of the price at which they had purchased the oil from Messrs. Heatly & Gresham and Messrs. Grandage Moir & Co.

But before we come to the bearing of the quality of the oil or the price charged, or the bona fides of the transaction, there is another matter to be mentioned. We have said that according to their bills, Spalding & Co. supplied more oil than they obtained from their sources of supply. It has been suggested for the prosecution that in order to make up the excess, some of the oil obtained from Messrs. Grandage, Moir & Co., was in some way diluted or adulterated. We are not satisfied that this is established. In respect of the first consignment the Factory complained in their letter of 29th November that all the barrels were not equally full and in his letter of 16th May Capt Kinloch stated that 10 of the 14 barrels were not correct in quantity. It may, therefore, be that Messrs. Spalding & Co. charged in their bill for a larger number of gallons than were actually supplied. The prosecution, however, have not complained of the bills on this ground and we shall, therefore, assume that if an excess charge of this kind was made, it was due not to design but to some mistake of calculation.

BILLINGHURST V. EMPEROR.

There remains the question whether the order given by Waite for this oil was an honest order. In this case, as in the other cases, it is clear that in forwarding a copy of the order to Simla, Waite represented that it was in fact an honest order and that the price to be paid was a fair market price. If the order was the result of an unlawful arrangement between Waite and Michael and Billinghamurst acting on behalf of Spalding & Co. it follows at the least that an attempt was made by those privy to that arrangement to cheat the responsible authorities at Simla. It is scarcely disputed—it cannot be seriously disputed—that the price charged was exorbitant. If Waite had made the most cursory inquiries, inquiries which it might almost be said he was directed to make, he could have purchased, at something under Rs. 3 a gallon, ample supplies of an oil which would not only have served the Factory's purpose but would have gone much further than the oil supplied. The point as to the difference between the Asiatic Company's oil and the oil supplied is well brought out in the Superintendent's letter of 14th January, 1919, from which we have already quoted. But the poor quality of the oil is not really important factor in this case. As the learned Magistrate said, the price was "exorbitant even for good oil." If we assume that neither Waite nor Spalding & Co. were aware that water-soluble oil is mixed with water before use and that some of these oils will mix with a larger proportion of water than others, there still remains the fact that Waite himself made no inquiries of the Asiatic Petroleum Company and did not call in the ordinary way for tenders. From observations already made it is apparent that we cannot accept Waite's statement made in a letter, dated 30th May 1919, written from Ootacamund that he made personal inquiries from certain firms including the Asiatic Petroleum Company. It is no violent presumption to suppose that on the 20th September when Spalding & Co. sent in the sample in the pint bottle (obtained as it is said from Messrs. Heatly & Gresham) and put in writing their agreement with Michael that he should retain any excess over Rs. 8 a gallon, the firm knew that the market price for such oil would not be more than Rs. 4 or 5 a gallon—the prices at which they subsequently purchased. If the bills for the oil had been paid by Government, Spalding & Co. would have received somewhat less than twice the price they themselves paid an additional Rs. 4 per each gallon would have gone, in the first instance at any rate, into Michael's pocket. Indeed, Michael submitted a bill to Spalding & Co. for Rs. 7,200 (equivalent to Rs. 4 a gallon for 1,800 gallons) and was paid Rs. 2,500 on account though Spalding & Co. had not received and in the result did not receive anything from the Government. Waite, it must be remembered, was throughout in close communication with Michael while the latter took a large share in the conduct of Messrs. Spalding & Co.'s business. The price to which Waite agreed was so extravagant that Capt. Kinloch thought it must be a mistake. We are not surprised that he was dismayed when Spalding & Co.'s bill was sent to him or that the transaction attracted attention at Simla and apparently was instrumental in leading the authorities there to depute Mr. R. D. Bell, the Controller of Oils and Paints, to Calcutta for the purpose of examining Waite's office.

Regard being had to all the circumstances we have detailed we can come to no other conclusion than that this transaction was the result of a corrupt and dishonest bargain to which Waite and Michael and Billinghamurst were parties.

The above statement of facts relates to the three specific instances relied upon by the prosecution as showing the existence of a general conspiracy between the appellants and Waite.

It was argued on behalf of the appellants that the fact that there were three letters from Spalding & Co. to Michael relating to these three matters, proved that there could not have been one general conspiracy and that a separate agreement was entered into with respect to each of the three transactions, viz., linseed oil, turpentine, and water-soluble oil.

BILLINGHURST V. EMPEROR.

On the other hand, it was argued on behalf of the prosecution that the conspiracy to cheat the Government of India was arrived at some time about the 14th June 1918, and that the subsequent agreements were merely supplemental to the original agreement. The dates of the three letters from Messrs. Spalding & Co. to Michael were 14th June 1918, 3rd September 1918, and 20th September 1918.

It was pointed out on behalf of the prosecution that the letter of 14th June 1918, referred to other oils in which Spalding & Co. might be interested, as well as to linseed oil, to which special reference was made—that letter of 3rd September 1918 expressly referred to the previous letter of the 4th June 1918, and that with regard to the letter of the 20th September 1918, which dealt with water-soluble oil, Michael's bill to Spalding & Co. for Rs 7,200, in respect of the difference in rate for water-soluble oil, referred not only to the letter of 20th September 1918, but also to the letter of 14th June 1918.

In our judgment the mere fact of there being these three letters in respect of the three articles is not inconsistent with the existence of one general conspiracy. The letters of the 3rd and 20th September 1918 appear to have been supplemental to the letter of the 14th June 1918.

The large order for turpentine had been given by Waite to Michael on 31st August 1918 and it may not unreasonably be concluded that Michael desired to have it definitely stated that the terms with respect thereto should be on the lines of the letter of the 14th June 1918.

The amount of Spalding & Co.'s bill against the Munitions Board in respect of the order for turpentine was Rs 45,487 and Michael's bill against Spalding & Co. was no less than Rs 17,495.

It was, therefore, an important matter both for Michael and Spalding & Co.

It is to be noted that Michael received no commission in respect of that transaction but his remuneration was based on the excess rate charged to the Munitions Board, whereas in respect of the linseed oil he received commission as well as the other sums already mentioned.

It is further to be noted that this was not the first transaction in turpentine. It appears that on the 2nd July Spalding & Co. received an order for 20 gallons of turpentine, Java, No. 2. Spalding & Co.'s account against the Munitions Board was Rs. 160, Michael's bill against Spalding & Co. was Rs. 80 in respect of the excess rate.

On the 11th July 1918 Spalding & Co. received a further order for 600 gallons of turpentine, Java, No. 2. Spalding & Co.'s bill against Munitions Board was Rs. 3,900 and Michael's bill against Messrs. Spalding & Co. was no less than Rs 2,400.

On the 9th August there was a further order for 25 gallons of turpentine, Java, No. 2, which was supplied at the rate Rs 25 per gallon—a most extortionate charge.

Spalding & Co.'s bill against the Munitions Board was Rs. 625 and Michael's bill against Spalding & Co. was no less a sum than Rs. 500 out of a total of Rs. 625. It is difficult to find any justification for such transactions.

These bills of Michael's against Spalding & Co. were based on the excess rates obtained by him from the Munitions Board over and above the rates quoted to him by Spalding & Co.

These items are to be found entered in Spalding & Co.'s journal at page 21 under the heading of "Michael's Commission Account."

The number of bills, the excess rates and the amounts due to Michael are set out in the entries.

The learned Counsel for Billingham said that Billingham was unaware of these entries or transactions. We find it difficult to accept such a statement.

It is clear, therefore, that the arrangement set out in the letter of the 3rd September 1918, which related to turpentine, was in force and was being acted upon before the letter of the 3rd September 1918 was written and, in our opinion, that letter came into existence because of the large order which had been obtained on the 31st August 1918, in order that there should be no doubt as to the excess profits which Michael was to put into his pocket in respect thereof.

BILLINGHURST v. EMPEROR.

It was on the 20th September 1918 that in answer to an enquiry from Waite, Spalding & Co., wrote saying they could supply the water-soluble oil and they were sending a sample, on the same day Spalding & Co. wrote the letter confirming their quotations to Michael and agreeing to allow him the difference or excess price obtained by him as remuneration for his services. No commission was payable in respect of this matter, but as already pointed out, Michael's bill in respect of water-soluble oil referred not only to the 20th September letter, but also to the letter of 14th June 1918, showing that it was treated as being part and parcel of the original arrangement, with a variation as to the terms. Having regard to these facts, we are of opinion that the argument based on the three letters to the effect that there could not have been one general conspiracy, fails.

It was further urged on behalf of the appellants that the fact that there were many transactions intervening between the dates of the three matters alleged as overt acts by the prosecution, and that it was not proved that such transactions were fraudulent or dishonest was inconsistent with the existence of one general conspiracy.

We are not prepared to accept that contention. Assuming for the sake of argument that all such other transactions were honest, but that the three which have been investigated were not honest, these facts are not inconsistent with a criminal conspiracy to defraud the Government of India as and when opportunity occurred.

Reference was made to Waite's banking account which showed the payment into his account of various large sums of money, some of them in cash, the result being that there was an accretion of about a lakh of rupees in the course of a year over and above his salary.

We are of opinion that no reliance can be placed upon this matter, as showing that Waite was a party to the conspiracy alleged in this prosecution, for no proof has been given that any of such sums were in connection with the transactions now under consideration.

Having regard to the facts which have been proved in this case, we are constrained to come to the conclusion that Michael and Billinghurst entered into a criminal conspiracy, as charged by the prosecution, to cheat the Government of India of sums of money in connection with supplies by Spalding & Co. to the Munitions Board, and that the facts point to there having been one general conspiracy to carry out such cheating as and when opportunity occurred.

We are further of opinion that such cheating could not have been carried out except with the connivance, assistance and knowledge of Waite, and that Waite himself was a party to the criminal conspiracy alleged.

The result of our conclusion, arrived at after a prolonged hearing of the appeal, is that the decision of the learned Magistrate in respect of the first charge must be upheld.

The second charge was as follows:—
“That between the 26th August 1918, and the 10th December 1918, in Calcutta, you (1) J. Stoddart, (2) H. P. Balackburn, (3), P. E. Billinghurst, and (4) P. H. Michael cheated the Government of India by dishonestly inducing them to deliver cheque No. 53,258 for the sum of Rs 59,265, the property of the Government of India, for credit of Messrs. Spalding & Co. in payment of fraudulent bills Nos. 133 to 137 for linseed oil and thereby committed an offence punishable under section 420, Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of my Court.”

The charge refers to the five bills Nos. 133 to 137, Volume II of the Paper Book, pages 143 to 153. Objection was taken to the form of the charge on the ground that it did not state the person or persons who were deceived by the alleged fraudulent bills Nos. 133 to 137, and who were thereby induced to deliver the cheque for Rs 59,265.

It was alleged that, although the Government of India might be said to be a person within the meaning of section 420 of the Indian Penal Code, there was no suggestion that the persons constituting the Government of India as defined by section 16 of the Indian Penal Code, were deceived or induced to issue the cheque and that the defence were entitled to know the person or persons upon whose mind or minds the fraudulent bills were alleged to have operated.

In our judgment, the charge should have contained an allegation of the person or persons who were alleged to have been deceived and induced to issue the cheque.

We are of opinion, however, that the omission should not be regarded as a fatal defect in the charge, inasmuch as the accused were not misled and there was no failure of justice by reason of the omission of the above-named particulars from the charge.

Another objection was taken to the second charge. It was alleged that the five bills, therein referred to, were presented at different dates, and that if any offence was committed by the appellants in respect of the bills, there were five separate offences of cheating and five separate offences could not be included in one charge.

In our judgment this contention cannot be accepted.

The offence charged under section 420, Indian Penal Code, would not be complete until the Government of India, being induced thereto by the alleged fraudulent bills, delivered the cheque for Rs. 59,265. Until the last of the five bills was delivered the inducement was not complete, and until the cheque was issued the offence under section 420, Indian Penal Code, was not complete.

In our judgment, therefore, the charge did not include five separate offences as alleged, but one offence only.

A further objection, however, was raised on the ground that the prosecution have not proved that any person or persons representing the Government of India was or were deceived by the alleged false and fraudulent representations contained in the bills or were induced to issue the cheque by reason thereof.

The material facts in this respect are as follows—The bills Nos. 133 to 137 were sent by Spalding & Co. to Waite, on the 10th October 1918, sent them to the Deputy Controller of War Accounts, Calcutta, with a covering letter of that date, addressed to Deputy Controller, War Accounts, Munitions Board, Simla.

The Deputy Controller, War Accounts (Munitions Board), Calcutta, forwarded the bills with Waite's letter to Simla.

He made an endorsement on the letter as follows—"Not checked. order is prior to August, 1918."

In his evidence S K. Dutta Gupta, the Deputy Controller, War Accounts, Calcutta, explained that, with regard to bills relating to orders placed before 1st August 1918, he passed them from Calcutta to Delhi or Simla without audit or check which he left to the Delhi or Simla office.

In pursuance of this practice the above-mentioned endorsement was made.

The bills in question were dealt with in the audit office at Simla by an Official, N K. Ayer. The cheque for Rs 59,265 was signed by another Official, C. P. A. Aiyar. C. P. A. Aiyar, who signed the cheque, said that before issuing a cheque he saw that the bills had been properly signed and passed by the audit officer, viz, Mr I. P. Dutt in 12 cases and by the other audit officer, N. K. Ayer, as regards the rest of the bills in respect of linseed oil. The bills in question bear endorsement "Passed for Rs ———," the endorsement in each case mentioning the amount of the bill and being initialled by N. K. Ayer.

N. K. Ayer, however, was not called as a witness.

The prosecution allege that the two persons deceived by the alleged fraudulent bills were S K. Dutta Gupta, the Deputy Controller, War Accounts, at Calcutta, and N. K. Ayer, the audit officer, at Simla; and that C. P. A. Aiyar was the person induced by the alleged fraudulent bills to issue the cheque.

In our judgment, however, it is clear from the evidence that C. P. A. Aiyar relied solely upon the endorsement and initials of the audit officer, N. K. Ayer, which authorized him to pay the bills, and not upon any statements contained in the bills.

N. K. Ayer, the audit officer, should have been called as a witness, as is now admitted by the prosecution.

BILLINGHURST V. EMPEROR.

S. K. Dutta Gupta, the Deputy Controller, War Accounts, Calcutta, said in his evidence that if he had been informed that the proper quantity of linseed oil had not been supplied, he would not have allowed the bills to be forwarded to Simla.

He went on, however, to say that his instructions to his Superintendent were that before forwarding the bills for payment he was to see that they were countersigned by the Deputy Controller, Inspection, i. e., Waite.

It has already been stated that the bills were not checked in the office of the Deputy Controller, War Accounts, Calcutta, and it is clear that all that was done with regard to the bills in question in that office was to see that the bills were countersigned by Waite and the bills were then forwarded to Simla.

As far as the office of the Deputy Controller, War Accounts, Calcutta, was concerned, the officials relied upon the signature of Waite. It was his signature which induced them to forward the bills to Simla.

It has been admitted that unless it can be shown that Waite was a party to the conspiracy alleged in the first charge, the second charge must fail. It is clear that this must be so, for if Waite was not a party to the conspiracy, he would be one of the persons deceived by the alleged false and fraudulent representations in the bills and he has not been called as a witness to prove this.

The case, therefore, appears as follows—

C. P. A. Aiyar issued the cheque relying on the endorsement on the bills initialled by the audit officer, N. K. Ayer, which authorized him to pay them.

N. K. Ayer has not been called to prove what it was which induced him to pass the bills.

The other audit officer, I. P. Dutt, who did not pass the five bills in question was called as a witness and he said that as regards the bills with which he dealt, he was only concerned to see that the bills were duly countersigned by the purchasing officer (in this case Waite) and that they were arithmetically correct.

It is probable that N. K. Ayer did no more than I. P. Dutt, but, on the other hand, it is possible that he did more, and that he did not rely solely on the signature of Waite.

In a criminal case, such as this, it is not permissible to speculate on such a question and the audit actually applied by N. K. Ayer to the bills in question should have been proved by the prosecution.

S. K. Dutta Gupta, the Deputy Controller, War Accounts, Calcutta, was little more than a forwarding agent in respect of the bills in question; he did not check them, and all he did was to see that they were countersigned by Waite.

In our judgment, the prosecution have not proved that any official of the Government of India was deceived by the alleged false and fraudulent representations contained in the bills, and they have not proved that any official of the Government of India was induced by the false representations, alleged to have been made by Michael and Billinghurst in the bills, to issue the cheque for Rs 59,265.

Assuming that Waite was a party to the conspiracy with the two appellants to cheat the Government, the prosecution, in our judgment, have failed to prove the elements necessary to constitute the charge under section, 420 Indian Penal Code, in respect of the five bills Nos. 133 to 137.

Although the prosecution in our judgment have, for the reasons already stated, failed to prove at least one and perhaps two of the elements necessary to substantiate the offence contained in the second charge, viz., under section, 420, Indian Penal Code, we are of opinion that the evidence produced in support of that charge is sufficient to support a charge of an attempt or attempts on the part of the appellants to commit the offence involved in the second charge.

In our judgment, the appellants presented the bills, referred to in the second charge, knowing that they contained false representations as regards the number of gallons of linseed oil by Spalding & Co.

The presentation of each of the bills was an application for the payment of money under false pretences. It was done dishonestly and with the object of deceiving the officials of the Government of India and inducing the Government of India to issue a cheque or cheques for the amounts of the bills.

As soon as each of the bills was presented the offence of attempt was committed.

The appellants might have been convicted of the attempt although it was not charged (see section 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code).

The Magistrate, however, did not take this course, as in his view the offence charged had been proved. Nor was it suggested in argument that the appellants should now be convicted of the attempt and we do not propose to take that course in appeal. We are of opinion, however, that the evidence in respect of the charge, so far as the appellants are concerned, is material on the question of the conspiracy alleged in the first charge.

It is necessary in this connection to notice an argument which was urged by the learned Counsel on behalf of Billinghamst, viz., that even assuming he knew that the bills presented by Spalding & Co contained false representations as regards the number of gallons of linseed oil supplied by Messrs. Spalding & Co. his action in presenting the bills could not be regarded as dishonest, as he expected and believed that the bills would be checked by the Government of India officials and that if they did check the bills and passed them, after such checking, Spalding & Co. would legitimately be entitled to receive the amounts of the bills.

We cannot for a moment accept such an argument. If we were to give any sanction to such conduct, as being legitimate, it would entail a serious inroad upon the principles of common honesty and commercial integrity.

The result of our judgment is that the Magistrate's decision as to the first charge must be upheld, and that the conviction under the second charge should be set aside.

We have now to consider the question of sentence. The premises of Messrs. Spalding & Co. were searched on the 23rd December 1919, and at other times between that date and the 22nd August 1920, when the complaint in this case was lodged.

Billinghamst was arrested in September 1920, and released on bail on the 9th September 1920. Extradition proceedings were instituted with regard to Waite, Balckburn and Michael who were in England. Waite was seriously ill and was not extradited but in pursuance of the extradition proceedings Blackburn and Michael were brought before the Court in April 1921 under arrest.

On the 24th May 1921 on the application of Billinghamst the High Court made an order that the trial of the case should proceed, though the presence of Waite could not be obtained, and gave a direction that the proceedings before the learned Magistrate should be continued as far as possible from day to day and completed with all possible despatch.

The trial began on the 7th June 1921 the hearing was not finished until 22nd August 1922, and judgment was delivered on the 28th November 1922.

In our judgment it is necessary to draw attention to these dates and to express our grave concern at the length of time occupied by the trial of this case.

From whatever point of view the matter is approached, it is equally serious. However, guilty an accused person may be, it is most undesirable that he should be subjected to the strain and anxiety of such prolonged proceedings unless it is absolutely unavoidable.

From the other point of view, it must be obvious that the costs of proceedings, such as these, must be increased proportionately as the proceedings are prolonged.

From the materials before us it is clear that adjournments were at various times granted on the application of one or other of the accused, sometimes on the ground of illness, and that they were responsible for some of the delay. On the other hand, they certainly were not responsible for anything like all the delay, as, for instance, on one occasion the Magistrate was unable to proceed with the case for a whole month owing to his being deputed to other work, viz., enquiry into a disturbance at the Jail.

What amount of unnecessary repetition and additional labour was entailed by such an interference with the proceedings, only those engaged in the trial and conduct of the case can say. It was a case full of details with many exhibits and the extra work and time involved by reason of such an interference must have been very considerable.

We recognise that the case was by no means an easy one; there were many documents and accounts to be examined and materials had to be collected from various places but, making all allowances for these matters, we see no real justification for so long a time being occupied in the disposal of this case, and we have felt bound to draw attention to this matter in the public interest.

There is another reason for referring to the length of the proceedings and that is that we consider it material on the question of sentence.

As already mentioned, Billinghamurst was arrested in September 1920, subsequently released on bail, and convicted in November 1922.

Michael was brought from England and placed before the Court in April 1921, and convicted in November 1922.

The strain, anxiety and mental suffering, to which the appellants must have been subject during this long time, must have been severe, and that is a matter which, in our judgment, may legitimately be taken into consideration in passing sentence.

For these reasons we reduce the sentence of one year to one of nine calendar months.

With regard to the appeal of the Crown against the acquittal of Blackburn, viz., No. 1 of 1923, in our judgment the prosecution have not shown sufficient reasons for interference on our part with the decision of the learned

Magistrate and consequently the appeal in this case must be dismissed.

During the course of the argument a statement was made by the learned Counsel, appearing for Billinghamurst, to the effect that an offer had been made on behalf of the Government of India to withdraw the case on certain terms. We thought it necessary to ask the learned Advocate-General to ascertain precisely what occurred and he said he was not instructed with respect to this matter.

He afterwards made the following statement—"Government never offered to release Billinghamurst on any terms at all. On August 1921, the case against Sukhlal Kernani was withdrawn.

By a letter, dated the 9th August 1921, Mr Armstrong, the investigating officer, reported to Government that Blackburn had called that morning at the Munitions Office and that the question of withdrawing the prosecution against Spalding & Co., which arose as a possible consequence of the withdrawal of Kernani's case, was discussed. Blackburn was told very clearly that the withdrawal could not be recommended, if there was any chance of Government being subsequently harassed with claims by the accused; he was told that the accused might submit for consideration a petition, that if the case against Spalding were withdrawn, the accused undertook to bring no claim for damages or costs against Government in respect of it, that the circumstances of the case justified the extradition and the case being put in Court and that they withdrew all imputations made in a petition presented to Court on the 12th July. He was further told that if he put in such a petition it would be forwarded to Simla.

By letter, dated 10th August 1921, Mr Armstrong reported to Government that Billinghamurst did not intend to apply for withdrawal unless Government were prepared to pay him compensation.

On the 15th the Government issued orders that "Spalding's case should not be withdrawn but should be prosecuted to a conclusion."

KISHORE V. EMPEROR.

In our judgment this matter is outside the scope of this appeal, and it is not necessary for us to express any opinion with respect thereto.

The appellants must surrender to their bail at once.

With regard to what the two learned Vakils have just urged, namely, for dealing with the accused Billinghamst under the First Offenders Act or for further reduction of the sentence of the accused, we desire to say that we considered this matter fully and carefully before we delivered our judgment and we regret that we can see no reason for altering the decision at which we have arrived.

The application for granting compensation to Mr. Blackburn is rejected.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 30, 337 (2A)—Pardon to approver by a 30 Magistrate—Trial of case

A Magistrate with powers under section 30 of the Criminal Procedure Code who has tendered a pardon to an approver cannot try the case in which the approver is to be examined as a witness, but must commit the accused to Sessions Court or High Court if he is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of the offence.

Appeal against the finding and sentence of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Saugor, dated the 10th May 1924, in Criminal Case No 25 of 1924.

Mr. P. Lobo, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment also disposes of Criminal Appeals Nos. 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 119 and 120 of 1924. The ten appellants are: Kishore, Nanhoo, Lalji, Partab, Nathoo, Malthu, Jhalua, Jannaprasad, Balua and Halka, respectively. These ten persons have been convicted at one trial of an offence under section 400 of the Indian Penal Code, and all with the exception of Malthu have been sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. The appellant Malthu has been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment.

The case has been tried by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate with section 30 powers. Under these powers a Sub-Divisional Magistrate has power to try as a Magistrate all offences not punishable with death. On the 28th February 1924 one Gajraj Singh was examined under section 337 of the Criminal Procedure Code and a pardon was tendered to him on condition of his making a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances within his knowledge in connection with this case. That pardon was accepted, and eventually Gajraj was examined as an approver in the case on the 26th March 1924. Now the amended section 337 (2A) of the Criminal Procedure Code runs as follows.—

"In every case where a person has accepted a tender of pardon and has been examined under sub-section (2) the Magistrate before whom the proceedings are pending shall, if he is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that the accused is guilty of an offence, commit him for trial to the Court of Session or High Court as the case may be."

This section clearly governs section 30 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Select Committee, referring to the amendment of this section, say:—

"... (f) We think all cases in which there is an approver should be committed for trial, and we have deleted the provision which enabled cases to be transferred to section 30 Magistrates."

It seems very clear that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had not the power to try the present case, because there was an approver's testimony in it. He should have committed the case for trial to the Sessions Court. It is unnecessary to take further evidence, but the Magistrate will write a short order giving his reasons for committing the case. I set aside the convictions and sentences passed on the appellants and direct that the lower Court do now commit the case for trial to the Sessions Court.

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, with powers to try offences under section 124A, Indian Penal Code, Amritsar, dated the 4th February 1924.

Mr. B. R. Puri and Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a conviction under section 124A, Indian Penal Code. The appellants are two in number, namely, Jiwan Singh, the editor, and Sewa Singh, the publisher, of a certain newspaper published in Gurmukhi at Amritsar under the name and style of 'The Kirpnan Bahadur.' The subject-matter of the charges is to be found in an article published in its issue of the 25th February 1923, an English translation of which is set out in extenso in the judgment of the Trial Magistrate. The case for the prosecution is that this article is seditious and that it is calculated to bring into hatred and contempt or to excite feelings of disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. Both the accused have been found guilty, and have been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 150 each.

The finding of the learned Magistrate has been assailed before me mainly on the ground that the article is not seditious within the meaning of section 124A, Indian Penal Code, and that there is nothing on the record to show that on a perusal of this article any feelings of hatred or contempt were excited among its readers towards the British Government. It is pointed out that only three witnesses were produced on behalf of the prosecution and that there was nothing in their evidence to support the finding of the learned Magistrate that the accused were guilty of the offence with which they had been charged. On the contrary reliance was placed on the evidence of the defence witnesses most of whom are alleged to have deposed to the effect that the article was not seditious and that it was not capable of bearing a sinister interpretation. Now the question whether the article is or is not seditious within the meaning of section 124A, Indian Penal Code, depends upon whether the article was or was not intended to bring the Government into hatred or contempt. It is now well settled that intention is a state of mind which may be gathered from the surrounding circumstances and may well be presumed from the conduct of the writer or the publisher which would of course include also the character of the language employed by him. In the case of Ree v Burdett (1) it was held by Mr. Justice Best that if it appeared that the contents of the paper were likely to excite sedition and disaffection, the defendant must be presumed to intend that which his act was likely to produce. Similarly in the case of Haire v. Wilson (2), it was held by Lord Tenterden, C. J., that every man is presumed to intend the natural and ordinary consequences of his act. If the tendency of the publication was injurious to the plaintiff, the law will assume that the defendant by publishing it, intended to produce the injury which it was calculated to effect. In the case of Queen-Empress v. Luxman Narayan Joshi (3), Sir Lawrence Jenkins in his charge to the Jury said:—"It is obvious that you must determine what was the accused's intention. Was it his intention to call into being hostile feeling? To decide this, you have to be guided by the rule (perhaps a rough and ready rule, but one always accepted until it can be shown that there is no room for its application) that a man must be taken to intend the natural and reasonable consequences of his act, so that if on reading through these articles the reasonable and natural and probable effect of these articles on the minds of those to whom they were addressed appears to you to be that feelings of hatred, contempt or disaffection would be excited towards the Government, then you will be justified in saying that these articles were written with that intent, and that these articles, therefore, are an attempt to create the feeling against which the law seeks to provide." Similarly Mr. Mayne in his Criminal Law of India says, "Intention for this purpose is really no more than meaning. When a man is charged in respect of anything he has written or said, the meaning of what he said or wrote must be taken to be his meaning, and that meaning is what his language would be understood to mean by the people to whom it is addressed."

It is clear from these authorities that intention is an essential element in the offence of sedition, though the section does not expressly say so, and it is also clear that it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove the intention directly by evidence which in most cases would be impracticable. The law will presume the intention—whether good or bad—from the language and conduct of the accused, and it will be then for him to show that his words were harmless and his motives innocent.

Judged by this test the sole question for determination is whether from the language used in the article it can be inferred that the accused intended to excite feelings of disaffection towards the British Government. The article in question is headed as "The sentences on two more Akalis have been enhanced." It begins by reminding its readers that the sentences on Sardar Kharak Singh and Sardar Jaswant Singh, two of the Akali leaders confined in the Dera Ghazi Khan Jail, had already been enhanced. It then goes on to inform them that the sentences on two more Akalis in the same Jail, Sardar Mehr Singh and Sardar Ganda Singh, had also been enhanced by nine months' each and that Jaswant Singh had been punished with bar fetters also. It then proceeds to criticise the policy of the Government which it calls a double-faced policy in releasing some of the prisoners arrested in Guru ka bagh affair before the expiry of their original sentences and enhancing the sentences of others. It is then insinuated that the reason given by the Government for enhancing the sentences that the prisoners have been guilty of infringing the Jail Rules is false and that the sentences had very probably been enhanced for some other ulterior reason which had not been made public. The readers are reminded of the sufferings of the Sikh prisoners in the Guru ka bagh affair and it is pointed out that it is impossible to believe that they would now be guilty of infringing the Jail Rules when they had not resisted even as much as by raising their little finger against the authorities on that occasion. The language employed in the article to emphasize this fact is to the following effect:—

JIWAN SINGH v. EMPRESS.

"How can these people be expected to break the Jail Rules who did not lift even one finger, when they were bludgeoned and their long hairs were pulled? Not one hair (on the bodies of those) had been injured who pelted stones on the faces of Sikh prisoners, suspended the latter from trees, threatened to thrust kuththa (halal) meat and beef into their mouths and committed on them such other diverse outrages in defiance of the Jail Rules as they liked. But troubles are piled on respectable Sikhs on one pretext or another." Then there is a reflection on the Government's sense of justice which it is insinuated has become altogether wrapped as evidenced by the present happenings. It is stated: "Blessed is British Rule as also its justice, the Rule under which, it is said, the lion and the goat drink at the same ghat." Lastly, there is a sentence which says that it is impossible for the Sikh community to forget the treatment which has been meted out to them by those who had been posing as their friends for the last 70 years.

The learned Magistrate has found that the article is seditious and that it is calculated to promote feelings of ill-will and hostility towards the British Government. I have given a very careful consideration to the language of the article with a view to form my own judgment as to its character, and I can come to no other conclusion than that its object and intention was to bring the Government as contemplated by section 124A, Indian Penal Code, into hatred and contempt or to excite feelings of disaffection towards it. The article was written in Gurmukhi at the time when the relations between the Government and the Sikhs were very much strained. The Government was therein charged with having restored to various excesses in order to humiliate the Sikh community. Its policy was designated as a double-faced policy and it was insinuated that in order to gain its ulterior objects the Government had not hesitated to disregard even the religious scruples and prejudices of the Sikh community. There can be no doubt that the article was seditious within the meaning of section 124A, Indian Penal Code, and that it was likely to cause disaffection or produce hatred or contempt towards the Government.

The question of sentence, however, requires consideration. The accused Jiwan Singh belongs to a very respectable family; some of its members are holding responsible posts under the Government and the past record of the accused himself has so far been very satisfactory. He has expressed regret for what he has written and has clearly stated before me that his object in writing this article was not to excite disaffection towards the Government. There can also be no doubt that the first portion of the article giving information as to the enhancement of the sentences on some of the Akali leaders was copied from other Akali papers in which the news had already appeared. The second portion was based on certain communiques issued by the Sharomani Gurdwara Parbandhak Committee at Amritsar. These circumstances cannot of course justify the publication of the article in question, but may certainly be taken into consideration in mitigation of the offence with which the accused has been charged. The accused is an old man of about 55 years of age and has probably been led away by his religious zeal. Having regard to his past record and to the circumstances stated above, I consider that the sentence of Rs. 150 fine would be quite sufficient to meet the ends of justice. I accordingly uphold the conviction but reduce the sentence to the extent above indicated.

It follows from what has been stated above that the appellant Sewa Singh, who is admittedly the publisher of the article, is equally guilty. His conviction must, therefore, also be upheld, but the sentence reduced to the same extent as in the case of the other appellant Jiwan Singh. I accordingly uphold the conviction and the sentence of Rs. 150 fine, but set aside the sentence of imprisonment. In default of payment of fine both the accused will undergo two months' rigorous imprisonment each.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, and Mr. Y. N. Nadkarni for Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are briefly these. The plaintiff is the Swami of the Hiramath at Haveri. He filed this suit on the 25th February 1918 against the Secretary of State for India and two other defendants. These two defendants represent the line of one Chanviraya, who was the father of Baslingaya shown in the genealogy in paragraph 3 of the plaint. The plaintiff's predecessor-in-title as the Swami of the math was one Tirmalswami. This Tirmalswami, before he became the Swami of the math, in his family was the natural brother of the said Chanviraya. The suit relates to three Survey Nos 35, 136 and 137 which, roughly speaking, represent two out of the four lands which were originally assigned under the sanad of 1868 to Chanviraya for the purpose of remunerating him in connection with the performance of his duties as a jangam. The plaintiff's case is that really he and his predecessors, the Swamis of the math have been the jangam and the lands were really assigned to them. It appears, however, from the statement of the case that two lands are admittedly in the possession of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. These are Survey Nos. 7 and 310 which apparently correspond to the old Nos. 5 and 224. The plaintiff's case is that he is the rightful owner of the three lands mentioned in the suit, and that the defendants have no right whatever to those lands beyond recovering the amount payable to the Government as judi. On the application of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the Collector made an order that "full rent as per Form E was to be recovered for all the three numbers and paid to applicants" on the 24th April 1915. There was an appeal from this to the Commissioner who upheld the order on the 16th September 1915. There was a memorial to the Government; but the Government declined to interfere on the 29th September

PATDAYA. V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

1916. As a result of this order, the full economic rent in respect of these two lands was levied for three years as stated in paragraph 9 of the plaint amounting in all to Rs. 481-5-6. The present suit is filed by the plaintiff on the footing of the cause of action having arisen in virtue of the interference by the Revenue Authorities with his rights by charging economic rent, and he has claimed the following reliefs:—

(a) that the plaintiff should be declared as the jangam of the Hiremath of Haveri and not the defendants Nos. 2 and 3;

(b) that a permanent injunction be issued restraining defendant No. 1 from recovering the full rent of the lands mentioned in paragraph 1, and from paying the same to defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and again restraining defendants Nos. 2 and 3 from receiving the same;

(c) that the sum of Rs. 481-5-6 mentioned in paragraph 9 of his plaint should be ordered to be re-paid to the plaintiff;

(d) in case the Court holds that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are jangams of the said Hiremath and they are entitled to recover the jangam grant from plaintiff, that it should be declared that they are entitled to recover the royal share of the revenue only of the lands mentioned in paragraph 1, i. e., the assessment levied on them and not the full rent of same.

Defendant No. 1 denied the claim of the plaintiff both as the jangam and as the owner of these lands. He also denied that the plaintiff or his predecessors had been in possession for a long time past as alleged by the plaintiff. His case was that these lands were assigned for the jangam service useful to the community at Haveri and that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were the jangams, and were entitled to the lands. It was also denied that the service was remunerated merely by the royal share of the revenue of the lands. By a supplemental statement the objections were raised that the claim was barred under section 4 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act X of 1876, and that it was barred by Art. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 asserted their own right both to the office as jangam and to the lands in question, and in other respects they raised the same objections which defendant No. 1 had raised to the suit.

On this several issues were raised. It is not necessary to refer to those issues and to the findings in detail here but in the result the plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

The plaintiff has appealed from this decree, and in support of the appeal several questions have been argued. It will be convenient to take the points with reference to the prayers in the plaint, and to deal with them as they have been raised in the appeal. The first prayer relates to the declaration that the plaintiff is the jangam and not defendants No. 2 and 3. This office is useful to the village community, and the lands assigned to the officeholder are assigned in respect of the services which he has to render. In the present case the Government continued the lands for the office of the jangam under the sanad of 1863, which was issued to Chanviraya, who would represent Baslingaya's branch as shown in the plaint.

As regards the first prayer it is clear that the claim is barred under section 4 (a), 2nd paragraph of Act X of 1876. It provides that "subject to the exceptions hereinafter appearing, no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction as to any of the following matters: claims to perform the duties of any such officer or servant," such officer or servant having been specified in the first paragraph which would include any other village officer or servant. It was rightly conceded in the course of the argument by Mr. Nilkant, that the jurisdiction of the Courts as to the first prayer would be barred under this clause, and it is not necessary to labour this point.

But it has been argued in this appeal that though the question as to who is the jangam is excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts the Courts could determine the question whether the lands were assigned to the ancestors of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 or to the plaintiff's ancestors. The evidence bearing on the question as to whether the grant was originally to the Swami of the Hiremath at Haveri or to Chanviraya, the original ancestor of the present defendants Nos. 2 and 3, has been discussed at some length. It is common ground, however, between the parties, or at any rate the contrary has not been suggested on behalf of the appellant, that the lands are given as remuneration for the services to be rendered as jangam; and if the Court cannot determine whether the plaintiff is the jangam and if it must accept the fact that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the jangams as the representatives of the jangam whom the Government accepted as the office-holder, it must also be accepted that the lands were assigned to them as remuneration for the services to be performed by them as jangams. In this view of the matter, it is needless to discuss the evidence as to the grant. But we may mention briefly, that even if it was open to us to consider the evidence bearing on the question whether the grant was originally to the Swami of the math or to Chanviraya, the evidence points to the conclusion that the lands were given originally by the former Government to Chanviraya. Exhibits 240, 242, and 244 show that so far back as 1820 the lands stood in the name of Chanviraya, and it is conceded that the lands have all along stood in the name of Chanviraya. When an inquiry was made before the Inam Commission, it appears that Baslingaya, the son of Chanviraya, made a statement in 1845, Exhibit 210, which is relied upon by the appellant as proving his case. As against this, however, we have the fact that in 1854 in Suit No. 201 between the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 there was a compromise decree, which is Exhibit 218, and according to that the lands continued to be in the name of the defendants' ancestors; and above all we have the fact that in 1888 Government granted the sanad to Chanviraya. The decision of the Inam Commission, if there was any, has not been put in. Under these circumstances in spite of the statement of Baslingaya, which is not altogether unequivocal, but which we are willing to take for the purpose of the present argument as telling in favour of the plaintiff's case, the conclusion must be accepted that the lands were appurtenant to the office and were assigned to the ancestors of the present defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

PATDAYA V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

As regards the second prayer which relates to the injunction against defendant No. 1 restraining him from recovering the full rent of the lands, and from paying the same to defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 restraining them from receiving the same, the question stands on a different footing. It is urged on behalf of defendant No. 1 that the suit is barred under section 4 (a), paragraphs 1 and 4 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. It is important to remember that the Collector has apparently acted under the Rules framed by the Government in 1908 for the resumption of lands. These rules purport to have been framed under the powers conferred by Act XI of 1852, Schedule B, sections 8 and 10, and by Bombay Act VII of 1863, section 2, clause 3 and all other powers in this behalf. Under rule 4, the Collector has the power in respect of lands which do not fall under rules 2 and 3 at his discretion to resume these lands if he finds that the lands are in possession of third parties; and under rule 6 he can summarily evict any person wrongfully in possession of the land, or levy any rent due by any person in the manner that may be prescribed for the time being in force for the levy of a revenue demand. In the present case the Collector ordered the economic rent to be levied; and the only possible basis for this order is afforded by these rules. No other statutory power is referred to as justifying the order. The plaintiff's case is that these rules are ultra vires of the Government so far as the territories to which Act XI of 1852 applies are concerned, as regards those lands which are held by servants of the class mentioned in paragraph 1 of section 8 of Schedule B of Act XI of 1852. The Government has power to regulate by rules the question of emoluments relating to service performed to the State under the 5th provision of section 8. But the Government has no power under that Act to frame any rules with reference to the resumption of lands given as emoluments of any hereditary office, such of karis, village joshis, etc. It is common ground that the office of a jangam comes under the first paragraph of section 8. Therefore, by the very preamble of these rules it is clear that they could not have been intended to apply to lands held by such village servants in the territories to which Act XI of 1852 applies. It may be mentioned that there is no provision in Bombay Act II of 1863, like the provision in section 2, clause (3), sub-clause (3) in Bombay Act VII of 1863. The case for the plaintiff is that the order of the Collector is ultra vires so far as it purports to levy rent in excess of the full assessment authorised by Government. The claim, so far as it relates to this excess amount over the assessment authorised by law, would be saved under section 5 (a) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. Under that section it is open to the plaintiff to file a suit against Government, contesting the amount claimed, or paid under protest, on the ground that such amount is in excess of the amount authorised in that behalf by Government. Assuming, therefore, that the claim as to this rent would fall under clause (a) of section 4, paragraphs 1 and 4, it is saved from the bar of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act to the extent which I have stated.

It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that the suit would be saved also under clauses (i) and (k) of section 4 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. It is clear that no decision under Act XI of 1852 has been put in, and no exemption is claimed on the basis of such a decision. Therefore, clause (k) would not apply. The sanad in question does not purport to have been issued under Bombay Act II of 1863, and it seems to us that it could not have been issued under that Act as it does not apply to "lands held for service" as provided in section 1, clause (2), sub-clause (3). We are unable to accept Mr. Nilkant's argument that "service" there means service to the State, and not service to the village community. It would not be possible to accept this contention without reading words in the clause which are not there and the construction would be opposed to the observation in Jamal Sahab v. Murgaya Swami (1). Therefore, clause (i) also would not apply. But we think that the suit is saved under section 5 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act. This point was not decided in the two decisions which have been referred to in the course of the argument, viz., Mohamadsahab v. The Secretary of State for India (2) and Fakrudinsab v. The Secretary of State for India (3).

The lower Court has taken the view that even though the order may not be justified under any statutory provision, it must be deemed to be valid on the ground that the Government have the inherent power of authorising the Collector to resume the lands summarily where they appertain to the office of a village servant of the description mentioned in Act XI of 1852, Schedule B, rule 8, paragraph 1 and where the office is found to be dissociated from the lands which would be contrary to the purpose of the grant of the lands as remuneration for services to be rendered to the village community. We are, however, unable to accept this view. We do not think that unless the powers could be referred to any statutory provision, or any rule which has the force of law, it could be assumed that the Collector would have the power of disturbing the possession of any third parties who may have acquired rights in respect of such lands under the operation of law, as for example, by adverse possession. Where a third party is found in possession of such lands, either the party interested must sue him for possession; or if the Government feel interested in the restoration of the lands, they may be able to sue the third party for such restoration. We do not express any opinion on this last point. But we think that if these rules are not intra vires of the Government as regards such lands as we are concerned with in this case, and if the Collector has no power to disturb the possession of a third party by summarily evicting him or by levying economic rent, the plaintiff is entitled to maintain a suit for the purpose of restraining the Collector from enforcing the order in question.

This of course does not affect the question as to who has the title to these lands, nor does it affect the question whether the Collector or the Government has the right to sue the plaintiff for the purpose of restoring the lands to the office-holder. But if the order made by the Collector and upheld by the Commissioner is ultra vires, the plaintiff is entitled to prevent the Revenue Authorities from recovering the full rent. It appears in this case that in 1868 when a sanad was granted, the full assessment in respect of all the lands was Rs. 90, and that was the amount which was to be paid to the Government under the sanad. Therefore, at that time the lands were continued on payment of judi, amounting to full assessment. It appears, however, that at the next Revision Survey in 1876-77 the assessments were raised in respect of these lands and the total assessment under that Revision Survey was Rs. 129 in respect of all the five lands. The Government was entitled to Rs. 90 under the sanad, and the difference between the two items represented the benefit to the sanad-holder. It further appears that in 1909-10 this amount of assessment was further enhanced to Rs. 145-8-0, and according to that the sanad-holder would be entitled to the difference between Rs. 145-8-0 and Rs. 90. The plaintiff's present claim must be confined to the excess over the full assessment in respect of the three lands in suits which is recovered by the Collector under the order in question, and to that extent, as we have said, the suit is maintainable. On the merits, in spite of the argument of the learned Government Pleader to the contrary, we are unable to hold that the order of the Collector levying economic rent can be justified. As regards the lands held by village servants useful to the village community under Act XI of 1852, Schedule B, section 8, paragraph (1), the Government have accepted the view that these rules have no validity. Our conclusion, however, is based upon the view that we take of the powers of Government to frame such rules quite independently of that Resolution. In our opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction restraining defendant No. 1 from levying the economic rent under the order made by the Collector in April 1915 so far as it is in excess of the full assessment leviable in respect of these three lands.

It is conceded, and it is indisputable, that the Collector is entitled to levy the full assessment from the plaintiff in respect of these lands, and to pay to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 the difference between the full assessment and the judi payable to the Government under the sanad. The relief by way of injunction is confined only to the excess over that full assessment.

It will be convenient to deal here with the further question which has been raised on behalf of defendant No. 1 that the suit is time-barred, because the suit to set aside such orders must be brought under Art. 14 of the Indian Limitation Act within a year from the date of the order. It is needless, however, to refer to the many decisions bearing on this point. It is clear that if the order is ultra vires, it need not be set aside, and this is not a suit to set aside the order. It is a suit to seek relief on the footing that the order is ultra vires. That is a recognised distinction so far as the application of Art. 14 is concerned, and we do not think that Art. 14 can apply to the claim for injunction.

In the result, the plaintiff's claim must be disallowed except with reference to the injunction. We would, therefore, allow the appeal to that extent and vary the decree of the lower Court by granting an injunction against defendant No. 1 restraining him from recovering any rent in excess of the full assessment in respect of the lands in suit under the order of the Collector dated 24th April 1915.

The plaintiff has sought to put in two documents relating to a period prior to 1820 with a view to show that the original inamdar was, not, Ohanviraya but the Swami of the math. It was perfectly open to the plaintiff to produce these documents at the trial of the suit and no adequate reason is shown, in our opinion, why he should be allowed to make good the omission now. The reason as stated in the petition is that he thought that the statement of Baslingaya, Exhibit 210, was quite sufficient to prove his case, and that, therefore, he did not care to put them in. That is hardly a ground for allowing this application. Secondly, as we have already mentioned in the judgment, the question whether the plaintiff is the jangam or defendants No. 2 and 3 are the jangams is a matter which cannot be determined by a Civil Court, and, as it is not disputed in this case that the lands are appurtenant to the office, the question as to the title to these lands is also practically concluded by the fact that the sanad has been granted by the Government to an ancestor of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. Even if these documents were admitted they could not affect the result. Therefore, the application for additional evidence must be rejected.

As regards costs, we think that under the circumstances each party should bear his own costs throughout.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 11 (2), 13 (b)—

Ownership of house; dispute as to—Direct evidence not available—Old documents mentioning name of builder, whether admissible.

In the case of a house said to have been built over half a century ago direct evidence as to who constructed it may not be easily available, and old documents mentioning by whom it was built are admissible in evidence. [p. 583, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 25th April 1922.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to a shop and a house situate in Bindhyachal. The question for consideration was whether the defendant-appellant occupied the house in question as a parjauatidar or as a tenant on behalf of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs are admittedly the owners of the land occupied by the house. Their allegation was that the defendant occupied the said house as a tenant and was liable to ejectment. The defendant-appellant, however, said that he was only a parjauatidar, holding the land occupied by the house in dispute on rent and that he was not liable to ejectment. He asserted that the shop and the house in dispute were built by his predecessor-in-title. He produced among other papers a deed of gift purporting to have been executed by Musammam Badam in favour of Musammam Ohingani on the 18th of May 1862, wherein it was stated that the ancestors of the donor had obtained the land from Bhawani and Sital and built a house which she was conveying to her daughter. The lower Appellate Court treated this document as an admission by the defendant-appellant in his own favour and as such no proof of his title to the house. An admission may, however, be proved on behalf of the person making it under section 21, clause (3) of the Evidence Act (I of 1872), if it is relevant otherwise than an admission. In the case of a house said to have been built over half a century ago, direct evidence as to who constructed it may not be easily available; and old documents mentioning by whom it was built may be admissible in evidence under section 11, clause (2) and section 13, clause (b) of the Indian Evidence Act for what they may be worth. The lower Appellate Court refers to a mortgage-deed purporting to have been executed by Bhushi Pande in favour of Badam Panda on the 11th of August 1862, but that document is inconclusive on the point. It refers to Bhawani and Sital as having held three shops, but in what capacity they held the same is not clear. The lower Appellate Court has evidently made no serious attempt to discuss the documentary evidence adduced in the case and to find whether the plaintiffs were the owners only of the land or also of the shops and the house standing thereon. Before it could be said that there was no evidence to show that the ancestors of the defendant-appellant had built the same, the history of the title to the house as distinct from the land required to be examined in the light of the documentary and other evidence available. Let the lower Appellate Court be, therefore, directed to determine after taking such additional evidence as may be produced whether the shop and the house in dispute were built by the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiffs or the defendant. Two month's time will be allowed for the return of the finding and ten days will be allowed after the return of the finding for filing objections.

Hindu Law—Will, construction of—Property bequeathed to widow and on her death to cousin—Cousin predeceasing widow—Heirs of cousin, whether entitled—Vested and contingent interest

It is a settled principle of law that during the lifetime of a Hindu widow, no other person acquires a vested interest in the property held by her [p 584, col. 1.]

Therefore, where a Hindu testator directs in a Will that the property on his death would devolve on his widow in full ownership and upon the latter's death on his cousin, it conveys no more than a mere contingent interest to the cousin and, in the event of the cousin predeceasing the widow, his heirs have no right to inherit as against the reversioners of the testator. [ibid.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 16th March 1923, in an appeal preferred against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 6th August 1922.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal raises an interesting point of law. One Kalka Singh died in 1887 leaving a Will in accordance with which his wife, Musammât Shivraja inherited the estate. According to the terms of the Will one Naipal Singh should have inherited the estate on the death of Musammât Shivaraja. Naipal Singh, however, was the first to die in 1913. The question is whether the property on the death of Shivaraja devolves upon the heirs of Naipal Singh or upon the next reversioners of Kalka Singh under the Hindu Law. In all cases depending upon a Will it is necessary to consider carefully the wording of the document. In the present case the Will recited that the testator had no male heirs, that Naipal Singh, his cousin, had rendered him services and it was hoped that he would do so to his widow after the testator's death. This is the gist of the preamble and the operative clauses are to the effect (1) that the widow will as owner have proprietary possession dakhl malikana over the entire estate, and the legal representative (meaning thereby Naipal Singh) shall continue to discharge services as a son, during her lifetime, (2) after her death Naipal Singh will become proprietor with possession; the third clause is, one of perhaps doubtful validity forbidding the widow to alienate any property at the instigation of any co-sharer. The important parts of the Will are: (1) The widow is made malik or owner with full rights; (2) Naipal Singh is to become owner after the widow's death. It is argued on behalf of the reversioners, that while the widow was exercising the full rights of ownership it was impossible that Naipal Singh could also be owner in any sense of the term, and this is borne out by the second effective clause which states clearly that Naipal Singh is only to become owner on the widow's death. Even if the word 'malik' is not pressed to mean absolute owner it must at least be conceded that Musammat Shivaraja obtained under the Will the full rights of a Hindu widow, and it is a settled principle of law that during the lifetime of a Hindu widow no other person acquires a vested interest in the property. If Naipal Singh did not obtain a vested interest in the property on the death of the testator his own death prior to the death of Musammat Shivaraja deprives his heirs of any right of inheritance. In reply stress has been laid on the wording of section 19 of the Transfer of Property Act but this Act does not directly apply to Wills and moreover it is difficult to say that even under that section Naipal Singh would obtain a vested interest in the property. It is not as though there was a transfer in favour of Naipal Singh postponed until the death of the widow. Rather there is an absolute transfer in favour of the widow for her lifetime with a promise that Naipal Singh shall become owner after her death; that is after her ownership ceases. Owing to the fact that the widow died first, Naipal Singh never acquired ownership with possession as laid down in the second effective clause of the Will, and in my opinion the proper conclusion to be drawn is that Naipal Singh had no more than a contingent interest, and that his heirs have no claim to inherit as against the nearer reversioners. I, therefore, reverse the findings of the two lower Courts. I allow the appeal with costs. A decree will be passed in favour of the plaintiffs for possession and for mesne profits as assessed by the Court of first instance together with proportionate costs and pending and future interest at 6 per cent per annum.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 5—Plaint alleging death of person on specified day—Defendant's denial—No counter-allegation—Admission—Evasive denial, what is

In a suit by a reversioner for recovery of properties after the death of the widow, the plaintiff alleged that the widow died on a specified day, thus bringing the suit in time. The defendant in his written statement pleaded that the plaintiff should prove that the widow died on the date alleged and that he did not admit that date as the date of her death.

Held, that there was a clear denial of the plaintiff's allegation of the widow's time of death, and the fact that there was no counter-allegation as to what that date exactly was could not be deemed to amount to an admission within the meaning of O VIII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code [p. 585, col. 2].

Messrs. T. R. Ramchandra Iyer and S. Ramasami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar and K. S. Krishnaswami Iyenger, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brings this suit as a reversioner to recover properties which were in the possession of the widow of the last male holder. He brought the suit on the 7th of September

BURGE v. MOHAMMAD INAM ULLAH KHAN.

1918 and alleged in his plaint that the widow had died on the 28th of September 1906 thus bringing his suit within time. The defendants in their written statement pleaded as follows.—“The plaintiff should prove that the said Seshammal died on 26th September 1906 and these defendants do not admit that date as the date of her death”. Later on in the written statement they say “The plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation also”. The fifth defendant in a separate written statement also took the plea that the suit was barred by limitation. Issues were accordingly framed; the sixth issue being “Whether the suit is barred by limitation?” and subsequently an additional issue was framed “When did the widow Seshammal die?”. The District Judge has found that Seshammal did not die on the date alleged by the plaintiff and that, consequently the suit was barred by limitation, and now in second appeal it is urged that this finding although a finding of fact cannot be accepted because there was an admission in the defendants' pleadings of the allegation by the plaintiff. The provision of the Civil Procedure Code relating to this is O VIII, r 5 which states that “Every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted except as against a person under disability”. In the present case the defendants distinctly stated that they did not admit the plaintiff's allegation as to the date of Seshammal's death. It is argued that inasmuch as they did not make a counter-allegation as to what that date exactly was, it must be deemed to be an admission within the meaning of r. 5, and reliance is placed on several English cases: e.g., Thorp v. Holdsworth (1), Tildesley v. Harper (2) and Rutter v. Tregent (3). These cases, however, appear to me to be based not on the corresponding provision to r. 5 but to the provision corresponding to r. 4 of O. VIII which says that “Where a defendant denies an allegation of fact in the plaint, he must not do so evasively”. In these cases there were several circumstances set out in the plaint as constituting the details of certain transactions and, instead of denying those several circumstances specifically the defendants denied them as a whole and as pointed out in one of the judgments, such denial would be perfectly justified; provided any one of those circumstances was not strictly accurate, but that it did not amount to a denial of each and every one of those allegations. In the present case there is no question of evasive denial for there is only one fact alleged and that has been stated to be not admitted. Whether the defendants actually knew the date of Seshammal's death or not at the time they made this pleading does not seem to be material. It was understood by all the parties that this plea of limitation was taken and that the ground of the plea was that the suit was not brought within twelve years of Seshammal's death. There is no question of the plaintiff being taken by surprise and consequently there being no admission as to the date, the finding of the District Judge must be accepted. In that view, the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, two sets

Mr. P. D. Rustogi, for the Applicant.

Mr. Niamat Ullah holding brief of Mr. M. Wasim, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The applicants sued the opposite party for the recovery of rent of a certain house. They claimed rent at the rate of Rs 45 per month for two months and at the rate of Rs 60 for the third month. The lower Court has allowed the plaintiffs' claim at the uniform rate of Rs 45 for all the three months. This application challenges the propriety of the decree of the Court below in the matter of rent for the last month. The applicants claim that they were entitled to Rs 60 rent for that month and not Rs 45 only. The subject-matter of the application is, therefore, the sum of Rs 15 only.

I am of opinion that the application must be allowed. The plaintiffs served the defendant with a notice that they would charge Rs. 60 rent per month for the house from the 4th June 1923 and if the defendant did not accept the proposed enhancement of rent he was free to vacate by that date. The defendant did not vacate it, but has continued in occupation of the house. This clearly implies that he agreed to abide by the proposal made in the notice. This principle of the decision in the case of Bhagwandas v. Mithana (1) is clearly applicable and there is no room for distinction as the learned Judge tries to make out. The application is, therefore, allowed, the decree passed by the Court below will be modified by adding to it Rs. 15 more. The applicants will get their costs throughout in proportion to their success.

Hindu widow—Debt of husband—Discharge by third person at her request—Liability of widow—Assets of deceased—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 70

It is the duty of a Hindu widow to pay up the debts of her husband out of the assets inherited by her and if instead of paying them herself out of the assets, she requests a relation of hers to obtain a discharge for her from the liability to pay the same, she is liable to compensate her relative out of the assets in her hand under section 70 of the Contract Act, as she enriches the assets to that extent or strictly speaking confers benefit upon the estate by getting the debt paid up. Application for revision of an order of the Court of the Small Causes, Multai, dated the 7th September 1923.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The facts must be briefly stated in order to understand how the plaintiff makes out his request to sue.

One Teju died indebted to (1) Gabia (2) Gangu and Sawandas. He left behind some assets and a widow who inherited them. He also left a minor daughter. Shortly after her husband's death Zandoo went with her daughter (applicant) to live with the plaintiff and had taken her moveable property also with her. The plaintiff looked after the estate and was the de facto guardian of the applicant. While he was thus in charge of the assets of the deceased Teju or at any rate managed them, he at the request of Zandoo paid off the debts due to the aforesaid creditors of Teju between 28th January 1922 and 10th October 1922 aggregating to Rs. 68-8-0. He now sues to recover the amount by which he is out of pocket, from the assets of the deceased Teju in the hands of the defendant-applicant. The plaintiff established the payment of debt to the extent of Rs. 60-8 and got a decree for that sum. He could not succeed in proving payment of Rs. 8 to Gangu. So his claim was dismissed to that extent. There is no further claim before me for it. The daughter against whom the claim was decreed, has applied in revision for the setting aside of the decree on the ground that the right by Zandoo for payment of the debts not being proved, the payment if any should be regarded as voluntary payment and could not be recovered out of the assets, that at the most the debt was a personal debt of the widow, and that she, daughter, could not be made liable for it. That no personal decree could be passed against the minor and that the payments were made out of moneys paid to plaintiff by the defendants. I must say that the last plea has been decided against the defendant as her evidence on that point does not appear to have commended itself to the Trial Court. Next thing that the debts were not authorised to be paid by Zandoo is also not open to challenge. The evidence of defendant's own witness No. 3 bears out the construction that Zandoo at any rate acquiesced or consented to the payment by the plaintiff of the debts due by Teju. I am not prepared to dissent from the view taken by the Court below as regards this point. The plaintiff admits that the Court was wrong in passing a personal decree against the minor and that he is satisfied with a decree against the assets in defendant's hands. The only question now left for decision is whether the payment by the plaintiff was under circumstances which show that it was an officious interference with the affairs of Zandoo, so as to dissent him from claiming to be reimbursed with the money paid by him as he calls it for the protection of the estate of the deceased.

That for the time-being Musammat Zandoo as a widow represented the estate is beyond doubt. It was her duty to pay up the debts of her husband out of the assets inherited by her. If instead of paying them herself out of the assets she requested a relation of hers to obtain a discharge for her from the liability to pay the same, she has enriched the assets to that extent or at any rate saved so much of the assets or strictly speaking conferred benefit upon the estate by getting plaintiff to pay it up. There is no contract to repay pleaded or proved by plaintiff. This case, therefore, is one based not on a contract but relates to a liability or obligation resembling those created by contract, on the part of the person taking the assets of the deceased Teju to repay the person who satisfied the liabilities which were outstanding against them at the request of a person who for the time being represented the whole estate. This being the position of the plaintiff towards the defendant I think the provisions of section 70 of the Contract Act clearly apply and plaintiff is entitled to be compensated by the defendant out of the assets that have come to her hands to the extent to which the assets have derived benefit by the payment. No question of the defendant having enough time to accept the benefit conferred arises because I have held that the payment was made with the implied consent and acquiescence of Zandoo who represented the estate and she had sufficient time to make her election to accept the benefit or not before her civil death consequent on re-marriage opened out succession in favour of the defendant. The defendant cannot, therefore, escape the liability which fastens itself upon the assets. I think the liability has been rightly decreed against the defendant. The decree is, therefore, confirmed with the addition of the words "to be paid out of the assets of deceased Teju in her hands" after the figures Rs. 60-8-0.

The application is rejected. In the circumstance of the case I direct that each party bear the costs incurred by him.

Under O XXI, r 2, Civil Procedure Code, in order that a payment to a decree-holder should be recognised by the Court executing the decree, it is not necessary that the payment should be both certified and recorded. A certificate on the warrant of arrest by the plaintiffs authorised Pledar that the decree was satisfied complies with the requirements of the rule [p 590, col 2] himself and as guardian of the minor plaintiffs again applied to execute the decree.

Held, that the previous leave of Court to the payment to the guardian not having been obtained, such payment was inoperative and was not binding either on the minors or even on the guardian himself and the decree not having been legally satisfied to any extent a fresh execution application was maintainable [p. 591, cols 1 & 2].

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in A.S. No. 56 of 1922 (A. S. No. 353 of 1920, District Court, Tanjore) preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Tiruvadi, in E. P. No. 45 of 1920, in O. S. No. 173 of 1919.

Mr. A. Srirangachariar (with him Mr. V. N. Venkatawardachanar), for the Appellants.—The lower Courts were wrong in going behind the order on the former occasion refusing to record satisfaction. The order has become final and that finding operates as res judicata in the present proceedings. The rule of constructive res judicata has been applied to execution proceedings. Raja Rajeswara Dorai v. Sundara Pandiyasami Tevar (1). There is no order either recording satisfaction. Order XXI, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, is, therefore, a bar to the plea of satisfaction. Abhoy Naidu v. Ramachandra Naidu (2).

The respondent could have applied to enter up satisfaction. The time having now elapsed he is now debarred from raising the plea.

Secondly, even if the question of satisfaction of the decree can now be re-opened, payment to the first plaintiff who is guardian ad litem of the minor plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 cannot operate as a valid payment in the absence of a certificate of Court under O. XXXII, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code the provisions of which are mandatory. The mere fact he is the manager of the joint family does not tender the rule inapplicable. Ganesh Rao v. Tuljaram Rao (3).

The case in Harihar Pershad Singh v. Mathura Lal (4) relied on by the lower Court proceeds on the ground that the processual law as provided by O. XXXII, r. 6, cannot deprive the manager of a joint family of his substantive rights under the general Hindu Law. And the cases in Duraiswami Sastrial v. Venkatarama Iyer (5) and Kristna Hande v. Padmanabha Hande (6) merely follow Harhar Pershad Singh v. Mathura Lal (4) without assigning reasons. These cases must be deemed to have been overruled since the Privy Council decision in Ganesh Rao v. Tuljaram Rao (3). This being a rule of procedure it is only the law of the forum that would apply and not the personal law. Vide 1899 Chatard's Settlement, In re (7).

Order XXXII, r. 6 has been held to apply to cases of managers of joint Hindu family. Krishna Ayyar v. Chetrapani (8), Abhoy Naidu v. Ramachandra Naidu (2) 1.

It has also been held that the guardian ad litem cannot transfer a decree in favour of the minor without leave of Court. Kancherla Kanakayya v. Mulpuru Kotayya (9). The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to execute the decree.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Iyengar (with him Mr. N. Kunjithapathan), for the Respondents.—In the very warrant for arrest of the respondent there is an endorsement by the plaintiff's Pleader that the decree is satisfied. That can be relied on by the Executing Court in deciding whether there has been satisfaction or not. The respondents could not have set aside the order refusing to enter the satisfaction as the execution petition has been finally dismissed.

The first plaintiff being a manager is entitled to receive payment of debts due to joint family. The mere fact that he comes to Court cannot place him in a worse position. The Privy Council decision in Ganesha Rao v. Tuljaram Rao (3) does not apply to the present case.

The first plaintiff is now estopped from executing the decree. The first plaintiff being joint decree holder, along with the other minor plaintiffs, the payment to him will operate as a valid discharge of the whole decree. Hurish Chunder Chowdhury v. Kali Sunderi Debi (10); Sultan Moideen v. Savalayammal (11).

At any rate it will be a valid payment to the extent of the guardian's share.

Mr. S. Srirangachari in reply.—Payment to one of several joint decree-holders cannot operate as a discharge even to the extent of the share of the person to whom payment is made. The matter is concluded by the decisions of the Court. Mahomed Silar Sahib & Co. v. Nabi Khan (12); Thimma Reddi v. Subba Reddiar (13).

A joint decree-holder can execute the whole decree only with the permission of the Court (O. XXI, r. 15.)

JUDGMENT.—This case arises out of an execution petition. The appellants, who were the plaintiffs, obtained a money-decree against the respondents in 1919. The first plaintiff for himself and as guardian of his minor brothers, plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, put in an execution petition on 1st September 1919 to recover the money. The first defendant was arrested and brought to Court under a warrant. On the warrant the appellants' Vakil endorsed on 4th September 1919 "Judgment-debtor may be released. Decree fully satisfied". The Executing Court, however, then refused to record satisfaction on the ground that two of the applicants in the execution petition were minors. Neither party took any further steps to have the satisfaction of the decree recorded. On 22nd January 1920 the first plaintiff for himself and as guardian of minor plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 again applied for execution. The judgment-debtor pleaded that the decree had already been fully satisfied. The Executing Court originally proceeded on the question of law only and held that the payment endorsed on the warrant, even if true, was not a payment in law since under O. XXXII, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, the first plaintiff was not entitled to receive any money towards the decree on behalf of minors unless and until he had obtained leave of the Court. On appeal the Appellate Court called for a finding whether the judgment-debtors had actually paid up as certified on the warrant by the plaintiffs' Vakil, and, if that payment had been made to the first plaintiff, whether he received it as manager of the joint family or not. On this the Original Court found that the payment had been made to the first plaintiff in his capacity as manager and these findings were accepted by the lower Court. The Subordinate Judge then considered whether the first plaintiff could receive the money without leave of the Court under O. XXXII, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, and he held that, as managing member he could, and he, therefore, dismissed the execution petition on the ground that the decree was already fully satisfied. The plaintiffs now appeal.

It appears to me that the remand of the case by the lower Appellate Court for a decision whether or not the payment was actually made, was unnecessary. There is a certificate on the warrant by the plaintiffs' authorised Pleader that the decree was fully satisfied. Therefore, the payment was certified. It is true that the lower Court refused to record it, but O. XXI, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, does not say that in order that a payment shall be recognised by the Court executing the decree that payment shall be both certified and recorded. The words used are "certified or recorded." There was nothing, therefore, to prevent the Executing Court from at once recognizing the payment and the decree as fully satisfied, unless O. XXXII, r. 6 barred the way, while of course the Court was not bound to recognize the payment if that rule stood in the way. What the Executing Court had before it was a certificate by the Pleader appearing for all the three plaintiffs that the decree was fully satisfied. The execution petition and the order would also bring to its notice that two of the execution petitioners were minors, represented by the first plaintiff as guardian and next friend. In such a case I think the Executing Court was bound to conclude prima facie that the payment in full satisfaction would have been made to the first plaintiff for himself and on behalf of the minors, and there is nothing to rebut that presumption here. In fact, the concurrent finding of fact on the evidence after remand is to the same effect.

In such circumstances, had the first plaintiff not been manager of the joint family of himself and plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, there can be no doubt that he would have had to obtain leave of the Court before receiving the money on behalf of the minors under O. XXXII, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code. The short question then is, does the fact that he was the manager absolve him from the necessity of conforming to this rule?

It cannot be denied that if the execution petition had been put in by the first plaintiff alone as manager he would have been entitled to receive the whole payment in his capacity as manager without leave of the Court, and plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 could not have challenged the payment. But where he has chosen to join the minors with him and to bring them before the Court as minors and thus bring himself also before the Court in the capacity of guardian ad litem, can it be pleaded by himself as well as by the minors that the payment to him without leave of the Court is a nullity?

The plaintiffs rely chiefly on the Privy Council case in Ganesh Rao v. Tuljaram Rao (3). That was a case in which a compromise of a partition suit had been made by the father and manager of a joint family. He was the third defendant in the case, and he appeared on the record also as the guardian of his minor son, the sixth defendant. He compromised the suit without the leave of the Court. This High Court held interpreting section 462 of the Code of 1882 that it was not necessary for the father to have obtained the leave of the Court before compromising the suit. The Privy Council, however, reversed this laying down generally that where a manager of the joint family is himself on the record as the next friend or guardian of a minor member, his powers are controlled by the provisions of the law and he cannot do any act in his capacity of father or managing member which he is debarred from doing as next friend or guardian without leave of the Court. The lower Appellate Court has held that this ruling passed under section 462 of the Code of 1882 should not, on the authority of Krishna Hande v. Padmanabha Hande (6), be applied to old section 461, the present O. XXXII, r. 6, when it is a question of money due under a decree, but I do not think that it has rightly understood that case. It does not appear that in that case there was any minor on the record and, therefore, the managing member was not before the Court in the capacity of next friend or guardian. The Privy Council ruling has been applied to the provisions of O. XXXII, r. 6 by a Single Judge of this Court in a case reported as Krishna Ayyar v. Chakrapani (8).

After full consideration I am of opinion although with considerable reluctance, that the Privy Council case concludes the matter and that the payment, although made and certified, cannot be recognised by the Court executing the decree, since the leave of the Court was not obtained under O. XXXII, r. 6. I have come to this conclusion with reluctance because the first plaintiff at least thus secures at present a double payment of the decree amount by means of his own laches. No doubt, the judgment-debtors were careless in not seeing that the satisfaction was recorded and in not insisting on the leave of the Court being obtained, but the first plaintiff is the real party in default and now profits by his own default.

A further point has, however, been argued whether the payment by the first defendant to the first plaintiff will effect a discharge of the decree.

debt so far as the first plaintiff is concerned. The District Munsif has held that it will not. The lower Appellate Court, in the view it took naturally did not deal separately with that point. The law on the subject is, I think, clear that the payment to one of several joint decree-holders will not be satisfaction of the decree even in part unless (1) the payee is an agent of the others entitled in law to receive the whole amount on their behalf, or (2) the distinct shares of each joint decree-holder were determined and known. Vide Mahomed Syar Sahib & Co., v. Nabi Khan (12). In Thimma Reddiar v. Subba Reddiar (13) this ruling was extended to certificates of satisfaction given by one of several joint decree-holders unless as a matter of fact the payment certified had been made to all the joint decree-holders. Both these cases rest on the judgment of Bhashyam Iyengar, J., in Periasami v. Krishna Ayyan (14). As against this, the appellant cited Jamna Bai v. Vasanta Roa (15) a Privy Council case in which it was held that, where a joint bond was executed by two persons, one being a minor by his guardian and the bond so far as the minor was concerned was void because no leave of the Court was obtained, the other party to the bond could not plead that voidability as rendering nugatory his obligation under the bond. The Privy Council held that in any case the major promisor under the bond was liable and could not plead the minority and consequent immunity of the other promisor as a bar to his liability. I do not think that this case really assists the decision of the present case where the question is not of the liability of the decree-holders to the judgment-debtor but of the liability of the judgment-debtor to the joint decree-holders. In Sultan Moideen v. Savalayammal (11) it was held that where payment has been made to one of the two joint decree-holders that payment was valid to the extent of the share to which the payee was entitled, and, therefore, an enquiry was ordered as to the extent of that share. This ruling is certainly not in conformity with the later cases quoted above. I consider that I must follow the later cases and hold that the payment is not valid against even the first plaintiff. The decree had to be executed as a joint decree or not at all. Valid discharge of any portion of the debt could only be given by one who could give it for all joint decree-holders, and the first plaintiff could not do that because the discharge so far as the minor plaintiffs were concerned was not valid in law at all. Hence I must hold that the decree has not been at all satisfied. I, therefore, hold that the decision of the District Munsif was correct and this appeal must be allowed, but in the circumstances, appellants are refused costs here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Assuming that the presumption under the Muhammadian Law that a child born within two years of the conclusion of a valid marriage is to be considered a legitimate child of its mother's husband is binding on the Indian Courts, the presumption is a rebuttable one.

Where, therefore, a Mohammedan is born 331 days or full eleven months after his alleged father's death and it is found that his mother had illicit connection with another man, it is sufficient to rebut the presumption of his legitimacy and to justify the Court in finding that he is not the son of his alleged father.

declaration that he was the son of one Shera and for possession of his legal share in the property of the latter on the assumption that he was Shera's son. Both the Courts below have dismissed his suit. The finding of the lower Appellate Court is that the plaintiff was born 331 days or eleven full months after his alleged father's death and that his mother has been living for the last few years in illicit connection with one Imam-ud-Din. The appellant relies on the rule of Muhammadan Law that a child born within two years of the conclusion of a valid marriage is presumed to be the legitimate son of his mother's husband. The commentators have all expressed doubts as to how far this is a substantive rule of law binding on the Courts in this country and how far it is to be considered as replaced by the provisions of section 112 of the Evidence Act. If this were the sole question in the appeal I should have been disposed to refer it to a Bench but none of the text-books go further than saying that rebuttable presumption arises under these circumstances, and if the presumption is rebuttable there was certainly ample evidence in the present case to rebut it and to justify the Courts below in finding that the plaintiff-appellant was not the son of Shera. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151.

Q. XXVI, r. 18; O. XLVII, r. 1.—Commissioner for taking accounts—Review, power of—Enquiry, when can be re-opened—Party aggrieved, remedy of—Practice.

A Commissioner appointed by the Court to take accounts of the dealings and transactions between the parties has no power to "review" in the technical sense, either under section 151 or under O. XLVII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 594, col. 1.]

The Commissioner, however, may, in his discretion, record his finding on each item of the account objected to during the progress of the reference or he may record his findings after he has heard evidence on all objections and surcharges. He is not bound to record his finding on any one objection before he proceeds to deal with the next. But if he does so his finding on any of the objections is not final. He may, on proper grounds, re-open the inquiry into any one or more of the items before his report is made. Until then he decides nothing that is final and conclusive. [p. 594, cols 1 & 2.]

But where every opportunity is given to a party to prove his objection to a particular item, and the Commissioner has after hearing the parties recorded his finding, it is highly undesirable that he should re-open the enquiry merely because he is invited to do so by the party. [p. 594, col. 2.]

If the Commissioner does re-open the enquiry, it must be on grounds similar to those mentioned in O. XLVII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, not because the provisions of O. XLVII, r. 1, apply to proceedings before him but because that rule affords the best guide in a matter of this kind. If he re-opens the inquiry on grounds which are not proper, the party aggrieved can object only by way of exceptions to his report. [ibid.]

FACTS.—In a suit for recovery of Rs. 4,818-14 on account of the aggregate of sums alleged to have been advanced to the defendant or paid on his behalf from time to time, the defendant made a counter-claim for Rs. 9,725. The matter was referred to the Commissioner for taking accounts. The plaintiff filed his accounts and the defendant put in objections. One of these objections was overruled, but on the application of the defendant the Commissioner issued a warrant to review his finding thereon. The plaintiff then took out a summons applying for the following reliefs:

(a) That the decision of the learned Commissioner for taking accounts granting review of the finding on objection No. 7 herein is ultra vires inasmuch as the learned Commissioner has no power to grant a review.

(b) That the aforesaid decision of the learned Commissioner is wrong being in contravention of the provisions of

CHOB SINGH V. DARYAI SINGH.

O. XLVII, r. 4, inasmuch as the application was granted without a previous notice to the plaintiff.

(c) That the aforesaid decision of the learned Commissioner is wrong inasmuch as there was neither any discovery of any new matter or evidence by the defendant which was not within the knowledge of the defendant or which could not be adduced by him when the objection was heard nor was there any other sufficient ground for the granting of the review."

Sir Thomas Strangman, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Framroz Mehta of Messrs. Mansukhlal Hiratal and Mehta, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—[His Lordship after stating the facts observed—]

It was contended on his (plaintiffs) behalf that a review can only be granted under section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure or under O. XLVII, r. 1, of the Code; that section 151 did not apply to proceedings before the Commissioner, and that O. XLVII, r. 1, did not apply as a review under that Order can only be granted from a decree or order of the Court. On the other hand, it was contended for the defendant on the authority of the ruling in Lazmibai v. Hussainbhai (1) that once a reference has been made to the Commissioner the Court has no control over the proceedings until the Commissioner has made his report except in certain cases, and that the present case was not one of them.

It seems to me that the summons is misconceived. The expression "review" in the warrant is not used in its technical sense. The Commissioner has no power to "review" either under section 151 or under O. XLVII, r. 1. It must, however, be remembered that the Commissioner may, in his discretion, record his finding on each item of the account objected to during the progress of the reference or he may record his findings after he has heard evidence on all objections and surcharges. He is not bound to record his finding on any one objection before he proceeds to deal with the next. But if he does so it is erroneous to suppose that his finding on any of the objections is final. He may, on proper grounds, re-open the inquiry into any one or more of the items before his report is made. Until then he decides nothing that is final and conclusive. But where every opportunity is given to a party to prove his objection to a particular item, and the Commissioner has after hearing the parties recorded his finding, it is highly undesirable that he should re-open the enquiry merely because he is invited to do so by the party. There must be a finality to the enquiry, and if he does re-open the enquiry, it must be on grounds similar to those mentioned in O. XLVII, r. 1, not because the provisions of O. XLVII, r. 1, apply to proceedings before him but because that rule affords the best guide in a matter of this kind. If he re-opens the inquiry on grounds which are not proper, the party aggrieved can object only by way of exceptions to his report. The Commissioner, in issuing the present warrant has acted in accordance with the long-standing practice of his office. I see no reason to put a stop to the practice. The balance of convenience also is on the side of the existing practice. I think greater hardship will arise and more costs will be incurred by discontinuing the practice than by leaving matters as they are. It was assumed at the argument of the summons that High Court Rule No. 484 applies to the case. I doubt very much whether it does. The summons is discharged, costs to be costs in the cause. Counsel certified.

SECOND CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 1524 AND 1525 OF 1922.

March 14, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mukerji.

CHOB SINGH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Appeal Allowed.

CHOB SINGH v. DARYAI SINGH.

in wrong Court—Bona fide mistake—Presumption—Extension of time—Landlord and tenant—Ejectment suit—Lease for fixed term—Burden of proof

Where an appeal is filed in the wrong Court and prosecuted there without objection on the part of the Court or any of the parties, the mistake must be taken to be a bona fide one, until the contrary is shown, and the appellant must be given the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act [p. 595, col. 2].

The burden of proof is on the tenant when he is sued by his landlord for ejectment, to show that he has a right to stay on the land and cannot be ejected by the proprietor. The mere fact that the landlord describes the defendant in the plaint as a lessee does not imply that he says or means that the latter is holding for a term, as a lease may be from year to year. [p. 596, cols. 1 & 2]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 14th of July 1922.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana, Gulzari Lal and M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Dr. N. G. Vaish and Mr. S. K. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two connected Appeals Nos. 1524 and 1525 of 1922 may be disposed of by the same judgment.

Two different plaintiffs brought two different suits out of which these two appeals have arisen for the ejectment of the same set of tenants from lands in two different mahals, except for this difference, the case is the same in both the appeals.

Two points require to be decided. One is whether the appeals, when lodged before the learned District Judge of Mainpuri, ought to have been admitted as within time and should not have been dismissed as barred by limitation. The second is whether, in the circumstances, the defendants-respondents are liable to be ejected.

On the first point it appears that the plaintiffs' suit for ejectment failed in the Court of the Assistant Collector. The suits were suits for ejectment of a tenant under section 58 of the Tenancy Act. The defendants pleaded, inter alia, that they were under-proprietors and could not be ejected. The suits having been dismissed the plaintiffs appealed to the Commissioner. No question as to the jurisdiction was raised before the Commissioner. After certain remands the learned Officer decreed the appeal and decreed the suits.

The defendants went to the Board of Revenue and the Board held that the appeals were wrongly laid before the Commissioner and directed the Commissioner to return the memoranda for presentation to the proper Court. The memoranda were returned on the 11th of April 1922, and were filed the very next day in the Court of the District Judge of Mainpuri. The learned District Judge found that the appeals before the Commissioner were lodged after the expiry of the 30 days allowed for filing appeals before the District Judge and that, therefore, the appellants could not succeed, unless they proved that before filing their appeals before the Commissioner, they had obtained legal advice as to the forum before which the appeal lay. Not being satisfied that any such advice had been taken, he held that the appeals were barred by time. As a matter of fact, the appeals would appear to have been admitted, entered into the register and numbered.

As I have already pointed out, the question as to the Court to which the appeals lay was not even raised before the Commissioner. A responsible officer like the Commissioner never thought that the appeals were not entertainable by him. Under the circumstances, if the appellants thought that, they had a right of appeal to the Commissioner, the mistake must be taken to be a bona fide mistake until the contrary is shown. In my opinion the learned District Judge should not have dismissed the appeals as barred by time and ought to have given the appellants the benefit of section 5 of the Limitation Act.

On the merits the cases appear to be rather peculiar. It has been found that the defendants have been in actual occupancy of the land in suit for about 90 years. How they came into possession no body could explain. The question as to the status of the defendants arose twice in the course of the last Settlement of the District and two judgments were given; one on the 12th of September 1904 and again on the 13th of March 1905. The former judgment was given, as the defendants themselves or their predecessors applied to the Settlement Officer for the purpose of their being recorded in the kherbat as proprietors. In an elaborate judgment the learned Officer (probably the Assistant Settlement Officer) decided that the defendants were nothing but thekedars within the meaning of section 4 (6) of the Tenancy Act. The second judgment was given because a Patwari asked for instructions as to how he was to record the defendants in his papers. The same conclusion was arrived at by the learned Assistant Settlement Officer. It is no longer disputed before me that the defendants have been holding on payment of rent to the plaintiffs, the land-holders, that no attempt whatsoever has ever been made to enhance the rent, that the defendants have sued tenants and realised rents and further that tenants holding under the defendants have been allowed to acquire occupancy rights in the lands held by them. On these facts the learned Assistant Collector and the learned District Judge held that the defendants could not be ejected, they being only thekedars within the meaning of section 4 (6) of the Tenancy Act.

It has been argued before me that a thekeedar is a tenant all the same and is, therefore, as much liable to be ejected as any other tenant. Dr. Vaisa, the learned Counsel appearing for the defendants-respondents, has argued that the appellants themselves have stated in the plaint that the defendants were lessees and that, therefore, unless they proved that, the terms of the lease had expired they could not successfully maintain the suit for ejectment.

I think this argument on behalf of the respondents is a little fallacious. A lease may be for a term. It may be permanent and it may be from year to year. The mere fact that the plaintiffs called the defendants lessees does not imply that they said or meant that the defendants were holding for a term. If the status of the defendants be that of a tenant I see no reason why the suit should not be brought within clause (a) of section 58 of the Tenancy Act. It has not been actually contended before me that the defendants are permanent lessees though some argument on this point was advanced at the Bar. The burden of proof is on the tenant when he is sued by his landlord for his ejectment, to show that he has a permanent right to stay on the land and cannot be ejected by the proprietor. This was held so lately as in the case of Nainapillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1) by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Their Lordships referred to the case of the Secretary of State for India v. Council v. Bruchmeswar Singh (2), in which the fact that the tenants held the land on a low and uniform rent for 75 years was not held to be sufficient to prove a permanent title to the land. It follows, therefore, that there is no bar to the ejectment of the defendants in spite of their long possession they have no higher title than tenants from year to year.

The result is that the appeals succeed and are allowed and both the suits of the plaintiffs are decreed with costs throughout the costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 5 (a)— Property sold consisting of house and shop—Separate units—Pre-emptor, how far can succeed.

both in the sale-deed, the suit of the plaintiff to pre-empt can succeed only in respect of the house and not in respect of the shop.

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Amritsar?

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Lala Ram Chand, for Lala Sarda Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this appeal is the vendee of two properties situate in Amritsar City by sale-deed dated the 11th July 1917. The sale price was Rs. 2,700 and the matter for decision in this case is whether the property sold consisted of two units, i. e., a shop and a house, or of one unit comprising both the shop and the house. The sale-deed covered both properties but the properties are regarded as separate by the Municipal Committee who have given separate numbers to the two properties. They were also regarded as separate properties by the vendor inasmuch as a separate price was fixed in the deed for each property. There is a door of communication between the shop and the house but each property has a separate entrance. The entrance of the shop is in the main Bazar; the entrance of the house is in the side lane. There is a common staircase leading to the roof of both properties and a common latrine is situated on the roof of the shop.

The learned Judge in the Court below has found that the house and the shop in the present case appear to "constitute one building." He does not state clearly that the house and the shop are one and his conclusions are based on the fact that "the house and the shop appear to have been used hitherto by the same person and some inconvenience would undoubtedly result by partitioning the two portions of the building."

In our opinion this conclusion based upon the mere argument of inconvenience and part is not maintainable. It appears to us to be in conflict with the undoubted fact that there are two separate buildings which have been recognised as separate by the Municipal Authorities and by the vendor himself. We hold that the two buildings are separate and that the suit of the plaintiff to pre-empt can succeed only in respect of the house and not in respect of the shop.

We accordingly accept the appeal and modify the decree of the Court below by decreeing possession of only the house to the plaintiff on payment of Rs. 1,200, appellant shall have one-half of his costs throughout against the plaintiff to whom any sum in excess of Rs. 1,200, plus the plaintiff's half costs, which he may have paid into Court in satisfaction of the decree shall be refunded. The sum of Rs. 1,200 shall be paid to the vendee's mortgagees.

Mr K. Aravamuda Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. S. Venkatrama Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Two points are taken before me in this second appeal. The first point is that the defendants have acquired a title to permanent occupancy right by adverse possession since 1903 by denying the landlord's title and by not paying rent to him, and, secondly, that the land is ryoti land and by the passing of the Estates Land Act in 1908, the defendants have acquired occupancy right in the land by virtue of section 6 of the Act. Both these points have been found against the defendants. On the first point, the learned District Judge has held that the decision in the previous suit between the parties for a declaration that the defendants had no occupancy right in the land, put an end to any claims that they might have had by reason of their possession. He holds that even assuming that that possession was adverse, the previous possession during the course of that litigation which ended in 1908 could not be added on to their subsequent possession to acquire a title by 12 years' possession. It is unnecessary to go into that question. The recent Madras case in Singaravelu Mudaliar v. Chokka Mudaliar (1) has taken a different view on the point but I do not propose to express any opinion on it because it is found by the lower Appellate Court that the defendants were tenants who were paying waram from 1893 and this is a question of fact which I must accept in second appeal. As tenants paying waram, they could not convert themselves into permanent occupancy ryots by a mere assertion that they held the land under such a right. See for this position Nainapillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (2). It is unnecessary to refer to any other authority. Even if the defendants are entitled to tack on their previous possession during the time the previous litigation was going on to their possession after the date of that suit, that will not be sufficient to support the plea of adverse possession so far as the occupancy right is concerned.

As regards the question of their having acquired occupancy right under the Act, what the lower Courts have found is that the land is kamatam land and not ryoti land at all. That is a finding of fact arrived at on the evidence which I must accept. If the land is kamatam land and not ryoti land, no rights can be obtained under section 6 of the Estates Land Act. See for this position the authority in Ponnuswamy Padayachi v. Karupudayan (3). It is contended that though the land might have been kamatam land, it had been converted into ryoti land before the passing of the Act. There is no foundation for this at all. That is not a question raised in the issues in the Trial Court. The second appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

The mere failure on the part of a guardian ad litem to defend a suit or to appeal from an ex parte decree passed against a minor is not of itself a sufficient ground for holding that there was gross negligence and for setting aside the decree. JUDGMENT.—Mubarik Singh, father of Gurbachan Singh, plaintiff-respondent had dealings with Nawab Singh defendant-appellant. After Mubarik Singh's death, Nawab Singh sued Gurbachan Singh and his mother Musammatt Gurdevi for recovery of Rs 500 as representatives of the deceased Musammad Jawali, Gurbachan Singh's grandmother, was appointed by the Court his guardian ad litem. She did not appear to defend the suit and on the 31st January 1919 an ex parte decree was passed against the defendants recoverable from the estate of Mubarik Singh. The plaintiff brought the suit out of which the present second appeal arises through Sardar Shankar Singh, his next friend, for cancellation of the ex parte decree on the ground that his guardian ad litem had not properly represented him and had acted with gross negligence and had colluded with the defendant.

The Trial Court held that the plaintiff was never properly represented in the suit because the guardian never appeared and neglected his interests. It stated that parties produced evidence as to whether the defendant's suit was false or true but went on to say that it was unnecessary to discuss the evidence as for the purposes of this suit the Court had only to see whether the plaintiff was properly represented or not. The lower Appellate Court dismissed this appeal holding that the entire failure of the guardian to make any attempt to appear in Court or to have the ex parte decree set aside amounted to deliberate negligence which gave the minor a claim to relief.

In second appeal to this Court it was urged that it was legally wrong to set aside the decree against Musammatt Gurdevi as well as Gurbachan Singh, and that the proof of negligence even was not a sufficient ground for setting it aside against the minor. I am unable to agree with the lower Appellate Court that mere failure on the part of the guardian ad litem to defend a suit or to appeal from the decree passed against a minor is of itself a sufficient ground for holding that there was gross negligence. If the plaintiff has a good case against a minor, there is no reason that I can see why the latter's guardian ad litem should incur addition of expense in defending the suit. In Ahmad Ali v. Amir Shah (1) it was held that the omission by the guardian ad litem to appeal on a minor's behalf, notwithstanding that there were excellent grounds, both on law and in the facts, for an appeal, amounted to gross negligence on her part, and that under such circumstances it would be contrary to law and equity to hold the plaintiff bound by the decree. In Ismail v. Sultan Bibi (2) a Division Bench of the Chief Court held that it could not be said that the plaintiff's mother had been guilty of negligence in not appealing from a decision of 1896, as at the time the status of an after-born son to challenge an alienation by the father prior to his birth was not recognised and it was only fully declared by Jawala v. Hira Singh (3). In Chunduru Ponniyya v. Rajam Viranna (4) it was held that a person, who had been impleaded as a minor defendant represented by a guardian ad litem in a suit in which a decree was passed ex parte against him, can institute a suit to set aside the decree on the ground of gross negligence of the guardian ad litem in not defending the suit properly on his behalf. It was, however, also held that mere omission of the guardian to appear at the trial would not amount to gross negligence if there was no good ground of defence to put forward on the minor's behalf, but that it would be gross negligence not to defend the suit if there was a valid defence available. It cannot, therefore, be said in the present case that there was any gross negligence on the part of the guardian ad litem unless there was a good defence to the suit brought by Nawab Singh. It was, therefore, necessary to recount all the facts and to see whether Nawab Singh's case was a true one or not.

It was also argued by Counsel for the appellant that a decree against the estate of the minor's deceased father could not be set aside merely on the ground that the minor's guardian ad litem was guilty of negligence. In my opinion, however, it makes no difference whether the decree was against the minor personally or against the estate of his father to which he has succeeded, because in either case his interests would be injuriously affected by the decree, and I consider that he would be entitled to relief if it were found that his guardian had been guilty of gross negligence.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the decrees of both the lower Courts, remand the case to the Court of first instance for re-decision with reference to the above remarks. Stamp in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court will be refunded, and other costs will be costs in the case.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—These are appeals on behalf of the plaintiff from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya. The plaintiff and the defendant second party were the 16-annas proprietors in Mauza Bharkur Sohagia in the Gaya District at the time when this suit was instituted, the plaintiff being interested in an 8-annas share and the defendant second party in the remaining 8-annas share. The plaintiff instituted a suit for rent against a large number of tenants claiming the total rent for the year 1323 F. or in the alternative his proportionate rent if it should turn out that his co-sharer landlord, the defendant second party, had been paid the proportionate rent due to him. There was a further claim against the co-sharer landlord in the event of the whole rent having been paid to him by the tenants.

The landlord defendant by his written statement set up the case that the whole of the rents had been paid by division of the produce to him and to the plaintiff and that was also the case of some of the tenants who were the principal defendants in this suit. Others of the tenants contended that they had paid the whole of the rent to the defendant second party.

When the case came before the Munsif he dismissed the suit as against the tenants but gave judgment as against the co-sharer defendant accepting some of the evidence given by two of the tenants and considering that there was an admission by the co-sharer defendant to the effect that he had received the whole of the rents payable for that year. It would appear that the learned Munsif had not properly appreciated what the case was set out in the written statement of the co-proprietor defendant. There was in fact no admission that he himself had received the whole of the rents of the year in question. His allegation was that all the tenants had divided and paid the landlords' share of the grain for 1323 F. to that defendant and the plaintiff on a division.

From that decision the co-sharer landlord appealed to the Subordinate Judge making the plaintiff-respondent but not adding the tenant defendants as respondents in the appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge after considering the evidence at some length arrived at the conclusion that the evidence as to payment to the co-sharer landlord was very meagre and altogether unsatisfactory and he disbelieved it and in the result he allowed the appeal. It seems fairly clear from the course which the case took that the plaintiff was entitled to the rent either from the tenants or from the co-sharer landlord, the defendant second party, because both the Trial Court and the Subordinate Judge on appeal had decided that he at all events had not received the rent and the only question for decision was whether he was entitled to receive it from the tenants or entitled to receive it from his co-sharer landlord on the ground that the tenants had paid him and not the plaintiff. In these circumstances it seems to me that in order to do justice between the parties when the matter came on appeal to the Subordinate Judge it was necessary to have before the Court not only the plaintiff and the co-sharer landlord but also the tenant defendants, because if the Court of Appeal should find that the plaintiff's proportion of rent had not been paid to his co-sharer and had not in fact been paid to him then it was clear that he would be entitled to a decree against the tenants, but the result of not having the tenants upon the record was that although the Judge was apparently under the impression that the tenants had not paid this rent at all he was bound in the circumstances to dismiss the suit altogether because the tenants were not before him as parties to the appeal and he could not pass a decree against any party who was not before him. If the tenants had been before him in that appeal even though there was no appeal by the plaintiff against that part of the decree which dismissed the suit as against them the Court could under the provisions of O. XLII, r. 33 of the Civil Procedure Code, if it should come to the conclusion that the tenants had not paid the plaintiff's proportion of the rent, nevertheless have passed a decree against them in order that justice might be done between the parties. The question then arose as to whether the Subordinate Judge could bring them upon the record as parties to the appeal and the conclusion at which he arrived was that they could not be made parties at that time as the question of limitation would arise. In that respect I think he was entirely wrong. It would appear that had the learned Judge been of opinion that the tenant defendants could be brought upon the record without contravening the law relating to limitation he would have made them parties. The question whether the rules of limitation apply to the powers of the Court to bring parties on the record in the appeal under the provisions of O XLI, r. 20 has been one of some controversy but the better opinion appears to be that there is no period of limitation provided for bringing parties to the suit upon the record in an appeal from a decision in that suit and one of the latest cases on the subject is that of Girish Chunder Lahiri v. Sasi Sekharashwar Roy (1). It seems to be clear that in a case of this description the ordinary rules of limitation relating to appeals ought not to apply where in the course of an appeal the Court finds that in order to do justice between the parties it is necessary to bring one of them who was a party to the suit upon the record in the appeal and I entirely agree with the decision come to in the case just cited. The question which we have to determine is whether in second appeal to this Court we have power to add a party who was not a party to the appeal in the lower Court. This question again has been considered and in the most recent cases the High Court at Calcutta and the Lower Burma Chief Court have both held that the Court in second appeal has power under O XLI, r. 20 to bring parties upon the record in order to carry out the powers granted to the Court under rule 33 of that Order. The decision of the Lower Burma Chief Court was that in Yusuf Osman Bros. & Co. v. Win Ne Ya (2). The head-note is "An Appellate Court has power in second appeal to add as respondents to the appeal persons who were parties to the suit in the original Court but were not impleaded as respondents in the lower Appellate Court although the time within which an appeal might have been preferred as against them has expired." That case was decided in the year 1920. The decision of the Calcutta High Court is that of Durga Charan Bose v. Lakhi Narain Bera (3). In that case it was held that although no provisions of the Civil Procedure Code dealt with such a case yet the Appellate Court should restore the appeal and re-hear it in the presence of the co-defendant after adding him as a party. The learned Judges who decided that case were of opinion that two courses were open: They might either remand the case for re-hearing in the presence of the party whom they added, or they might themselves pass a final decree such as in their opinion ought to have been passed by the Courts below. As they entertained no manner of doubt as to what the decree should be they adopted the latter course. In the present case it seems to me that it would be a miscarriage of justice if the case should be left where it now stands. The plaintiff was not appellant in this case. He was merely respondent and he had a decree in his favour. He could not foretell the result of the appeal to the Subordinate Judge but it was open to the Court if it were going to decide the appeal in favour of the appellant in circumstances which would indicate that it was not the appellant but the other defendants who were liable for the sum claimed, to add them as parties and pass judgment. This course was not adopted and I think it was only because the learned Subordinate Judge considered that he had no power by reason of the Limitation Act to add these parties that he refrained from doing so. In this Court although the tenant defendants have been made respondents we are not in possession of all the facts to enable us to decide as between the parties who are now before us. I think the proper course is to set aside the decision of the Subordinate Judge and to remand the whole case to him for re-hearing of the appeal in the presence of all the parties. I hardly think that the appellants can be altogether exonerated from blame for the situation that has arisen and although it would be unjust to deprive them of Second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 1st March 1923, confirming that of the Munsif, Gujar Khan, dated the 10th August 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Faqir Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 2nd November 1916 one Allah Dad executed a deed of sale in respect of 26 kanals 5 marlas of land in Mauza Tota in the Kahuta Tahsil of the Rawalpindi District in favour of one Ahmad Khan for a sum of Rs. 500. In May 1920 Ahmad Khan brought this suit for possession impleading Allah Dad, the vendor, and his brother Fazal Dad, who was joint owner in that khata, as defendants. Allah Dad did not put in an appearance and ex parte proceedings were taken against him. Fazal Dad appeared and pleaded that the sale was without consideration and legal necessity, and that it was void inasmuch as the plaintiff had purchased the land; not for himself, but for Ishar Singh and Surjan Singh who were prohibited from purchasing the same under the provisions of the Alienation of Land Act. The following issues were framed:—

1. Whether the sale was effected for consideration?

2. Was the sale in suit invalid inasmuch as it had been effected by an agriculturist in favour of a person who was a non-agriculturist?

3. Was the property ancestral qua defendant, Fazal Dad?

4. Was the sale effected for valid necessity and how did this fact affect the suit?

The Trial Court found in favour of the defendant and dismissed the suit holding that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar, the real purchasers being Ishar Singh and Surjan Singh who were non-agriculturists. The Appellate Court agreed with this view, and affirmed the decree of the Trial Court.

Against this decision the plaintiff has filed a second appeal in this Court and the only contention put forward on his behalf is that Fazal Dad was not a necessary party and consequently not entitled to contest the suit. Mr. Faqir Chand, on behalf of the respondent, contends that this objection was not raised in any of the Courts below, and that plaintiff is not, therefore, entitled to raise it for the first time in second appeal. He further contends that the finding that the plaintiff was a mere benamidar and not the real purchaser is a finding of fact and must be accepted as final for the purposes of this case. After carefully considering the matter I am of opinion that the contention of the appellant is well-founded and must prevail. There is no doubt that this point had not been raised in any of the Courts below, but the point is one of law, and can be raised in second appeal if it does not necessitate the taking of further evidence. It is clear from the statement of Fazal Dad that he is not a necessary party, and that he is not, in any way, interested in the result of the suit. The land sold to the plaintiff was exclusively owned by the first defendant Allah Dad and the only question which arose for the determination of the Court was whether the sale-deed had or had not been duly executed by the latter in favour of the plaintiff. Evidence was produced by the plaintiff to prove the sale, and no question as to the necessity or the validity of the sale could, under these circumstances, legitimately arise for the determination of the Court. Fazal Dad need not have been joined as a defendant, and the suit could very well have proceeded in his absence. In my opinion the defendant, Fazal Dad, had no interest in the subject-matter of the suit and was not, therefore, entitled to contest it.

As to the contention that the sale was in contravention of the provisions of the Alienation of Land Act, reference need only be made to the case reported as Jahan Khan v. Dulla Ram (1), in which it has been laid down that "a Civil Court has no power to decline to enforce a contract which is legal and binding in every respect on the face of it as between the parties on a mere assumption that in reality it is intended for the benefit of a third person against whom a statutory prohibition to enter into such contract exists." If Ishar Singh and Surjan Singh are the real purchasers Land Alienation Act can be properly invoked should they ever attempt to assert any right to the possession of the land by virtue of the sale now in question. The sale-deed is in favour of Ahmad Khan and he asks for possession under this deed. He is entitled to possession and there is nothing in the Land Alienation Act or any other Act which could justify a Court of Justice in refusing him the relief to which he is, no doubt, in law entitled.

I accept the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge and decree the plaintiff's

The determination of a question arising between a decree-holder or a person claiming to represent the decree-holder and a judgment-debtor, as to whether any person is or is not, the representative of a party, amounts to a decree and is appealable as such.

Where a succession certificate has been obtained by several persons in respect of a decree, and execution of the decree is sought, it is not open to the judgment-debtor to raise the objection that some of the applicants are not entitled to join in executing the decree.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 16th May 1923.

Mr K. N. Laghate, for the Appellants

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal in execution proceedings. A decree for the recovery of a maintenance by the sale of immovable property on which the maintenance was charged was held by Musammam Chandan Kuar against the judgment-debtors respondents. Musammam Chandan Kuar died on the 11th October 1921. A succession certificate in respect of the decree was obtained jointly by the appellants who are her sons and Musammam Saraswati who was her daughter. On the strength of this succession certificate these parties applied jointly to execute the decree.

PIARA RAM V. KESHO NATH.

In their first application they treated the decree as a preliminary decree and asked for the preparation of a final decree, but in the alternative they also asked for execution of the decree as it stood in case no final decree should be necessary. The application was at first dismissed, but on a fresh application execution was allowed. The judgment-debtors appealed to the District Judge on the ground among others that Musammāt Saraswati alone was the heir of her mother Musammāt Chandan Kuar and that the appellants were, therefore, not entitled to join in executing the decree. The learned District Judge has given effect to this contention and the appellants have filed the present second appeal to this Court objecting to the execution application being dismissed against them.

A preliminary objection is taken that no appeal lies and the appellant relies on the ruling in Sheoraj Singh v. Aminuddin Khan (1). That ruling was passed under the old Code of Civil Procedure and Mr. Agarwala remarks in his Commentary (Indian Practice, 3rd Edition, page 189) that it requires re-consideration as it ignores sub-section (3) of section 47 and a number of rulings to the contrary which are cited in the commentary. Sub-section (3) of section 47 of the present Code in express terms includes a question arising between the parties as to whether any person is or is not the representative of a party, and in view of section 2 of the Code the determination of such a question as between the decree-holder or a person claiming to represent the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor amounts to a decree and is appealable as such. The preliminary objection, therefore, fails.

On the merits the order of the learned District Judge cannot be upheld. The learned District Judge has not taken into account section 16 of the Succession Certificate Act which declares that a succession certificate duly granted by the District Court is conclusive against debtors of the deceased person. The section is so clear that it is really superfluous to cite any ruling in support of it, but Rupan Bibi v. Bhagelu Lal (2) may instance a case in which effect has been given to the provisions of the section. It may be noted here that there is no contest between Musammāt Saraswati and her brothers. The judgment-debtors alone challenged the right of the appellants to join in executing the decree. In view of section 16 of the Succession Certificate Act it is not open to the judgment-debtors to raise this objection.

The respondents have in this Court attacked the right of the appellants to execute the decree on the ground that the appellants did not apply to be substituted for the deceased within three months of her death. Even if this was a case in which the preparation of a final decree was necessary this objection would be untenable. It is clear, however, from a perusal of the decree, which has been read to me, that the decree was not a preliminary decree but one which could be put in execution by applying for sale of the property. It is, therefore, governed by O. XXII, r. 12 and the three months' period prescribed by rules 3 and 11 of the Order does not apply to it. I dismiss the cross-objections with costs. For reasons already given I allow the appeal and restore the order of the Munsif with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

rr. 8, 4, 6, 8—Different sales in favour of same vendee by different owners—Single suit for pre-emption, whether competent—Joinder of all vendors and vendee, whether bad—Decree—Appellate Court, whether can interfere

Plaintiff brought a suit for pre-emption against the vendee of four different plots, sold to him by different owners at different times. The objection as to misjoinder of causes of action and parties was overruled by the Trial Court and the suit was decreed in respect of all the four plots. The Appellate Court, however, directed the institution and trial of four separate suits. Against this order of remand, the vendor preferred a second appeal to the High Court:

Held, (1) that the suit was properly instituted; (2) that the lower Appellate Court should not have interfered with the discretion of the Trial Court in the matter.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Layallpore, dated the 31st March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Jhang, dated the 18th February 1919.

Messrs. M. Sleem and Devi Dayal, for the Appellant.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of remand in a pre-emption suit made under the following circumstances.—

The vendee purchased four plots of land from different owners at different dates and for different prices. The plaintiff-pre-emptor brought a single suit in respect of all the sales impleading the vendee and also the various vendors of the four sales. An objection was raised in the Trial Court on the ground of misjoinder of causes of action and parties. It was overruled and the suit of the plaintiff was decreed in respect of all the four plots. The vendee appealed to the lower Appellate Court and again put forward the objection as to the misjoinder. The lower Appellate Court without deciding whether the suit was bad on account of misjoinder of parties or causes of action has thought it proper to act under O. II, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, and has directed the institution and trial of four separate cases regarding the sales and has made an order of remand under O. XXI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code.

Against this order of remand the present appeal has been preferred. Order II, r. 3 (1) provides that "save as otherwise provided, a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant; or the same defendants jointly; and any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit." Rules 4 and 5 of the same Order provide that in certain cases this cannot be done. The suit for pre-emption was really against the vendee. The different vendors under the different four sale-deeds were not necessary parties. They were simply impleaded as pro forma defendants. The suit was, therefore, properly instituted. The Trial Court did not think fit to act under rule 6, tried the case and passed a decree. In my opinion it was not proper for the Appellate Court to have interfered with the discretion of the Trial Court in this matter. Evidence has been taken, the suit has been tried and a decree has been passed. It is highly inconvenient, if not improper, that the entire proceedings taken in the Court below should be set aside and four separate suits should be instituted and the trial should begin over again. This will result in loss of time and money to the parties.

I accordingly accept this appeal and set aside the order of remand with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Construction of document—Sale-deed—Agreement to reconvey—Mortgage or option of re-purchase—Registration, whether necessary.

MAUNG PAUNG V. MA ON.

The parties to a registered sale-deed executed an agreement contemporaneous with the sale-deed, whereby the vendee agreed that if the vendor re-paid to him the purchase-money with interest at a certain rate within two years he would re-convey the property to the vendor.

Held, that the agreement was a mere option of re-purchase and did not amount to a mortgage and was, therefore, not compulsorily registrable.

Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, 12 A. 337, 17 I. A. 98, 5 Sar. P. C. J. 557, 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 992 (P. C.), followed.

O Ching Kywan v. Ma Oo, 72 Ind. Cas. 34, 11 L. B. R. 456; (1923) A. I. R. (R.) 52, distinguished.

Mr. Sen, for the Appellants.

Mr. Thein Maung, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Appellants' case was that on the 14th of August 1919 they executed a registered conveyance of their house and its site by sale in favour of the first respondent Ma On and her husband Kyaw Zan, that on the same date Kyaw Zan acting for himself and Ma On executed a written agreement to re-convey the house and site to appellants on receipt of the amount of the price mentioned in the sale-deed together with interest thereon at 2 per cent. per mensem, that they had repaid Rs. 180 out of the price, and that they were entitled to a re-conveyance of the property to them on payment of the outstanding balance of Rs. 20 together with Rs. 76-6-4 as interest. They joined the children of Kyaw Zan and Ma On together with Ma On as heirs and legal representatives of Kyaw Zan.

One of the children was served by substituted service and did not appear to contest the appellants' claim.

The rest of the defendants filed a joint written statement in which they put appellants to proof of Kyaw Zan's execution of the agreement, and pleaded that even if Kyaw Zan did execute the agreement it could not be proved because the document was compulsorily registrable and was not registered, and that Ma On had no knowledge of the agreement and was not bound by it. They denied receipt of any payment on account of the agreement.

The Trial Court held that the document did not require registration and that appellants succeeded in proving the making of the agreement and the payment which they alleged, and gave them a decree for the re-conveyance of the property to appellants on their paying Rs. 94-6-4 to respondents.

Respondents appealed and the District Court came to the conclusion that the document required registration and that because it was not registered no evidence of the transaction could be given. Appellants' suit was accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appellants come to this Court in second appeal on the grounds that the District Court was wrong in law in holding that the document embodying the agreement required registration, and was also wrong in finding that Kyaw Zan did not execute the document.

The deed of sale was an outright conveyance in the ordinary form.

The terms of the agreement under which appellants claim are as follows:—

"I, Kyaw Zan, have this day, the 14th of August, 1919, bought for Rs. 200 from Maung Paung and Ma E. Bya by registered deed in the names of myself and my wife, their house and site and I hereby agree that if the said Maung Paung and Ma E. Bya shall within two years pay to me the said principal with interest at the rate of Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem. I will re-convey to them by registered deed the said house and site and if I fail to do so I will pay them whatever damages they suffer and the costs of any litigation which may result."

The two documents were executed on the same day as a result of the same negotiations and if on proper construction of the two documents read together the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee existed between the parties as a result of the transaction as a whole, it would appear that both documents were compulsorily registrable.

But it seems to me that on a proper construction of the documents it is not at all necessary to hold that any such relationship subsisted.

The reason for the execution of the two documents may have been that mortgages without possession are uncommon and little understood among Burman villagers, but it does not follow that the transaction was for that reason a mortgage. The inference would seem to be rather the other way, since, if the parties did not know that the transaction could be put into the form of a mortgage, they can hardly have intended it to be a mortgage. It is clear that appellants owed Kyaw Zan and Ma On money and Kyaw Zan was pressing for payment. Appellants agreed to convey their house and its site to him in satisfaction of the debts on condition that they were allowed to continue to live in the house and that he agreed to let them buy it back on payment of the amount of the debts for which it was taken, together with interest thereon at Rs. 4 a month. Ma On herself says definitely that the transaction was a sale and not a mortgage and that Kyaw Zan told her on his return that he had agreed to allow appellants to remain in occupation of the property at a rental of Rs. 4 a month, which it will be noted is exactly the amount of the interest fixed by the agreement, the whole of the respondents' case is in fact based on an allegation that the transaction was an outright sale. They deny the agreement for re-sale. They do not plead that there was any mortgage, and although they do allege that if there was a written agreement for re-sale the document would need registration. They do not say that it would need registration because the transaction was a mortgage.

I am of opinion that, as a matter of fact, it was not a mortgage but was what the documents prima facie show it to have been, namely, a sale with a right of re-purchase within two years. This opinion seems to me to be in accordance with the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (1), and although it does not follow the ruling of a Single Judge of the Chief Court of Lower Burma in the case of Chang Kywan v. Ma-Oo (2) which has been brought to my notice, the documents in the two cases are so dissimilar that similar considerations do not apply to them.

I hold, therefore, that the agreement on which appellants fixed did not require registration.

The next question which arises is whether or not appellants succeeded in proving the agreement.

The Trial Court found that they did prove it and respondents did not appeal against that finding. The grounds of appeal were that the agreement could not be proved because the document was not registered and that it was not binding on Ma On. After reading the record I have no hesitation in holding that appellants did prove the agreement, and in finding on Ma On's own admission that the agreement was binding on her. She admitted that her husband managed all the business of the family and that she was not present at the transaction at all; and it is clear that her name was inserted in the conveyance at her husband's request and without her knowledge. Under these circumstances if her husband at one part of the transaction had power to take the conveyance in her name he obviously had power in another part of the same transaction to bind her in respect of the property conveyed.

I, therefore, find that appellants prove the agreement and that it was binding on Ma On personally and all the respondents in their representative capacity.

The only other question to be decided is whether or not appellants proved the payment which they alleged. The Trial Court found that they did prove it and gave reasons for its findings. All that the lower Appellate Court said was that the evidence about the payment was conflicting.

[His Lordship here discussed the evidence and then proceeded:—]

The Trial Court accepted the evidence of appellants' witnesses and discredited respondents'. The learned Judge came to the conclusion, not without reason, that Aung Hla was entirely unreliable. It is clear that Ma On's own evidence was untrustworthy, and that the Headman was more likely to be telling the truth than Maung Tu.

For these reasons I accept the finding of the Trial Court that Rs. 180 was paid in respect of the agreement in suit, and as I have held that agreement was established and was valid, I set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Trial Court with costs for appellants throughout, Advocate's fee in this Court to be three gold mohurs.

Pathans of the village Kutel in the Tahsil and District of Karnal are governed by Muhammadan Law in matters of succession [p. 610, col. 1]

A Notification by Government that a tribe is an agricultural tribe does not raise the presumption that it is governed by custom [p. 610, col. 2]

Jowahir Singh v. Yaqub Shah, 5 P. R. 1906, 59 P. L. R. 1908, 26 P. W. R. 1908 and Faqir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad, 16 P. R. 1906, 66 P. L. R. 1908, 32 P. W. R. 1908, followed.

The appellant filed with the appeal a copy only of the final judgment under appeal but did not file a copy of the order referred to therein as forming part thereof until he was called upon to do so by the office which was after the expiry of the period of limitation.

Held, (1) that the appellant ought to have filed a copy of the previous order along with the appeal and the judgment as filed was incomplete, [p. 609, col. 2].

(2) that under the circumstances of the case, time could be extended under section 5 of the Limitation Act, [ibid.]

Second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 18th August 1923, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Third Class, Karnal, dated the 28th February 1923.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S., for Mr. Ghulam Rasul, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Counsel for the respondent raises a preliminary objection that the appeal is barred by time, in that, copy of a portion of the judgment of Trial Court was supplied after the expiration of the period of limitation. The judgment of that Court opens thus:—

"This order should be read as being in continuation of my previous order in English, dated the 29th January 1923."

The appellant filed with the appeal copy of the final judgment in which the above sentence occurs but not of the order of 29th January 1923 until called upon by the office to do so. There can be no doubt that the judgment was incomplete unless read with the previous order and, therefore, the appellant ought to have filed copy thereof with the appeal. But if he did not do so, the case falls within the purview of section 5 of the Limitation Act and I extend time under that section because, strictly speaking the last order constituted the final judgment of the Court and the appellants under that impression presumably did not file with the appeal copy of the previous order also.

As regards the merits, the only controversial question in the case was whether in matters of inheritance the parties were governed by custom or Muhammadan Law. The suit was by a sister against her two brothers for her share in the landed property left by their mother as well as by the son of their mother's sister. When the inheritance fell out the plaintiff was a minor and so her brothers ignored her and succeeded to the entire estate of their mother as well as of their cousin. The Trial Court found that the parties were governed by custom, but the learned District Judge arrived at the conclusion that they followed Muhammadan Law and decreed plaintiff's suit.

MAUNG WALA V. MG. SHWE GUN.

There can be no doubt that the decision of the learned District Judge is correct.

(1) The parties are Pathans of the village Kutel in the Tahsil and District of Karnal. According to the ruwaj-i-am of that District "Pathans invariably follow the Shara and admit no custom", and it appears that the Shara has invariably been the rule of succession in the family of the parties themselves. In the first place on the death of Mohammad Ali Khan his estate devolved upon his daughter Musammat Karim-ul-Nisa. (See the pedigree table given in the judgment of the District Judge). The record does not show whether Mohammad Ali Khan had any male collaterals or not. Musammat Karim-ul-Nisa was married to Muhammad Khan Pathan who came from Panipat, and bore him three daughters. On her death her husband as well as three daughters (1) Musammat Naziran, (2) Musammat Najiban and (3) Musammat Bashiran succeeded to her estate according to Muhammadan Law. No 1 was the mother of the parties and No. (2) was the mother of their cousin Mohammad Yasin deceased. The Courts below missed the point that the land had descended from two ladies and the last owner in one case was a female. The rule of custom set up by the defendants applied to the ancestral landed property of the father and not to that of the mother or to that derived from a male proprietor (See Art. 23 of Rattigan's Digest of Customary Law). No authority was cited to show that the same rule applied to the ancestral landed property of female. It is noteworthy that Pathans of Panipat, to which place Mohammad Khan belonged are admittedly governed by Muhammadan Law.

(2) The four points on the strength of which the Trial Court found that the parties were governed by custom were quite insufficient to prove that. The first point was that the village was founded by Pathans; but the learned Counsel for the appellants could not show from the record that this was so. On the other hand it was in evidence that there was only one family of Pathans in the village, i.e., the family of the parties to the suit. The second point that the members of the family cultivated land themselves showed that they were agriculturists, but Pathan agriculturists in the District follow Muhammadan Law. The third point also that Pathans are a notified agricultural tribe of the District possesses no force—because it has been held in several cases that came up to this Court that a Notification by Government that a tribe is an agricultural tribe does not raise the presumption that it is governed by custom [Jowhir Singh v. Yaqub Shah, (1), and Faqir Muhammad v. Fazal Muhammad (2)]. The fourth and the last point was that two of plaintiff's own witnesses deposed that daughters did not succeed in the presence of sons, but in the absence of any instance this evidence is no better than the personal opinion of the witnesses and could carry no weight. All that has been stated above supports the conclusion that the parties follow Muhammadan Law and not custom, and I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

In the case of an agreement to re-purchase time is of the essence of the contract, and the doctrine that time may not be of the essence of the contract which arises on the construction of contracts of sale of immovable property, is not applicable, for the right to re-purchase, being an option, must be exercised according to the strict terms of the power [p. 613, col. 2].

But, although time is of the essence of the contract in the case of an agreement to re-purchase, a default by the payee such as tendering proper tender by the purchaser by due date impracticable, would be interpreted by the Courts as extending time, when it is clear that the purchaser was prepared with a ready and willing tender. Appeal against a decree of the District Court, Hanthawaddy, in Civil Suit No. 12 of 1922.

Mr. Ther. Maung, for the Appellant.

Mr. Villa, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant Mg Wala, on the 8th March 1919, by a registered conveyance sold his paddy land measuring 50 19 acres to the defendant-respondent Mg Shwe Gun and his wife Ma La for Rs. 5,600. On the same date, there was an unregistered agreement drawn up, and, as plaintiff alleged, executed by the parties, the purport of which was as follows:—

“That the defendants would re-convey the said land to Mg Wala if the latter, within three years, personally took back the same, on payment of the said sale price of Rs. 5,600, which money must belong to him and no other; that, in case the money turned out not to be Mg Wala's money, after he had taken back the land, he would have to pay double the sum, of Rs. 5,600 as compensation, and in case the respondent failed to re-convey the land on Mg Wala's request, they would have to pay twice Rs. 5,600 as compensation; that, if respondents within the said three years, wished to sell the land, through adverse circumstances, they were to give Mg Wala a right of first refusal; and that if Mg Wala did re-purchase the land, he is to rent it out yearly at the current rate to respondents.”

This period of three years of course expired on 8th March 1922.

The plaintiff-appellant filed the suit, which is the subject of this appeal on 14th March 1922, for specific performance of this agreement to convey the land to him or for damages on the grounds that although from October 1921 to 8th March 1922 he had made real efforts, with the money ready, to purchase back the land, the defendants had avoided him, and so rendered his compliance with his part of the contract, and his tender of the money, impossible.

The respondents did not explicitly admit this agreement to re-convey in their pleadings, but contended that the agreement was invalid for want of registration, and was inadmissible in evidence, besides being void for want of consideration. It was also set up that the agreement, gave them an option to refuse to re-convey the land, and that, therefore, the plaintiff's remedy, if any, was by way of damages. It was denied that there was any valid tender of the purchase-money within the time specified, and it was urged that time was the essence of the contract. They denied that they had avoided the plaintiff, but stated that on the contrary plaintiff had not kept an appointment made through his lawyer on March 4th 1922 at their lawyers's office in Rangoon for the purpose of making the re-conveyance. Finally they contended that they had spent money on improvements, and that they were in any case entitled to recover that amount in addition to the sum of Rs. 5,600. After framing suitable issues, the District Court dismissed the suit, on the ground that time was of the essence of the contract, and that the plaintiff-appellant made no proper tender within the allotted time, the fault being due to the plaintiff himself. On the matter of registration the learned Judge held against the respondents. The matter of consideration was not pressed, it being obvious that there was adequate consideration.

MAUNG WALA v. MG. SHWE GUN.

Mg Wala now appeals to this Court on the grounds that the District Court was in error in holding that time was of the essence of the contract, and that the payment by Mg Wala of the Rs. 5,600 was a condition precedent. Further objections are taken to the learned Judge's findings that there was no legal or proper tender and that the party to blame was the appellant himself.

Cross-objections were filed by the respondents setting up that the District Court should have found that the agreement was invalid and inadmissible for want of registration, and that it erred in holding that appellant had any money with him in order to make a valid tender. The question of registration, since it goes to the root of the whole case must first be decided. It was argued by Mr. Thein Maung for the appellant that inasmuch as the agreement was admitted by the respondents, the registration or non-registration of the agreement was immaterial, but, though the said agreement was admitted in evidence, it was never explicitly admitted in the pleadings, and it is clear that the terms of the agreement had to be looked to during the hearing of the case. It is manifest, therefore, that the point is material and must be decided. The case of Mg Mat v. Mg So (1), to which reference was made is, therefore, not applicable to the facts of the present case, for in that case the whole agreement was explicitly admitted in the pleadings. The cases in Burma show that there is a difference of opinion as to whether such an agreement as this is compulsorily registrable. The original transaction under which Mg Wala transferred the land to respondents was clearly an outright sale. Evidence of the intentions of the parties and of their conduct was not admissible for the purpose of proving that this original transaction was in effect, a mortgage. The cases of Bal Kishen Das v. Legge (2) and Mg Bin v. Ma Hlaing (3) show conclusively that this is correct, and nothing more need be said, except that the said transaction left behind it no relationship of debtor and creditor as between the parties, and that it must be dealt with as an outright conveyance [Ma Hnin v. Osman Gani (4)]. The agreement in suit was nothing more than an option of re-purchase with certain explanations and conditions, and a promise to rent the land to respondents as yearly tenants in case of re-purchase. The first Burma case to which attention has been directed is Ma Thin v. H. M. Yasin (5), where Parlett, J., held that such an agreement requires registration, since the effect of it is to create a right of redemption. However in the case of Ma Shwe U v. Mg Po Lu (6), a Bench of the late Chief Court, consisting of Ormond and Twomey, J.J., held that such an agreement was merely an option of re-purchase, and that registration was not compulsory.

The case of U Kyo v. Mg Pan Yo (7), is not very clearly stated in the report but it appears that, after first mortgaging the land, it was made over to the mortgagee by the mortgagor by a Pyatpaing, the mortgagee agreeing orally to allow redemption at any time. It was held by Maung Kin, J., that this agreement required to be in writing and registered.

In C. Chaing Kywan v. Ma Oo (8), it was held by Maung Kin, J., that on facts similar to the present it was shown that the intention of the parties was that the transaction should be an usufructuary mortgage and that the agreement was, therefore, compulsorily registrable. It does not appear that the learned Judge's attention was called to the Bench case of Ma Shwe U v. Mg Po Lu (6), referred to above. Moreover the case is distinguishable inasmuch as there the agreement included terms which had been omitted from the original conveyance.

MAUNG WALA v. MG. SHWE GUN.

In Maung Paung v. Ma On (9) Heald, J., did not follow the case of C. Chaing Kywan v. Ma Oo (8) and decided that an agreement for re-conveyance was admissible in evidence without registration, which it did not require.

There can be no doubt that this later view is correct. It is in accordance with the Bench decision of the Chief Court and it seems paradoxical to hold that, when an agreement to sell does not require registration since it creates no interest in the land, an agreement to re-purchase must be registered since it creates a right of redemption. It does not create any right of redemption, when there has been an outright sale, and it does not rescind or modify the terms of that sale, so as to alter it into a mortgage. This is clear from what is stated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (10).

The agreement, therefore, did not require registration and so was admissible in evidence and, if proved, valid and binding. It has been admitted in evidence by the respondents, so it can now be regarded as proved. It is quite clear from what Mg Gyee and the headman say that appellant had the money with him, when he saw Mg Gyee in his office on 4th March 1922 and that he had the money with him when he complained to the local headman Mg Po Htu on the same date that he could not meet respondents, in order to tender the money. The cross-objections, therefore, fall to the ground, and the argument that the notes were not counted holds no water, and is clearly an after thought on Mr. Villa's part. Naturally no one would have counted the notes, except the payee, and Mg Gyee and Co., most strangely, have contended that, though they were all this time lawyers for the respondents, they had no authority to receive the Rs. 5,600 from Mg Wala.

It has been held in the case of Mg Po Kin v. Mg Shwe Kin (11) in which the case of Samarapuri Chettiar v. A. Sudarsana Chariar (12) was followed, that in the case of these agreements to re-purchase; time is of the essence of the contract and that the doctrine that time may not be of the essence of the contract, which arises on the construction of contracts of sale of immoveable property, is not applicable; for the right to re-purchase, being an option, must be exercised according to the strict terms of the power.

The lower Court was, therefore, correct in holding that time was of the essence of the contract. However the plaintiff-appellant was not bound to hand over the money to anybody except the respondents, or their authorized agents, and he was certainly not bound, in the circumstances, to tender the money to Mg Gyee & Co., since they pleaded non-authorization, or to deposit the money into Court. This is in reply to suggestions made in argument by respondent's learned Counsel. The fact that appellant was possessed of the money and was ready and willing to tender it would be sufficient. That he had the money ready, and was ready and willing to tender it, is quite obvious from the correspondence filed in the case, and the evidence, for the appellant on the record. His one notable failure was that, although the respondents were invited to attend at their lawyer Mg Gyee & Co's office at 10 A.M. on March 4th 1922, by a notice from appellant's lawyer, which it appears that appellant himself delivered to respondents, and the respondents duly attended, the appellant did not arrive there till 3-15 P.M. or after the respondents had gone away. Otherwise, once the appellant had waived his uncalled-for claim to take over the crops on the land, it appears that he acted with exemplary diligence, in his effort to comply with the terms of the agreement. Moreover, even as regards the 4th of March, it is clear that the appellant, on his way from his village of Mingalern to Rangoon, called in first at respondents' field hut at Kyagan, in case the respondents had not gone to Rangoon and made efforts to find and pay them the money there. It is clear that neither they, nor their lawyers had ever intimated whether respondents intended to come to Rangoon at all, and there was some excuse for appellant being late at Mg Gyee & Co's. office. Moreover he did arrive there within business hours. The fact however remains that he was late, and his excuse that he did not know the time appointed cannot in the circumstances be accepted. However, after March 4th, the appellant manifestly made further efforts not only to procure acceptance of the tender by Mg Gyee & Co. but to find the respondents. There is no reason to doubt Mg Shwe Nigon's evidence about the events of March 8th when he and appellant visited respondent's hut and failed to find them. This evidence was apparently overlooked by the District Court. Moreover it appears that the respondents had no house in any village, but resided at times in one field hut and at times in another far distant from the first, and that they were not in fact easy to find. It seems clear that after the event of March 4th, the respondents must have determined to avoid any meeting with the appellant, if that were possible. The facts being such, the question is whether, in spite of the time limit being exceeded, the appellant is entitled to performance of the contract by the respondents. Equitably he clearly is so. Due note must be taken of the fact that respondents' lawyers repudiated authorization to accept appellant's tender. It is not easy to believe that this was correct, and it is at any rate most unusual. The ultimate fault clearly lay with respondents, their conduct in not intimating that they would come to Rangoon on March 4th and after that date, rendering timely performance by appellant practically impossible. The equitable principle is clear that, though time is of the essence of the contract, a default by the payees such as renders proper tender by the purchaser by due date impracticable, would be interpreted by the Courts as extending time, when it is clear that the purchaser was prepared with a ready and willing tender.

No evidence having been tendered as to any improvements by respondents, though the matter was expressly in issue, this claim is disallowed.

The decree of the District Court dismissing the suit is set aside, and the appellant is given a decree that the respondents shall within one month from the date of decree re-convey the suit land to the appellant on payment of Rs. 5,600. The respondents will pay appellant's costs.

Suit: Valuation Act (VII of 1887), ss 4, 11—Suit, for possession of land—Market value less than plaintiff's valuation—Appeal, valuation for purposes of—Proper forum, how determined.

For the purpose of determining the course of appeal, the value of a suit for possession of a house is the market value of the house as ascertained by the Court and not the value as stated by the plaintiff in his plaint. [p 610, col 1].
Mohammad Khan v. Ashak Mohammad, 106 P. R. 1895 (F. B.), followed.

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated the 10th February 1921.

Lalas Durga Das and Nawal Kishore, for the Appellant.

Mr. Sagar, Chand and Sheikh Niaz Mohammad, for the Respondents.

There being conflict of authority on the point the Judges made the following

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

In 1914 the plaintiff bought 2 kanals 3 marlas of land from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for Rs. 4,300. He obtained possession of 1 kanal 12 marlas and paid Rs. 3,800 out of the price and he has brought a suit for possession of the remaining 11 marals on payment of Rs 500. The suit has been dismissed and he has appealed to this Court.

The plaintiff valued his suit for purposes of Court fees and jurisdiction at Rs 5,500. The defendants in their pleas objected to that valuation and said that the correct value was only Rs. 1,100. The question of the market value of the property was put in issue and the lower Court's finding on the point is in the defendants' favour. The latter take the objection that the appeal lay to the District Court and not to this Court, but for the appellant it is contended that even if he over-valued the property he was at liberty to do so and that for the purposes of determining the course of appeal the value of the suit is to be taken to be the value which he put on it and not the actual value of the property.

The appellant's contention appears to be supported by Mohammad Khan v. Ashak Mohammad (1) in which the plaintiff had sued for redemption, alleging that the amount due on the mortgage was Rs. 2,000 but the Court decreed redemption on payment of Rs 7,558. It was held by a Full Bench of the Chief Court that the appeal lay to the Divisional Judge, there being nothing in the plaint to show that the value exceeded Rs. 5,000, and the question of jurisdiction having to be determined with reference to the claim made and not to the decision upon the claim. That ruling was followed in Chuni Lal v. Beli Ram (2).

A case that is directly in point is Trakanta Das v. Kali Prasad Das (3), in which the plaintiffs sued in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for a declaration of their right to land valuing the suit at Rs 5,100. The defendants urged that the true value was not more than Rs. 1,000. The Subordinate Judge found that the value of the property was Rs 1,385 and he returned the plaint for presentation in the Court of a Munsif empowered to try suits up to Rs. 2,000 in value. The plaintiffs appealed, and it was held that as they still maintained that the valuation exceeded Rs. 5,000, the appeal lay to the High Court notwithstanding the Subordinate Judge's adjudication.

On the other hand in Abdur Raliman v. Charag Din (4), where the plaintiff had valued the suit, which was for possession of a house, at Rs. 90, but the Munsif gave a decree for possession on payment of Rs. 634-7-0 the value of the improvements made to the house by the defendant, it was held that the value of the suit for purposes of appeal was the market value of the house as ascertained by the Court. Lal Chand, J., observed that the test of the value for purposes of appeal ought to be prima facie the value as determined by the Court rather than as alleged by the plaintiff, and that it would be anomalous to hold that in a case dependent on valuation of the subject-matter for purposes of jurisdiction the plaintiff could arbitrarily choose his own Court by an arbitrary valuation of the property. Daya Ram v. Gordhandas (5) also supports the respondents' contention that the value of the suit is the value determined by the Court and not the value which the plaintiff has chosen to put upon it.

In view of the conflict of authority we refer to a Full Bench the question whether for the purpose of determining the course of appeal in the present case the value of the suit is to be taken to be the value placed by the plaint on the property which he claims or the actual value of the property as determined by the Court.

JUDGMENT.—The facts have been stated in the referring order. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant, that the value of the subject-matter of the suit should be taken to be the value stated by him in his plaint, and not the value as determined by the Court, and a large number of rulings have been cited in support of this con-attention. It appears to us unnecessary to discuss any of these as the whole matter was fully considered by a Full Bench of the Chief Court in Abdur Rahman v. Charag Din (4) in which it was held that the value, for purposes of appeal, of a suit for possession of a house was the market value of the house as ascertained by the Court, and not the value as stated by the plaintiff in his plaint. We entirely agree with that decision. It is pointed out that, in that case the value put by the plaintiff on the property was less, while in the present case is greater, than the amount found by the Court to be the value, but this difference is immaterial, for whether the plaintiff has under-valued or over-valued the suit the test for determining the value for purposes of jurisdiction remains the same.

We would hold on the question referred that for the purpose of determining the course of appeal in the present case, the value of the suit is to be taken to be the actual value of the property as determined by the Court.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s 109—Lessor transferring property leased—Rights and liabilities of transferee—Termination of lease—Lessee, whether can dispute title of transferee.

When a lessor transfers his ownership in the property leased, under section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act, the transferee, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, possesses the rights and, if the lessee so elects, is subject to all the liabilities of the lessor. In such a case when the lease has terminated, it is open to the man in possession to dispute the lessor's title to the land on the ground that ownership of it has passed either by a transfer or operation of law to another. [p. 617, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal from the decree of the First Additional District Judge, Akola, dated the 25th June 1921, in Civil Appeal No. 118 of 1921.

Mr. G. G. Hatwaine, for the Appellant

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Yado the father of the plaintiff in this case owned a half share in field Survey Nos. 59 of Palsod, at present it is put as pot lissa No 2 of that survey number. The father leased the share to Tejsingh the father of the first two defendants in 1899 for 21 years. The lessee was given possession. Yado's father had executed a mortgage-deed in favour of one Girdharilal Deokaran. The mortgagee sued on this which affected a quarter share of the field getting a foreclosure decree in 1903. Yado during the pendency of that suit died and the present plaintiff and his brother were brought on record as his legal representatives and the property was foreclosed against them. The lease expired before the bringing of this suit and Tejsingh is dead. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 continued in possession of half the field after Tejsingh's death. Plaintiff sues to recover possession of half the field and Rs. 200 as damages for allowing the field to get overgrown with weeds. Plaintiff's brother was no party to the suit but plaintiff says as defendants are trespassers and he is a co-parcener he has a right to bring the suit for the whole half share. The third defendant is holding the land under defendants Nos 1 and 2.

Various pleas were raised defendants contending that plaintiff in no case can recover possession of the one-fourth share foreclosed. If they are liable for damages those damages do not exceed Rs 12. They further pleaded that they had purchased the interest of Girdharilal Deokaran in the field in 1909, that is, as regards the fourth share. Plaintiff in turn contended that he was entitled to recover the half field on the ground that that half had not been divided and defendant cannot retain possession of any part of it until any portion to which they may be entitled is separated by metes and bounds.

VIR SINGH v. BHOLA SINGH.

The First Court found that plaintiff could not recover the one-fourth share covered by the foreclosure decree but he could recover the remaining quarter though his share therein amounted to one-eighth; that defendants are trespassers and plaintiff and his brother are undivided. Plaintiff was also found to be entitled to recover Rs. 75 as damages.

The plaintiff appealed. It was admitted in the lower Appellate Court that plaintiff and his brother had lost the fourth share of the field covered by the foreclosure decree and that they are now legally entitled to only a half share in the pot hissa; but that share being undivided and the one-fourth share lost by them not having been separated by metes and bounds, it was contended that they are entitled to the entire pot hissa and they could not be deprived of any part of it until the fourth portion of the foreclosure decree was separated by partition. This argument has been abandoned here and the plaintiff-appellant takes his stand on the fact that as the defendants' father was the lessee of the plaintiff's father and had not returned the whole land covered by the lease at the expiry of the lease they could not deny the plaintiff's title to the whole land.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court writes in paragraph 5 of his judgment as follows:

"Plaintiff accepts the position that he and his brother have lost one-fourth of the share of the field by virtue of the decree and that they are legally entitled to only half share in the pot hissa".

It is here contended that this being a question of law the appellant is not bound by the admissions made in the lower Appellate Court. It is obvious that when a lessor transfers his ownership in the property leased, under section 109 of the Transfer of Property Act, the transferee in the absence of a contract to the contrary possesses the right and if the lessee so elects is subject to all the liabilities of the lessor. In a case of this nature when the lease has terminated it is open to the man in possession to dispute the lessor's title to the land on the ground that ownership of it has passed either by a transfer or operation of law to another.

In the present case what in effect the defendants pleaded is that as regards a one-fourth share of the field the foreclosure decree and execution thereunder have deprived the plaintiff of the ownership of a fourth of the field. It has to be remembered that the plaintiff was a party to the foreclosure decree and it seems to me that the decision that he and his brother are no longer owners of a fourth share of the field can be justly urged by the defendants as depriving plaintiff of the right to this particular one-fourth share.

The case seems to me to have been properly decided. I dismiss this appeal with costs. The appellant to pay the respondents' costs.

SHIVBASAPPA v. NILAVA.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent sued for a declaration that an alienation of land effected by Sawan Singh for a consideration of Rs. 700 in favour of Vir Singh on the 2nd August, 1919, should not affect his reversionary rights. The First Court held that the land was ancestral and that the alienation was valid to the extent of Rs 530-6-0 and passed a decree in accordance therewith. The vendee filed an appeal in the Court of the District Judge who refused to allow the question, whether the land was ancestral or not, to be raised. He said, "The allegation in the plaint that it was ancestral was never specifically denied by the defendant who merely pleaded ignorance on the point. This, in my opinion, constitutes no such denial as would warrant the framing of an issue." On the merits he dismissed the appeal.

In second appeal it is contended that the District Judge was wrong in not allowing the question of the ancestral nature of the land to be raised. In his written pleas the vendee said "I do not know whether the land is ancestral. I do not admit that it is ancestral." Order VIII, r 5, Civil Procedure Code, says "every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted provided that the Court may in its discretion require any fact so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission." Now in the plaint it was alleged that the land was ancestral and the defendant in his pleadings clearly stated that he did not admit this allegation. The allegation, therefore, could not be taken to be admitted and the plaintiff was bound to prove it. It is, however, contended on behalf of the respondent that the defendant's mukhtar prior to the framing of the issues did admit that the land was ancestral. Now in the first place the vernacular record of his statement might according to the appellant's Counsel be read as "zamin jaddi nahin." The plaintiff's Counsel reads it as "zamin jaddi thi." Considering that the defendant in his written pleas stated that he did not admit that the land was ancestral, I think the Court was perfectly justified in framing an issue on the point because in accordance with the proviso to rule 5 the Court may require any fact so admitted to be proved otherwise than by such admission. The name of the mukhtar who is said to have made this admission is not given on the record and there is no power-of-attorney on the record of the Trial Court appointing any one as a mukhtar of the vendee defendant. In my opinion this at least is open to doubt whether the so-called mukhtar of the defendants made the alleged admission. But even if he did the Court was right to put the matter in issue. Evidence was produced upon it and the Trial Court gave a considered finding thereon. Under all the circumstances of the case I consider the vendee was entitled to raise the point in his grounds of appeal in the lower Appellate Court and the District Judge was wrong in refusing to decide the point.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and under O. XII, r 23, Civil Procedure Code, remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for re-decision of the appeal. Stamp in this Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

After the filing of the appeal, however, the decision in Yadav v. Namdeo (1) has rendered it possible for the appellant to raise the contention that the adoption would have the effect of divesting the estate vested in defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the death of Basvanta. It is urged that, though, according to the decisions of this Court the plaintiff would have no case, in view of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Yadav v. Namdeo (1) relating to the Full Bench ruling of this Court in Ramji v. Ghaman (2), those decisions are no longer good law, and that as a logical consequence of the observations relating to the decision in Ramji v. Ghaman (2), it follows that the adoption would be good even after the death of the last surviving co-parcener of the joint family so as to have the effect of divesting the estate vested in the widow or widows of the last co-parcener.

On behalf of the respondents it is urged that, whatever the effect of the observations in Yadav v. Namdeo (1) may be as regards the power of the widow during the continuance of the joint family, the current of decisions of this Court with regard to the inability of a widow to adopt so as to divest the estate vested in a third party is not touched in any way, and that that current of decisions cannot be treated as having been overruled by the observations which are directly made with reference to the decision in Ramji v. Ghaman (2). The current of decisions referred to begins from the year 1871 when Rupchand Hindumal v. Rakhmal (3) was decided; then we have the decision in Chandra v. Gojarabai (4), which is strongly relied upon by the respondents. They also rely upon the observations in Vasudeo Vishnu Manohar

v. Ramchandra Vinayak Madok (5) and Payapa Akkapa Patil v. Appanna (6).

The question that arises in virtue of the observations in Yadao v. Namdeo (1) is whether, if the widow of a deceased co-parcener in a joint family could adopt validly, even in the absence of any express authority from her husband, without the consent of the surviving co-parceners, it is necessarily implied that that adoption, even when effected after the death of the last surviving co-parcener of the joint family, and after the estate has vested in the widow or widows of that last deceased co-parcener, would be valid or rather have the effect of divesting the estate so vested in the widows. It is not necessary for the purpose of this case to examine the point decided in Ramji v. Ghaman (2) along with the earlier and later decisions on that point in the light of the observations in Yadao v. Namdeo (1). It is clear, however, that for a long time in this Court the rule is accepted as stated in Thakarama Tejrani v. Sarupchand Chhaganbhai (7).

"But where the circumstances are, as they are here, it seems to me quite plain that we must follow what is well-understood as the ordinary law in this Presidency and apply it to the facts. The widow of a deceased co-parcener of a joint Hindu family cannot, in the absence of any specific authority, make an adoption subsequent to the death of a co-parcener who survived her husband, and more particularly when, as here, that later surviving co-parcener left widows."

That undoubtedly was the law as understood and accepted in this Presidency before the decision in Yadao v. Namdeo (1). In the present case, we are not directly concerned with the decision in Ramji v. Ghaman (2). We are concerned with another current of decisions to which I have referred, and the question is whether after the death of the last surviving co-parcener when the estate has vested in the widow of that co-parcener the adoption effected by a widow of a pre-deceased co-parcener could have the effect of divesting that estate. On that point it seems to me to be quite safe to say that the decision in Yadao v. Namdeo (1) is silent. It is difficult to accept that the effect of that decision is to overrule by implication the current of decisions on that point. It is an oft-repeated caution that a decision is an authority for what it decides, and that it is not an authority for what may seem to be a logical consequence of that decision. In the present case I am not clear at all that, because a widow of a pre-deceased co-parcener can adopt without the consent of the surviving co-parceners, even in the absence of any specific authority from her husband during the life-time of the co-parcener, necessarily or logically even after the death of the last surviving co-parcener when the joint family has ceased, and the property has devolved upon the heirs of the last surviving co-parcener, she can make a valid adoption so as to divest the estate already vested in the heirs of the last male owner. Mr. Nilkanth has not been able to cite any authority in support of his argument for the appellant. But it is urged by Mr. Coyajee on behalf of the respondents that the decision in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (8) which has been approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Madana Mohana Ananga BheemaDeo v. Purushathama Ananga Bheema Deo (9), has the effect of recognising this principle that the right of a widow to adopt may be extinguished owing to certain events or circumstances, and where that is the case it does not matter whether she had originally a right to make an adoption to her husband. It is urged that in the present case when the last surviving co-parcener, i.e., Basvanta, died the right of the widow of Lagmappa to adopt came to an end. The application of the principle accepted in Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (8) with reference to the facts such as we have in the present case is not to be found in any reported case so far. But it is open to the respondents to urge with force that there is no reason why that principle should not be so applied as to put an end to the power of the widow to adopt, when the estate is vested already in others. Though no decision exactly bearing on the facts of the present case has been cited to show that the principle of Ramkrishna v. Shamrao (8) can apply to facts such as we have here, it may be said that the principle has been applied under varying circumstances; for instance, it has been applied to the case of widows who inherit property under the rule laid down in Lallubhai Bapubhai v. Mankuvarbai (10). However, that may be, I am entirely unable to give effect to the plaintiff's contention that Yadao v. Namdeo (1) must be taken as overruling the current of decisions to which I have referred and of which the decision in Chandra v. Gojarabai (4) is a type.

I may mention with reference to this point that after the decision in Yadao v. Namdeo (1), I had more occasions than one to refer to that case. First it was referred to in Bhau Adganda Patil v. Narasagama Tatyia Pitil (11) to which Mr. Justice Fawcett was a party, and then in Dattatraya Bhimrao v. Gangobai Ganeshbat (12). It is also referred to in Yeknath Narayan v. Laxmibai Kesho Gopal (13). I refer to these decisions for the purpose of showing that except as to the effect of Yadao v. Namdeo (1) on the decision in Ramji v. Ghamau (2) it has not been so far accepted as overruling the decisions of this Court which may appear somewhat inconsistent with the view taken in that case, but which bear on a distinct point that did not arise and was not in terms considered in Yadao v. Namdeo (1). "I am fully alive to the force of the contention of the appellant that in view of the observations in Yadao v. Namdeo (1) all these decisions, not only that in Ramji v. Ghamau (2) but the others also to which I have referred, should be reconsidered. But in view of the settled rule on this point and of the effect which a reconsideration of it would have upon titles to property, I do not think that it ought to be departed from by this Court in the absence of a clear ruling of the Privy Council to that effect.

The facts in the present case are rather peculiar, and it may appear anomalous that, though according to the observations in Yadao v. Namdeo (1) defendant No. 4 could have adopted after Lagmappa's death without Basvanta's consent during the three days that Basvanta survived Lagmappa, her power to adopt should have practically come to an end on Basvanta's death on the 25th October, or rather it should have become ineffective for the purpose of divesting the estate vested in the widows of Basvanta. But the principle and the dividing line are clear; and for the sake of a logical application of the theory of the inherent power of a widow to adopt in this Presidency which is probably a deviation from Hindu Law as observed by their Lordships in Yadao v. Namdeo (1), and for which, speaking with great deference, I am unable to find any support in any text of Hindu Law, I do not think that it would be right to depart from a rule which is laid down in various decisions of this Court and which is clearly understood and uniformly followed up to now. On the contrary it would be carrying the probable deviation from Hindu Law distinctly a step further as affecting the devolution of property for which it would be difficult to find a justification in the principles governing the law of adoption.

The result is that the decree of the lower Court is confirmed and the appeal dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENT.

Mortgage—Redemption—Interest on mortgage, whether charge on property—Mortgagee, whether entitled to recover.

In the absence of a contract to the contrary, a mortgagee is entitled, in a settlement of his account with his mortgagor, to treat the interest due under the mortgage as a charge on the estate, and to realise all interest due under the mortgage within 12 years from the date of suit. [p 623, col 1.]

Radha Kishen v. Muhamdu, 57 P R. 1868, followed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 11th January 1924, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Fourth Class, Karnal, dated the 21st May 1923.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Prakash Chandra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for determination in this second appeal is whether interest from the date of the execution of the mortgage-deed till the date of possession was or was not a charge upon the property. The facts are briefly these:—On the 31st January 1897 the defendant Kallu Khan mortgaged certain land to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 75. It was agreed that interest would be paid at the rate of 2 per cent per mensem after every six months and that in case of the mortgagor's failure to do so the mortgagee would be entitled to enter into possession. On the 29th July 1908 the plaintiff-mortgagee brought a suit for possession in lieu of the principal and interest then due in accordance with the terms of the mortgage-deed and obtained a decree on the 7th August 1908. Possession was obtained in execution proceedings on the 13th November 1908 and mutation was sanctioned in favour of the decree-holder on the 1st December 1908. On the 22nd November 1922 the defendant made an application for redemption under the Redemption of Mortgage Act (II of 1913) and redemption was ordered by the Revenue Officer to take place on payment of Rs. 75 on the 4th December 1922. The plaintiff's contention that he was also entitled to interest to the extent of Rs. 213 was rejected. Shortly after this order the plaintiff brought this suit for a declaration that in addition to the principal money of Rs. 75 he was also entitled to a sum of Rs. 213 on account of interest and that redemption could not be effected until that money had been paid. The Trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit but the learned District Judge on appeal came to a contrary finding and dismissed the suit holding that interest was not a charge upon the property under the terms of the mortgage-deed in question.

Against this decision the plaintiff has now come up in second appeal to this Court through Mr. Shamair Chand, while Mr. Parkash Chandra has appeared for the respondent.

After hearing the learned Counsel for the parties and carefully reading the terms of the mortgage-deed on which the suit is based, I am of opinion that the appeal must succeed. The relevant condition in the mortgage-deed is to the following effect:—"It is agreed that interest shall be paid every half-year; in case of default in payment of interest possession of the mortgaged land shall be given to the mortgagee forthwith. The income of the mortgaged land during possession shall be paid to the mortgagee, and after payment of land revenue and cesses shall be set off against interest on the mortgage, and if the interest be not fully covered by the income then the interest shall be paid at the time of redemption together with the mortgage money." The learned District Judge is of opinion that the expression "interest on the mortgage" and "interest in the second sentence mean the annual interest accruing after the mortgagee had taken possession and do not include what had previously accrued. I do not think that the expressions are capable of this interpretation alone. There is no condition in the mortgage-deed to the effect that before possession had been taken over interest would not be a charge upon the property. In my opinion it was clearly intended that the mortgagee would keep an account of the income of the period during which he was in possession of the property and that at the time of redemption the whole of the mortgage-money with interest from the date of the mortgage would be paid by the mortgagor after getting credit for what had already been realized by the mortgagee in the shape of the produce of the mortgaged property. In Radha Kishen v. Muhamadu (1) it was held that in the absence of a contract to the contrary the mortgagee was entitled, in a settlement of his account with his mortgagor to treat the interest due under the mortgage as a charge on the estate and the mortgagee was entitled to all interest due under the mortgage within 12 years from the date of suit. The principle laid down in the authority is fully applicable to this case and as there is no express condition in the deed that interest would not be a charge upon the property the mortgagee is entitled in the settlement of his account to treat the interest under the mortgage as a charge upon the estate.

It is, however, contended by the learned Vakul for the respondent that the claim for interest prior to 1908 is barred by limitation. I am unable to agree with this contention. The plaintiff is in possession of the property as mortgagee and it is the defendant who is claiming redemption. The plaintiff is certainly entitled to resist the claim for redemption until the whole of the money which is due to him under the mortgage has been paid and I do not think that any question of limitation arises in this case.

I accordingly accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the learned District Judge decree the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

In a suit for ejectment the plaintiff must first prove his right to eject, before the onus is shifted to the defendant to prove that he has a permanent right of occupancy, and, in order to prove a right to eject, the plaintiff must necessarily show that the tenancy is a terminable one and has been validly terminated [p. 625, col. 1].

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—This suit was brought by the purchaser of the proprietary interest in Pedamamidipalli, a whole village in Elamanchili Zemindari estate, to eject the defendants who are tenants holding plaint items Nos. 1 to 16 which were once part of a darimilla inam, or failing the relief of ejectment, to declare the plaintiff's right to impose full rates of rent on the lands, and to give the plaintiff a decree for recovery of rent at nine bags of grain per acre for three years. The suit lands were granted about 1819 to the defendants' ancestors for rendering karnam service. In 1910, Government purported to enfranchise these lands and the plaintiff filed a suit, Original Suit No 18 of 1911, for setting aside the enfranchisement and for a declaration that the right of resumption rested with him and not with Government. In this suit he was finally successful in the High Court. The present suit is for ejectment of the defendants. The lower Court gave the plaintiff a decree for possession with mesne profits. Defendants Nos. 4 to 8, 21 to 34 and 19 appeal.

The facts of this case resemble those of Idubilly Siyyadi v. Sri Raja Viswaswara Nissanka (1) with this difference, that there was an admission in that case that prior to the nam grant, the lands were ordinarily jeroyati lands, whereas here the question whether the original grant was a grant of land to be held on a favourable rate of rent or a grant of a part of the melvaram, or landlord's share depends upon the evidence. Beyond the oral evidence of one witness on each side which is inconclusive, the evidence is entirely documentary. Each side has attempted to draw an inference in their favour from certain ancient documents called yadasts, ghoshparas and bubands marked as Exhibit C series. Exhibit C3 is the yadast for Fash 1229 corresponding to the year 1819. This shows an increase of four putties in the total cultivated area of the village. It also shows for the first time the existence of 1½ putties of service nam. For the appellant, Mr. Krishnaswami Aiyar argued that a smaller standard of measurement must have been adopted in measuring the lands for this year, and in proof of this theory, he pointed to the excess in the area of village sites, lakes, channels etc., which are items not likely to be liable to sudden increases. On the other hand, the respondent relies on this document to show that the service nam must have been granted out of land that had been previously lying waste. It is difficult to say which is the right assumption to be made. On the other hand Exhibit C1, the account of cultivation in Fash 1210, shows that the family of Bollapragada Kondraju, who was the defendants' ancestor, possessed two putties of jeroyati land in addition to one-fourth dumbala nam. The Subordinate Judge is in error in his observation that these accounts do not show that Kondraju was cultivating any land in Pedamamidipalli as jeroyati land before the grant.

In this state of the evidence, it is argued for the respondent that recent decisions of the Privy Council and of this Court have unsettled the principles upon which Idubilly Siyadi v. Sri Rajah Viswaswara Nissanka (1) and Gajapathy Maharaju Garu v. Sondi Prahlada Bissoyi Ratno (2) were decided and that now the burden is on the tenant to show that he was granted a right of kudivaram when the nam grant was first made. The most recent decision of the Privy Council is that in Nainapillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettier (3) in which they say that "it cannot now be doubted that when a tenant of lands in India sets up a defence that he has a right of permanent tenancy in the lands, the onus of proving that he has such right is upon the tenant."

In Suryanarayana v. Patanna (4) the Privy Council laid down that there was no presumption that at the date of the grant of an nam, there were any tenants holding lands with any rights of occupancy by custom or otherwise. It is also true that no permanent right of occupancy arising out of the enactment of section 6 of the Madras Estates Land Act, I of 1908 in favour of holders of ryoti land in an estate can be availed of by holders of service inams, as such lands are expressly excluded by section (16) (c) from the definition of ryoti land so long as the service tenure subsists. Upon resumption of a service inam, if the land is incorporated among the ryoti lands, the person let into possession would acquire an occupancy right by virtue of section 6. But in the present case with the exception of items Nos. 7 and 8, for which the plaintiff says that jeroyati pattas were issued by mistake, there is no admission on the part of the landlord that the lands became ryoti lands when they were disannexed from the burden of service. It has however been made clear not only in Idubilly Siyadi v. Sri Rajah Viswaswara Nissanka (1) but also in Chandrasekharaswami v. Nainar Ammal (5) that when a plaintiff seeks to eject a defendant from possession on the ground that the latter is his tenant whose tenancy has been terminated, he must prove not only that the defendant is his tenant as alleged, if that is denied, but also his right to eject. In order to prove a right to eject, he must necessarily show that the tenancy is a terminable one and has been validly terminated. This onus is unaffected by any defence of permanent rights of occupancy that the defendant may set up but fails to prove. The principle that in a suit for ejectment the plaintiff must first prove his right to eject before the onus is shifted to the defendant to prove that he has a permanent right of occupancy has been recently re-affirmed in Venkatarangayya Apparao v. Morampudi Bajiraju (6) which was, like this, a case of a resumption of service inam.

Mr. Rama Doss argued that in the previous suit it was admitted that the land was granted as inam. The suit was between the Zemindar and the Government as to the latter's rights to enfranchise and the ryot was only a pro-forma defendant. As observed in Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (7) the practice of Government upon enfranchisement is to impose full assessment and not to disturb existing possession. Therefore, the use of the word "land" in the written statement of the tenant in this suit is inconclusive. In the present case the plaintiff, having come into Court with a prayer to be put in possession of lands in defendants' occupation, has failed to prove that the defendants are holding those lands upon a tenancy which is terminable and has been determined.

The lower Court was, therefore, not justified in giving the plaintiff a decree for the first relief asked by him, and the lower Court's decree directing delivery of possession of items Nos. 1 to 16 must, therefore, be modified. In lieu thereof the plaintiff will have a decree for recovery of the full assessment of the land at the rates to be determined under the seventh issue which the lower Court has left undecided. The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the suit will be remanded for deciding the seventh issue and giving the plaintiff a decree for rent in accordance with our decision upon the other issues in the case. Costs in this Court to be borne by the respondent. Costs in the lower Court will abide and be provided in the final decree.

Custom—Alienation—Declaratory suit by reversioner—Alienor in collusion—Decree, whether can be passed

A declaratory decree may be given in a suit to contest an unnecessary alienation by a person governed by Punjab custom, if the suit is brought honestly on behalf of a minor reversioner to protect his interests. But a decree cannot be given in a case where the minor is merely a figure-head and the real plaintiff is the alienor himself who has caused the suit to be instituted for the purpose of undoing his own act.

Sheikh Abdul Kadir, K. B., for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Appeals Nos. 2174 and 2175 of 1923 arise out of suits to contest sales of land effected in favour of Dad by Malka and his brother Sikandar on the 6th October 1909 and the 18th November 1909 respectively. The suits were instituted in August 1921 by Malka's minor son Lal through a relation named Sultan. The Subordinate Judge dismissed them, finding that they were collusive and had been brought at the instance of Malka and Sikandar, who were incurring the expenses of the litigation, and that the sales were effected for necessity.

The District Judge on appeal held in each case that no necessity for the alienation was proved except in respect of an item of Rs 150 due to a mortgagee, and he accepted the appeals and remanded the cases for a decision as to the amount to which the vendee was entitled for improvements. The present appeals have been filed by the vendee from those orders, and there are cross-objections on behalf of the plaintiff,

The learned District Judge in deciding the appeals before him did not advert to the collusive nature of the suits. Malka, Sikandar and Lal all live together, and it has been brought out in evidence, as pointed out by the Subordinate Judge, that the money required for the litigation with Dad was raised by Malka himself by a mortgage effected only a few days before the institution of the suits. The Subordinate Judge's finding that Malka and Sikandar are the persons who are at the back of the litigation and that they have been financing it has not been disturbed by the learned District Judge and we have no doubt about its correctness. Without going into the question of necessity we think that on that finding alone the judgments of the Trial Court dismissing the suits should have been affirmed. A declaratory decree may be given in a suit to contest an unnecessary alienation if the suit is brought honestly on behalf of a minor reversioner to protect his interests. But, in our opinion, it would not be proper to pass such a decree in a case like the present in which the minor is merely a figure-head and the real plaintiff is the alienor himself, who has caused the suit to be instituted for the purpose of undoing his own act. There is an additional reason for not passing a decree in the suit contesting the sale by Sikandar, viz., that the suit was instituted at a time when, if brought by Malka in his own name, it would have been barred by limitation under the Punjab Limitation Act, I of 1920.

We accordingly accept the appeals, set aside the orders of the lower Appellate Court, and restore the decrees of the Trial Court dismissing the suits. The plaintiff-respondent will bear the appellant's costs in all the Courts in each case. The cross-objections are dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—Dower-decree—Form defective—Execution—Decree, whether can be amended

A dower-decree was drawn up in general terms and did not specify the exact shares in which the decree-holder was entitled to succeed against the several defendants (heirs of the plaintiff's deceased husband). In execution it was contended that all the defendants were jointly and severally responsible.

Held, that the Execution Court was bound to construe the decree in the light of the admitted fact that both parties were fighting over a dower-decree, and if the decree itself created any obstacle, justice could be done by amending it so that the shares of the various defendants may be specifically apportioned as between them.

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 6th January 1923.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal succeeds. The matter is really quite simple. A suit for dower-debt was brought by a widow against certain heirs of her husband. She herself exempted her property, and, therefore, her share in the contribution to the debt, in the plaint, and she finally claimed the balance of the debt, namely Rs. 7,500, against the balance of the heirs. Owing to carelessness, which we are afraid is too frequent, her Pleader did not in the relief claim specifically the exact shares in which she was entitled to succeed against each defendant. This may quite well have been due to the fact that it had been mentioned in the body of the pleading, and it was so well-known to everybody, that no child in the business of the law required to be told what the shares were. The relief claimed was, in the alternative, joint or several. The contest was about the amount of the dower and other matters. There was no dispute about the share of liabilities. The judgment gave the relief as prayed. If the decree had been drawn up as prayed, it would have been bad for duplicity. It was drawn up, as my brother pointed out in the argument, in general terms, which, having regard to the plaint, were ambiguous. All this is quite wrong, but it does not affect the substance of the matter. The suit was decreed and an appeal was brought to this Court. The question of the form of the decree was lost sight of in this Court as in the Court below owing to other more important issues then being disputed. The result was that nobody, until this ingenious person in execution raised the question, troubled about the precise form. Now objection is raised in execution that the decree makes all the defendants jointly and severally liable, that is to say, each of them liable for the whole amount. Everybody connected with the case knows that that was never the intention, and the only question is whether the law is so helpless as to be unable to give effect to the rights of the parties. The law is not helpless. We are of opinion that the learned Judge is wrong, and that he was bound to construe the decree in the light of the admitted fact that both parties were fighting over a dower-decree. If the decree itself created any obstacle, justice could still be done not fancifully, but on well-established principles, enunciated, for example, in the House of Lords in the case of Hatton v. Harris (1) where the Courts in Ireland with the approval of the House of Lords amended a palpable mistake about interest in a decree nearly fifty years afterwards. Also in the case of Lachmi Narain v. Jwala Nath (2) and in the case of Srinivasa Row Saheb v. Yamunabhai Ammal (3) both of which are examples of the application of the plain injunction to Courts of Law in India contained in section 152 of the Code. To remove any doubt we order that this decree be amended by apportioning the shares as between Ghasiti, the mother, now represented by Ashiq Ali on the one hand, and Ismail on the other, to 1/3rd and 5/12ths respectively. The appeal must be allowed with costs here and below and in this Court on the higher scale. The lower Court must be directed to pay to the decree-holder the amount paid into Court by the appellant less the amount of costs, which we have just ordered, when ascertained. The payment will, therefore, be delayed until the costs have been ascertained and are ready to be deducted. The lower Court will also amend the decree in accordance with the foregoing observations. Although contracts for the sale of land which can be specifically enforced immediately, or contracts creating a right of pre-emption which cannot be specifically enforced until the proper occasion arises in the future, do not, according to the law in India, create an interest in land either equitable or executory, they do create rights which are capable of being enforced with regard to the land in certain circumstances against third parties and to that extent they are not ordinary personal contracts and stand in a category by themselves. The principle which underlies the rule against perpetuities and which is embodied in section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act is applicable to this class of contracts. [p 632, col 1.]

A covenant in a deed of sale reserving to the vendor and his heirs a right of pre-emption or first refusal to arise on an intended sale of the property is not a covenant which runs with the land at law, and, if it is unlimited in point of time, is void on the ground that it is obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Pratt, J., in an Originating Summons.

The facts are that, on the 18th September 1878, one Vishvanath Narayan Mandlik conveyed to one Ganpatrao Bhaskar Kothare a plot of vacant land measuring 2,843 square yards at Atlamont Road for the consideration of Rs. 5,684. This plot formed part of a larger piece of land belonging to the vendor. The sale-deed was in Marathi and contained certain covenants purporting to reserve for the vendor, his heirs, vahivatdars and donees certain rights of pre-emption, which covenants have given rise to the present dispute.

Vishvanath died in 1889 leaving the first defendant his adopted son as his sole heir and legal representative. Gan-patrao built a large bungalow on the land he had bought. The following pedigree will be useful as showing the descendants of Ganpatrao.—

(died 3-5-1894) Sarasvatibai =
Ganpatrao (died 20-12-1893)

Vinayakrao, Wamanrao = Dinkarrao Vishvasrao
Sundiabai (Plaintiff No. 1) (Defendant No. 2)
(died 15-7-1903) (Plaintiff No. 2)

Narayanrao (died 1910) Shamrao (died 1904)

Ganpatrao by his Will devised the suit property together with other separate and self-acquired properties to his wife Sarasvatibai for her life with remainder to his four sons in equal shares subject to certain trusts for maintenance and residence.

In 1897, Vinayakrao conveyed inter alia his share in the suit property to his three brothers; consequently that share was held by them as purchasers and not as devisees. The suit property has remained undivided, the persons at present entitled to it being Dinkarrao, Vishvasrao, and Sundrabai as heiress of her surviving son Narayanrao. For the purposes of partition it became necessary to sell the property, so the plaintiffs filed this suit as an Originating Summons in order to have the rights of the first defendant under the sale-deed of 1878 determined by the Court.

By clause 14A of the plaint which was added under the direction of the Trying Judge the plaintiff said that the first defendant on diverse occasions had asserted that he was entitled to an option to purchase the suit property in accordance with the provisions of the sale-deed of 1878, and differences had arisen which they had endeavoured to settle by negotiation but without success. The provisions of the sale-deed referred to above are as follows.—

"In case you or your heirs have to sell the said plot, the same is to be sold back to me for the abovementioned value. It is not to be sold to any other person. In case you are informed in writing that I or my heirs or vahvatdars or donees from me are not going to purchase it, then only you can sell it to another person, if you like. But I do not give this right to the purchaser from me. And similarly I do not give this right to the purchaser from any of my heirs or vahvatdars, or from any donee from them."

"When you want to sell the building that you are going to build on the said plot, you or your heirs or vahvatdars are to accept from me or my heirs or vahvatdars or donees the price of that building that may be settled amicably between ourselves or through panch. The said land is sold to you, on the condition that I am to pay as the price of the land only as much amount as is taken from you now."

It may be mentioned as common knowledge that the land which was sold in 1878 at Rs 2 a square yard is in a neighbourhood where in recent years building land has been sold at prices ranging up to Rs. 100 a square yard.

The question propounded in the Summons for determination by the Court was as follows.—

"Whether the first defendant is entitled as against the plaintiff and second defendant to an option to purchase the plot of land and the building thereon in the manner provided by the sale-deed of the 18th September, 1878 and made between the Hon'ble Vishvanath Narayan Mandlik and Ganpatrao Bhaskerji Kothare?"

The Summons was admitted by me on the 22nd March 1921 but if I had realised how many intricate questions of law were involved within the apparently simple question propounded I should have referred the plaintiffs to a regular suit.

The Summons came on for argument before Pratt, J.

Two preliminary points were taken by the first defendant (1) that the Summons was premature, and (2) that the Court had no jurisdiction to grant a declaratory decree in an Originating Summons. How the Summons could possibly be premature is not quite clear, as obviously the plaintiffs were entitled to endeavour to clear their title to this property.

DINKARRAO GANPATRAO V. NARAYAN VISHWANATH.

On the second point the jurisdiction of the Court to grant declaratory decrees is determined by section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The proper procedure to be followed is regulated by the Civil Procedure Code and the High Court Rules.

By High Court Rule 214 which is in the Chapter dealing with proceedings by way of Originating Summons it is clear that the Court can pass a declaratory decree in an Originating Summons provided the case falls within the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, and there can be no doubt that on the facts set out in the plaint the plaintiffs are entitled to ask for a declaratory decree.

The learned Judge then proceeded to ascertain the meaning of the covenants in the sale-deed of 1878, but he considered that the meaning depended on the intention of the parties. With due respect I do not think that was the correct view to take. The Court has to construe the words of the document as they stand according to their plain grammatical meaning, and whatever the parties may have intended they must be bound by the plain meaning of the words to which they attached their signatures.

In conclusion the judgment says:—

"I, therefore, construe the covenant as a valid personal contract but creating no rights in rem.

"Plaintiffs cannot get a declaration as to rights under a personal contract and I, therefore, do not consider whether they are the personal representatives of the covenantor against whom the contract can be enforced.

"The only answer I make to the question is that the covenant creates no rights in rem affecting the plaintiffs' title."

"On the judgment a decree was drawn up as follows:—

"This Court doth declare that the covenant in the said deed of sale, dated the 18th day of September 1878, does not create any rights in rem affecting the plaintiffs' title to the said land and building."

The plaintiffs were directed to pay the costs of the first defendant. The wording of the decree following the wording of the judgment is not in exact legal phraseology. I presume the learned Judge intended to hold that the covenant did not run with the land so as to be enforceable against any one asserting title thereto. Whether that was a satisfactory answer to the question in the Summons or not, both parties are agreed that the covenants do not run with the land, but the plaintiffs have appealed on the ground that the decision in the judgment that the covenant was a valid personal contract is wrong, and although that portion of the judgment is not embodied in the decree still there is a decision against them which might well stand in their way in the future. Undoubtedly the dispute between the parties has been left in a very unsatisfactory condition. If the plaintiffs sell, they may render themselves liable to an action for damages and the decision that there is a valid personal contract may be considered as barring their right to dispute the validity of the contract, while the provisions of section 40 of the Transfer of Property Act, which do not seem to have been considered in the Court below, might cause trouble to their purchaser if it was asserted that he took with notice of the covenants. It was suggested by the Court that the passage in the judgment holding that the covenant was a valid personal contract might be expunged leaving that question to be decided, if necessary, by a future suit, but the plaintiffs were anxious to have the question decided in the Summons and as it was not contended by the respondent that it was necessary to take evidence we decided to hear the argument.

The sale-deed of 1878 is in Marathi and the covenants are very badly drafted. Still they may be called covenants for pre-emption, but there are separate covenants in different terms with regard to the land and the buildings respectively. Nothing is said with regard to the rights of the vendor if the purchaser after erecting a building on the land sold, desired to sell land and building together, and Mr Inverarity argued that in that event happening there was no right of pre-emption. It might be said that the parties clearly intended that if the purchaser wished to sell land and building together the vendor had a right of pre-emption on paying the original price of the land and the agreed value of the building and that the covenants can be read as having given effect to that intention, but covenants of this nature which cast a very onerous burden on the covenantor must be read strictly against the covenantee, and as the covenant does not provide for a sale of land and building together, I am inclined to think that there is considerable force in the argument. However, even if we acceded to it we should still have to decide the real questions at issue which are—

1. Did the covenants in the sale-deed of 1878 create an interest in immovable property?

2. If they did, are they void as against the rule of perpetuity?

3. If they did not, are they void under the rule of perpetuity on the general principles of Hindu or English Law?

According to English Law these covenants would create an executory interest in the immovable property which would be void as offending against the rule of perpetuity. London and South Western Railway Co. v. Gomm (1). But under Hindu Law, which governed the parties to the sale-deed, neither equitable interests nor executory interests in immovable property are recognised.

Under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act contracts for the sale of land do not create an interest in the land, and it would seem to follow that a contract for pre-emption is of the nature of a contract for sale.

But before the Transfer of Property Act was passed contracts for the sale of land in cases to which the English Law was applicable did create an interest in land.

By the Indian Registration Act of 1863 non-testamentary instruments purporting to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest whether vested or contingent of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards to or in immovable property were compulsorily registrable. Although there was no substantive law enacting what instruments created an interest in immovable property, the question would naturally arise when an instrument came before the Court which it was asserted required registration. In Putteh Chund Sahoo v. Leelumber Singh Doss (2) which was a suit between Hindus, the plaintiff sued for specific performance of a contract to sell immovable property and their Lordships held that it required registration on the ground that it created an interest in immovable property, and it does not seem to have been considered whether the English Law might not be applicable to a contract for the sale of land between Hindus.

Under section 17 (2) (v) of the Indian Registration Act of 1877 any document not in itself creating, declaring, &c., any interest in immovable property but merely creating a right to obtain another document which would create, etc., such interest was not compulsorily registrable.

Then by section 27 of the Specific Relief Act of 1877 an agreement for the sale of land could be specifically enforced, not only against the person making the contract, but against any person claiming under the vendor's title arising subsequently to the contract, except a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. By section 91 of the Indian Trusts Act of 1882, a transferee taking with notice of a prior contract in favour of another held the right he obtained under his transfer as a trustee for the previous purchaser, who would consequently be in the position of a cestui que trust. Now the Registration Act and the Specific Relief Act enact principally adjective law, and the natural consequence of enacting adjective law on the assumption that the substantive law prevailing corresponded with the English rule of equity was to create considerable confusion. For instance, a contract which under English Law created an equitable interest in land might also come within the description of the documents referred to in section 17 (2) (v) of the Indian Registration Act of 1877, and very possibly the Legislature intended to exempt such contracts from registration, but the question whether they were compulsorily registrable or not could not be said to have been definitely settled until the passing of the Transfer of Property Act. Still, although contracts for the sale of land which can be specifically enforced immediately, or contracts creating a right of pre-emption which cannot be specifically enforced until the proper occasion arises in the future, do not, according to the law in India, create an interest in land either equitable or executory, they do create rights which are capable of being enforced with regard to the land in certain circumstances against third parties and to that extent they are not ordinary personal contracts and stand in a category by themselves. The question thus arises whether the principle which underlies the rule of perpetuities, made applicable to this country by section 14 of the Transfer of Property Act, should be applied to this class of contracts.

That this question would have to be decided was foreshadowed in the judgment of Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Ramasami Pattur v. Chinnan Asari (3). In that case a deed of usufructuary mortgage executed in 1892 contained the following covenant:—

"If we assign our right over these properties to any one, the land delivered possession of to you for appropriating the interest shall be assigned to you alone and it shall not be assigned to anybody else. When we assign the land, we shall receive fifty Panams more from you, and then we shall assign the land for these two amounts together."

The mortgagor sold his equity of redemption in 1873 and the purchaser's interest was bought at a Court sale before 1893 by the plaintiff who in 1897 sought to redeem. The mortgagee claimed the right of pre-emption. It was held that the defendant under the covenant and by reason of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act had no interest in the property. His only right was a right to enforce specific performance of the contract against a transferee who had taken with notice of the covenant. Plaintiff was not a transferee with notice of the contract, the time for the performance of which had long since passed without anything being done, and the inference was that the right arising under it had been waived or otherwise discharged. Bhashyam Ayyangar, J. at page 487 said —

"Another question which arises in the case but which has not been argued is one of considerable difficulty and importance. That question is whether the covenant for pre-emption in the present case transgresses the rule against perpetuities and is, therefore, void. Of course if the covenant were construed as one enforceable only during the mortgagor's lifetime, though the mortgage may continue beyond his lifetime, it will not be obnoxious, at any rate to the law of perpetuities as based upon English doctrine. But if its right construction be, as I think it is, that the parties intended that the right of pre-emption is to last until the redemption of the mortgage, the covenant will according to English Law as settled by the decision of the Court of Appeal in London and South Western Railway Co. v. Gomm (1), be void."

Then at page 468 —

"That decision proceeds on the principle that a covenant to convey, though it does not run with the land, binds it and creates an equitable interest in the land in favour of the person entitled to call for a conveyance and that, therefore, the rule against perpetuity is applicable as much to executory equitable estates in land as to legal estates. In the same case as well as in the case of Borland's Trustee v. Steel Brothers & Co., Ltd. (4) it is recognised that the rule against perpetuity has no application whatever to personal contracts and that position is incontrovertible."

DINKARAO GANPATRAO V. NARAYAN VISHWANATH.

Then after comparing the English rule of perpetuity with the restriction under Hindu Law on transfer of property the learned Judge proceeds—

"The question as to the application of this principle of Hindu Law, or of the general doctrine of perpetuities, to transactions other than gifts by Hindus has not yet been judicially considered in any case except possibly in the Privy Council case [Chandi Churn Barua v. Sidheswari Debi (5)]... But it must be admitted that there is really no substantial difference between English and Indian Law in respect of contracts of sale of immovable property, and it does seem reasonable and in accordance with principles of general jurisprudence that there should be some limit of time beyond which the performance of contracts for the transfer of property by way of sale, pre-emption or otherwise must not be allowed to be held in suspense or postponed. Although section 14 deals only with transfers, the provisions of that section could in some cases be practically defeated if covenants are not held to be void for remoteness on the ground that by themselves they create no interest in property. I am glad to be able to refrain from expressing any opinion on this difficult and important question of the application and the limits of the application of the doctrine of perpetuities to covenants, as it has not been really argued in this case and as in fact it is unnecessary to consider and decide it in this case."

In Kolathu Aiyar v. Rangavadhyar (6) there was an agreement that the covenantor Ammaippan Ammal in the event of selling the property in question should sell it to Appa Vethiar on receiving the value stated, and if any building should be erected thereon the cost thereof, but in case they did not desire it she could sell it away to others according to her pleasure. The suit for the enforcement of the covenant was instituted against the heirs of the covenantor. The first question was whether the agreement was enforceable against the heirs of the covenantor. Their Lordships said (page 115*)—

"We are of opinion that if no time is fixed within which the agreement to convey is to be performed the contract must be held to be invalid as infringing the rule against perpetuities. This is undoubtedly the rule in England. A mere personal contract cannot be questioned on the ground that it is obnoxious to the rule. But a contract which gives the promisee an executory interest in land is as much liable to the objection as a grant of the land itself, because the promisee obtains by virtue of the contract an equitable right in the land."

Dealing with the objection that in India there were not two classes of estates equitable and legal their Lordships thought that there was no substantial difference in the law to be applied to the case as the benefit of an equitable estate was in substance given to a person in whose favour a promise to convey lands had been made. Referring to South-Eastern Railway v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers (7) and Kalimuddin Bhuya v. Reaz-ud-Din Ahmed (8) their Lordships thought that if a man promises that he and his heirs will convey, the promise may be enforced according to those cases against himself, i.e., the promise might be treated as divisible so as to make it enforceable against him though it may not be enforceable against the heirs. That question, however, does not arise in this appeal.

In Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Balchand Chowdhury (9) the proprietor of a hill agreed with a Society of Jains that if the Society should require a site thereon for the erection of a temple, he and his heirs would grant a site free of cost. The proprietor thereafter alienated the whole hill. The Society sued the alienees for possession of a site defined by boundaries, alleging notice to the proprietor requiring that site and that they had taken possession but had been dispossessed. The High Court at Patna held that the plaintiff had failed to prove any title to the land in suit. On appeal to the Privy Council their Lordships said (page 380*) :—

"For the appellants to succeed it is essential to show that this agreement created in them some present estate or interest which would prevent the Raja from having made the grant. That could only be effected by reading the compromise as creating in the Jains Society a grant in perpetuity of the Parasnath hill. This cannot, however, be supported. Such a covenant as this does not, and cannot, run with the land, and could not be so enforced. Further, if the case be regarded in another light—namely, an agreement to grant in the future whatever land might be selected as a site for a temple—as the only interest created would be one to take effect by entry at a later date, and as this date is uncertain, the provision is obviously bad as offending the rule against perpetuities, for the interest would not then vest in presenti, but would vest at the expiration of an indefinite time which might extend beyond the expiration of the proper period."

The case is peculiar because the plaintiff did not sue for specific performance but on title, alleging apparently that the agreement amounted to a grant. But the judgment indicates that in spite of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act the agreement could be read as creating an interest of such a nature as to bring the agreement itself within the rule against perpetuities.

It is regrettable that so much confusion should still exist owing to the fact that the law in India on the one hand does not recognize equitable interest in land, while, on the other hand, it recognises that contracts with regard to land can be specifically enforced against third parties in certain cases

The result is that the law in England and India is substantially the same with regard to the enforcement of the contract. The only difference is that in England the owner of the equitable interest is considered as the owner of the property contracted to be conveyed. But no such result can follow from a contract creating an executory interest. If such a contract purports to do by indirect means what the law forbids to be done directly it is void and the principle is the same in India as in England.

By the covenant in suit the vendor purports to give his heirs a right to buy the land at the price he got for it, and the buildings at a price to be agreed upon. In my opinion it is void and the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration to that effect.

The appellants will get their costs of the appeal.

Kanga, J.—I agree in the judgment just delivered by my Lord the Chief Justice.

* * * *

A preliminary objection to the Originating Summons was taken by the Advocate-General, who appeared for the first defendant, to the effect that the plaintiffs and the second defendant could not in law ask for a declaration that the first defendant was not entitled to a right of pre-emption. He argued that the plaintiffs and the second defendant were by this summons praying for a declaration that the first defendant was not entitled to a right of pre-emption and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to do so by a suit, much less by an Originating Summons. He relied upon section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and on the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Charan Das v. Amir Khan (10). By section 42 of the Specific Relief Act it is provided—

"Any person entitled to any legal character, or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled..."

In this case the plaintiffs say that they and the second defendant are entitled to the property free of any claim of the first defendant to the same, and that the first defendant is asserting a right of pre-emption and denying the plaintiffs and the second defendant's right to sell the property to any person they like and ask for a declaration that the title of the plaintiffs is not affected by the covenant contained in the aforesaid clauses of the sale-deed. It cannot be said that the plaintiffs are able at present to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title. The plaintiffs, therefore, in my opinion, are, under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, entitled to sue for a declaration that the title of the plaintiffs to the land is not affected by the covenant contained in the aforesaid clauses of the sale-deed and that the first defendant is not entitled to a right of pre-emption and there is nothing in the Privy Council decision above cited disentitling the plaintiffs from suing for such a declaration.

If, then, the plaintiffs are entitled to ask for such a declaration by a suit, under rule 214 of the High Court Rules, they are entitled to ask for the same by an Originating Summons.

In Evans v. Levy (11) a declaration was made under O. LIVA, r 1, of the Rules of the Supreme Court on an Originating Summons that a condition which a lessor had imposed with regard to a license to assign was unreasonable and that the lessee was entitled to assign without any further consent of the lessor. O. LIVA, r 1, is exactly in the same terms as rule 214 of the High Court Rules.

Now it is clear that the covenant of pre-emption in this case is not a covenant which runs with the land at law, see Spencer's case and Smith's Leading Cases, Volume I, page 55.

The covenant in this case is a contract to convey the land and the building to the covenantee or his heirs, vahivat-dars or donees in future upon the happening of an event, viz., an intended sale by the covenantor or his heirs. In other words a right of pre-emption or first refusal to arise on an intended sale is given to the covenantee or his heirs.

It was contended by Mr. Inverarity that such a covenant created an interest in the land and was subject to the rule against perpetuities and was void and that even if it did not create an interest in the land it was void under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act as being opposed to the policy of the law prohibiting all devices which tended to create a perpetuity.

Counsel for the first defendant contended that it was merely a personal covenant and was not within the rule against perpetuities and that under section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act and according to the law in force prior to the Transfer of Property Act a contract for the sale of immoveable property did not of itself create any interest or charge on the property contracted to be sold.

At the date of the sale-deed the Transfer of Property Act was not in force but the Specific Relief Act I of 1877 and the Indian Registration Act III of 1877 were in force. According to the Specific Relief Act "obligation" includes every duty enforceable by law, and "trust" includes every species of constructive fiduciary ownership, and "trustee" includes every person holding constructively a fiduciary character (section 3). Illustration (g) to that section runs as follows:—

"A buys certain land with notice that B has already contracted to buy it. A is a trustee, within the meaning of this Act, for B, of the land so bought."

Section 27 (b) of the Specific Relief Act provides that specific performance may be enforced against either party to a contract or any other person claiming under him by a title arising subsequently to the contract except a transferee for value who has paid his money in good faith and without notice of the original contract. By section 13 of the same Act it is laid down that "notwithstanding anything contained in section 56 of the Indian Contract Act, a contract is not wholly impossible of performance because a portion of its subject-matter, existing at its date, has ceased to exist at the time of the performance." Illustration (a) to that section runs as follows:—

"A contracts to sell a house to B for a lakh of rupees. The day after the contract is made the house is destroyed by a cyclone. B may be compelled to perform his part of the contract by paying the purchase money."

This illustration assumes that the contract for the sale of a house transfers the beneficial interest in the house to the buyer and makes him in equity the owner of the house. According to section 55 (5) of the Transfer of Property Act the risk of destruction is borne by the buyer only from the date the ownership passes to him and the ownership according to section 55 (1) (d) of the Transfer of Property Act passes on execution of a conveyance by the seller. The illustration cannot be applied in cases where the Transfer of Property Act is applicable.

Under the Indian Registration Act XX of 1866 an agreement of sale of immovable property between Hindus was held to be an agreement creating an equitable interest in land and requiring registration under section 17, clause (2), of that Act; see Futteh Chand Sahoo v. Leelumber Singh Doss (2). By clause (b), section 17, of the Indian Registration Act III of 1877, documents containing an agreement of sale of immovable property were expressly exempted from compulsory registration. It seems the intention of the Legislature was to exempt from registration agreements which created executory interests in the land and which could not displace a conveyance of the same land obtained in good faith by a transferee without notice and duly registered.

It seems to me that prior to the Transfer of Property Act the law assumed in illustration (a) to section 13 of the Specific Relief Act, that a contract for the sale of immovable property created an equitable interest in the property, and made the purchaser the owner in equity, was the law in India.

The same opinion is expressed in the note to section 13 in Pollock and Mulla's Edition of the Specific Relief Act.

Now we have before us an agreement made in 1878 to convey an immovable property upon the happening of an event which might occur at a more remote period than the lives in being and eighteen years afterwards. It is an agreement creating under the law prior to the Transfer of Property Act an equitable interest in immovable property which would be void as infringing the rule against perpetuities London and South Western Railway Co v Gomm (1) and Woodall v. Clifton (12). But even if the law prior to the Transfer of Property Act on this point was the same as that contained in the Transfer of Property Act the result, in my opinion, would be the same.

No doubt the rule of English Law that a contract for sale of real property makes the purchaser the owner in equity of the estate has no application to those parts of India where the Transfer of Property Act is in force see Maung Shwe Goh v Maung Inn (13). But under section 40 of the Transfer of Property Act an obligation arising out of a contract and annexed to the ownership of immovable property but not amounting to an interest therein to the benefit of which a third person is entitled could be enforced against a transferee with notice thereof.

The illustration to section 40 is substantially the same as illustration (g) to section 3 of the Specific Relief Act. It is provided by section 91 of the Indian Trusts Act that a transferee taking with notice of a prior contract in favour of another must hold the right claimed under his transfer as a trustee for the previous promisee. Section 95 of the Indian Trusts Act provides that a person holding property in accordance with that section must, so far as may be, perform the same duties and is subject to the same liabilities and disabilities as if he were a trustee of the property for the person for whose benefit he holds it. As pointed out by Scott, C. J., in Babu Apaji Potdar v. Kashinath Sadoba Gulmire (14) section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act does not exhaust the relations which flow from a contract for the sale of immoveable property according to Indian Statute Law and the obligation of which a person who has contracted to buy immoveable property has the benefit and which he may enforce against his vendor or transferee with notice is fiduciary and can be enforced as though the person bound was a trustee. The benefit of an equitable interest is in substance given to a person who has contracted to buy immoveable property: see Kolathu Aiyar v. Rangavadhya (6). In my opinion the law laid down in London and South Western Railway Co. v. Gomm (1) applies to a contract for sale of immoveable property in India even where the Transfer of Property Act is in force. As pointed out by Sir Bhashyam Ayyangar, J., in Ramasami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari (3) the power of a Hindu under the Hindu Law is more restricted as regards the perpetual tying up of land or property than under the English doctrine of perpetuities.

It was held in Nabin Chandra Sarma v. Rajani Chandra Chakravarti (15) following Nobin Chandra Soot v. Nabab Ali Sarkar (16) and Sreenutty Tripoora Soonduree v. Juggur Nath Dutt (17) that a covenant for pre-emption unlimited in point of time is void on the ground that it is obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities. In Kolathu Aiyar v. Rangavadhya (6) it was held that a contract of pre-emption (with reference to lands) which fixes no time within which the agreement to convey is to be performed cannot be enforced against the heirs of the person who entered into the contract as it infringes the rule against perpetuities. In a recent Privy Council case [Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Balchand Chowdhury (9)] in compromise of litigation the proprietor of a hilly area agreed with a Society of Jains that if the Society should require a site thereon for the erection of a temple and dharmashala he and his heirs would grant a site free of cost. The proprietor alienated the whole hill and the Society by their representative sued the alienees for possession of a site defined by boundaries. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the covenant did not run with the land and could not be enforced and that, if the covenant was regarded as an agreement to grant in the future whatever land might be selected as a site for a temple, as the only interest created could be one to take effect by entry at a later date and as that date was uncertain, the provision was obviously bad as offending the rule against perpetuities, for the interest would not then vest in presenti but would vest at the expiration of an indefinite time which might extend beyond the expiration of the proper period.

In Worthing Corporation v. Heather (18) it was held by Warrington, J., that though an agreement giving an option to purchase land which is unlimited in point of time is not specifically enforceable, it is not invalid at law and damages may be recovered for a breach thereof. According to the Privy Council decision in Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Balchand Chowdhury (9) such a covenant is unenforceable as a covenant since it infringes the rule against perpetuities. Perhaps it might be argued that the case of Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Bal- chand Chowdhury (9) was for possession of land and not for damages and that the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council had no reference to a claim at law in damages. But even if that be so it seems to me that a contract with regard to land which is calculated to defeat the rule against perpetuities which is one of public policy is void under section 23 of the Indian Contract Act.

The covenant for pre-emption contained in the sale-deed, dated the 18th day of September 1878, is void and the question for the determination of which this Originating Summons has been taken out should be answered in the negative.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The only question involved in this appeal is whether the suit was maintainable in view of the fact that the plaintiff had not brought on the record the heir of one of the mortgagors.

The suit was for the enforcement of a mortgage-bond executed by defendant No 1 and one Moiboo Shah who died before the date of institution of the suit. The suit was brought against the defendant No. 1 and one Abirjan Bibi who was described as the widow and heir of the deceased mortgagor Moiboo Shah. It subsequently transpired that the name of the widow was not Abirjan Bibi but Asiran Bibi. The first Court held that there was a bona fide mistake on the part of the plaintiff in giving the name of the widow as Abirjan and decreed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that before instituting the suit the plaintiff was aware that the name of Moiboo's widow was Asiran and not Abirjan and that she had intentionally for some purpose known to her described her as Abirjan. He found that it was not a case of bona fide mistake and the estate of one of the mortgagors Moiboo Shah was not represented in the suit. He next proceeded to consider whether in the absence of one of the mortgagors the suit was maintainable or bad for defect of parties, and held that the entire suit failed since all the mortgagors or persons interested in the equity of redemption had not been made parties.

Against that decision the plaintiff has preferred this appeal, and it is urged on her behalf, first, that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the estate of Moiboo was not represented in the suit is erroneous and, secondly, that conceding the finding on the first point to be correct the Court below erred in law in holding that the entire suit failed for want of representation of Moiboo's estate.

With regard to the first point we are unable to accept the contention of the learned Vakil for the appellant. The question is purely one of fact and the learned Subordinate Judge has found on the evidence that the plaintiff was actuated by some motive in intentionally misnaming the widow and that when she applied for the substitution of the widow by her correct name the suit was barred as against her.

The second question that is raised is of some importance. O. XXXIV, r 1, Civil Procedure Code, lays down that "All persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption shall be joined as parties to any suit relating to the mortgage." The only exceptions to the rule are to be found in the explanation added thereto which relieves a puisne mortgagee from the necessity of making the prior mortgagee a party to the suit, and provides that a prior mortgagee need not be joined in a suit to redeem a subsequent mortgage. This explanation makes it clear that in all other cases save those excepted all the persons interested in the equity of redemption should be joined as parties. The Code does not say what would be the effect of not joining all the parties to the suit. On this point there has been considerable divergence of opinion. Under the old Code the view generally accepted was that in view of the wording of section 85 of the Transfer of Property Act which has now been replaced by r 1, O. XXXIV, Civil Procedure Code, the whole suit ought to fail if the plaintiff did not join as parties all the persons interested in the equity of redemption. The same view has also been adopted in some cases under the present Code.

Some change was, however, effected in the law relating to defect of parties by the enactment of O. I, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code, and it has been argued with some degree of force that O. I, r. 9 being of general application qualified the provisions of r 1, O. XXXIV, inasmuch as no provision is made in that Order regarding the effect of non-joinder in a mortgage suit. This view is strengthened by the wording of O. XXXIV, r. 1 which begins with the words "subject to the provisions of this Code." It may fairly be argued that O. I, r. 9 is one of the provisions to which O. XXXIV, r. 1, is subject. It cannot now be disputed, though there was formerly some difference of opinion on the point that the omission to make a puisne mortgagee or subsequent transferee of the mortgaged property party to a mortgage suit is not fatal to the suit. See the case of Basiruddin Biswas v. Debendra Nath Biswas (1) decided under the old law. The puisne mortgagee is as much a person interested in the right of redemption as a mortgagor or the heir of a mortgagor. We see no reason why a distinction should be drawn between the case of a puisne mortgagee and of an heir of a mortgagor. The view which we are disposed to take is that a mortgage suit in which all the persons interested in the equity of redemption have not been joined need not necessarily fail. The provisions of O. I, r. 9 appear to be just as applicable to a mortgage suit as to any other suit. We do not wish to lay down as a general rule that in all cases a suit need not fail by reason of non-joinder of necessary parties. In using the expression "necessary parties" we do not desire to make any distinction between necessary parties and proper parties as has been attempted in several cases. The view that finds favour with us was adopted in a very recent case of this Court, Har Chandra Roy v. Mohamed Hasim (2). In that case the suit was brought by the mortgagee against the representatives-in-interest of the original mortgagor. The defendants pleaded that all the heirs who were in the enjoyment of the property left by the mortgagor had not been made parties to the suit and that consequently the suit should be dismissed for non-joinder of parties. The issue framed on these pleadings was "Is the suit bad for defect of parties?" The first Court held on the evidence that a widow of the mortgagor named Alimannessa and a daughter had not been brought on the record and concluded that all the representatives of the mortgagor were not parties, the suit could not be maintained. On appeal the same view was held and the appeal dismissed, the learned Judges (Mookerjee and Fletcher, JJ.) holding that the plaintiffs were at least entitled to a decree for a proportionate share of the mortgage-money as against the defendants who were on the record. The same view was adopted in the case of Subduralli v. Sadashiv Supde (3). There the mortgagor who was a Muhammadan died leaving as his heirs a widow, two daughters and a brother. After his death the mortgagee sued the widow and the daughters for the sale of the mortgaged property but did not join the brother as a party to the suit. It was held that the entire suit ought not to fail, because of the defect of non-joinder and that a decree could be made for the sale of the right, title and interest of the widow, and daughters only. The facts of the present case are indistinguishable from those of the above two cases. The Allahabad High Court at one time consistently held that the omission of an heir of a deceased mortgagor would invalidate the whole suit. But the recent decisions of that Court seem to be in agreement with the view which has been adopted by this Court: Sheo Tahal Ojha v. Sheodan Rai (4) and Sanwale Singh v. Ganesh Lal (5). The only objection which can be urged against this view is that it violates the principle that a mortgage-debt is indivisible. It has been held, however, that in special circumstances a mortgage-debt can be split up: see the case of Hari Kissen Bhagat v. Velait Hossain (6).

(1) 12 C. W. N. 211.

In the view of the law which we have taken we think that this appeal ought to succeed partially.

In some cases it has been held that every part or item of the property mortgaged is liable for the whole mortgage-debt, and on the strength of the case of Sanwale Singh v. Ganesh Lal (5) it is argued that whatever money may be found due to the plaintiff from the first defendant ought to be declared as a charge on the entire property mortgaged. We are not prepared to accept the view that has been expressed in the Allahabad case and we think that we should adopt the course taken in the case of Har Chandra Roy v. Mohamed Hasim (2).

The result, therefore, is that the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the case remanded to the Trial Court in order that that Court may make a mortgage decree in favour of the plaintiff against defendant No. 1 proportionate to the share of that defendant in the mortgaged properties at the date of the suit.

The plaintiff is entitled to her costs of this appeal. The costs in the lower N. H. MOOS—RESPONDENT.

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 23—Land containing stone and moorum, valuation of—Basis of calculation—Toka lands—Government interest, valuation of

Where there is moorum and stone underneath a plot of land which is being compulsorily acquired, but the evidence shows that its value as a quarry is purely problematical and that a purchaser would not give more than a certain amount for it, taking all its potentialities into consideration, the land should not be valued on a quarrying basis but should be valued on the basis of what a purchaser would be willing to offer for it. [p 641, col 2.]

In the case of compulsory acquisition of toka land, the difference between the market value of toka land as compared with free-hold, represents the then value of the Government interest in the land. When, however, no evidence is available to determine the value of the Government interest in this manner, the Court must arrive at the value as best as it can. No universal rule can be laid down applicable to all cases [p 642, col 2; p 643, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decision of Mr Justice Kajiji in Land Acquisition Reference No. 8 of 1920.

Sir Thomas Strangman, Advocate-General, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. J. Desai and Mulla, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This is an appeal from the decision of Mr. Justice Kajiji in Land Acquisition Reference No 8 of 1920. The land in reference was notified for acquisition on the 16th May 1916, it admeasured 3,521-4/9 square yards, and was situated on the Golangi Hill. The Photograph of the model at page 11, Part III, gives us the best idea of the land and its surroundings. Before the Collector it was valued on what I may call a quarrying basis, that is to say, the total cubic contents of stone and moorum were calculated and a particular value was given to them, written back according to the period estimated to be taken up for quarrying. Nothing was allowed for the land after the quarrying was finished. The total value arrived at by this method was for all interests Rs. 26,454-88. As the land is toka the amount of the Government interest was deducted. Then to what was left was added fifteen per cent. for compulsory acquisition, plus Rs. 500 for compensation for severance awarded to the appellant. The total for all the claim was Rs. 21,744.

The learned Judge, after considering all the evidence before him with regard to the basis of valuation, came to the conclusion that if all the materials that were placed before him had been placed before the Land Acquisition Officer, the Land Acquisition Officer would not have valued the land on the quarrying basis. But the learned Judge thought himself bound to hold that the land should be valued on the quarrying basis because that was the basis which was followed according to the evidence on both sides before the Land Acquisition Officer. We think the learned Judge was wrong in valuing the land on the quarrying basis when on the evidence before him he was of opinion that the land could not be used as a quarry. Even then on the evidence the learned Judge valuing the land on the basis that it would be used as a quarry valued all interests at Rs. 41,611, but valued the Government interest on a different basis to that on which it had been valued by the Collector, with the result that the amount awarded to the claimant was Rs. 37,385 plus Rs. 5,604-12-0, fifteen per cent. for compulsory acquisition.

Two questions arise: (1) what was the proper market value of all interests in the land to be acquired? and (2) what should be deducted for the value of the Government interest as the land was held on toka tenure? It seems to have been admitted, at any rate for the purposes of argument before us, that the land would be worth in the market Rs 7-8-0 a square yard if it was used for building purposes. There is no evidence whatever that a purchaser would have offered more than Rs. 7-8-0 a square yard for this land. No evidence was called on either side of any purchases of the land in the neighbourhood, and we have to rely mainly on expert evidence as to what a purchaser would be likely to give for this land. No doubt one is entitled to consider that a purchaser looking at the land, and wanting to buy it, would take into consideration the fact that it rises in places to a height of about eighty feet above the ordinary level, and that if he did not wish to build on the surface, he could get some value out of the moorum and stone beneath the surface. But all those calculations of the value of the cubic contents of the land above the ordinary level plus the deferred value of the land on the level when the material above it has been removed, appear to me to afford very little assistance to a Court which has to decide what should be the market value of the land at the date of the notification, because no evidence has been adduced from which the Court could hold that a purchaser would enter into all those elaborate calculations and base his offer for the land on the certainty that they would be realised. In all my experience I have never come across a purchaser who said he made hypothetical calculations of this character before he purchased; they are used by experts to justify an opinion which is as a rule equally valuable and less assailable without them; and the general fallacy underlying all these hypothetical calculations is this, that they result in the total profit a purchaser may expect on the most favourable estimates, which is a different thing from what a purchaser would give on an estimation of the profit which he would be likely to make, taking all risks into consideration.

I think that Kajiji, J., was quite right in thinking the evidence showed that the land should not be valued on a quarrying basis. It all amounts to this. There is moorum and stone underneath the land. Whether it would pay a purchaser to extract it, would be purely problematical, and it has not been shown that a purchaser would be prepared to pay anything more than Rs. 7-8-0 for the land taking all its potentialities, whether for building or for quarrying purposes, into consideration. We think, therefore, that the Collector's estimate of the value of the land was correct, and that the value of all interests taken on the basis of his award should be Rs. 26,454-88 plus Rs. 500 compensation for severance.

Then the next question is as to the valuation of the Government interest, and that is a question of considerable difficulty. There always must be a difficulty in apportioning the total value, arrived at after valuing the land as free-hold, between the various parties who have interests in the land, because if an attempt is made to value each of those interests according to its market value, the total value of those interests valued in that way would be most unlikely to correspond with the market value of the land as a free-hold. Now this land is toka land, the occupant of which has to pay at present an annual rent of Rs. 18-5-5. In 1929-30 Government have a right to increase the assessment, and they could levy a rate of four per cent. on the value of the land. It has in such cases generally been taken as the basis for the prospective assessment that the land will be of the same value in 1929 as at the date of acquisition. The rent, therefore, the Government could charge in 1929-30 might amount to Rs. 1,056. A method which has been generally used to arrive at the present value of that rent is to capitalize at a certain rate and then write it back to the date of acquisition, the rate of capitalisation and the rate of writing back being the same. This is purely an artificial method of arriving at the value of the Government interest, and if it were possible to get evidence of what is paid in the market for toka land as compared with free-hold, the Court would be in a much better position to arrive at the difference which represents the present value of the Government interest. However we have not got that evidence. We, therefore, have to arrive at the value of the Government interest as best as we can. I do not think that a universal rule can be laid down applicable to all cases. If the land is valued at the present time at a very low rate and owing to its situation it can be estimated that in 1929 it will be much more valuable so as to be able to bear an assessment of four per cent. on the present value, no doubt that could be taken as a basis for valuing the Government interest. But in this particular case we have to consider whether in 1929 this land could possibly bear a rent of Rs. 1,056 a year. It seems to me the claimant's argument that we cannot calculate that the assessment would be raised higher than two per cent. in 1929 requires to be considered. Looking at the situation of the land, whether we consider that in 1929 all the land would be reduced to the ordinary level by quarrying, or whether we consider the land will remain as it is, if the Government rent is to be taken at Rs. 1,056, there would be practically nothing left for the occupant, as he could hardly expect to get a higher rent from a tenant if he let it out either on a building lease or for any other purpose. I quite admit we are in a region of pure speculation; but I think we ought to do that which is most fair to the claimant. We should not expect that the assessment would be increased to a higher rate than two per cent. in 1929, but at the same time we think that the rate on which it was capitalized, namely, eight per cent., was wrong and that it should be capitalized at six per cent. and written back at the same rate. The result is that the value of the Government interest is reduced by one-half on the amount of the award of the Collector.

The award of Mr. Justice Kajiji is set aside and the Collector's award is varied by apportioning to Government Rs. 3,991 instead of Rs. 7,982. The claimant will get Rs. 3,991 more, plus fifteen per cent., and interest at six per cent. on the whole from the date of Collector's taking possession up to this day. The Government is entitled to withdraw such amount as has been paid into Court in excess as a result of Mr. Justice Kajiji's award. Government to get seven-eighths of their costs, throughout.

Pre-emption—Permanently settled area—Revision of records—Entry of contract for pre-emption—Parties, heirs of, whether bound

In a permanently settled area, where there is no settlement but only a revision of records for which no time is fixed, if there is an entry of a contract for pre-emption in the record of revision, the contract will not bind the heirs of the original parties to the contract, an agreement of this nature being against the rule against perpetuities.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge at Allahabad, dated the 30th of March 1921.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. Badri Narain, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The two appeals Nos. 936 and 937 of 1921 arise out of two suits in which the pre-emptor is one and the same person. Both of them raise the same points and were disposed of by one judgment by the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court. We propose to dispose of both the appeals by this judgment. It appears that Sheonath Rai, Ram Shankar Lal and Dharam Govind were co-sharers in the village of Dilwanspur in the District of Mirzapur and they executed two sale-deeds on the 31st October 1919 in favour of three persons. One sale-deed was executed in favour of Ohhedi and Gursaran in lieu of Rs. 2,780 in respect of a portion of the property owned by the vendors and the other deed of sale was executed in favour of Balli Singh by the same vendors in respect of another item of property in lieu of Rs. 1,853. Raghubi Singh who is a co-sharer in the village instituted two suits out of which these two appeals have arisen for the recovery of two items of property conveyed by the deeds of the 31st October 1919 by right of pre-emption. It was stated in the plaint that the custom of pre-emption prevailed in the village under which a co-sharer was bound to give preference to his co-sharers over a stranger and that the vendees were strangers to the village. During the pendency of the two suits in the Court of first instance the status of two persons at least was changed, Balli Singh succeeded in getting a deed of gift in his favour in respect of a certain item of property in the same village, and Raghubar Singh, the pre-emptor, was appointed lambardar of the village prior to the decrees of the First Court. Both parties gave evidence in support of their respective allegations. The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the two suits came to the conclusion that the plaintiff pre-emptor had failed to prove his allegation of custom. The learned Judge, however, found that the revenue paper which he describes as Wajib-ul-arz of 1290 Fash, i. e., 1883 and which was signed by all the co-sharers contained a covenant with regard to pre-emption. He, therefore, enforced the terms of the wajib-ul-arz as a contract binding not only upon the signatories to the contract but upon their heirs and representatives also. The claim of Raghubar Singh was decreed in both the suits. On appeal the learned District Judge affirmed the decrees of the First Court.

In second appeal before us it is contended by the vendees that the Wajib-ul-arz of 1290 Fash, i. e., 1883 if a record of contract would not bind the heirs and the legal representatives of the signatories of that document. It appears that the village of Dilwanspur is permanently settled. There was no settlement in 1883 but there was a revision of records. At the time of the revision of records a statement was made by the co-sharers at that time that they would give each other preference in case of transfer over a stranger. The village being permanently settled, no time is fixed for the revision of records. No revision has taken place up to this time since 1883. The contention for the vendees appellants is that if the document of 1883 was a contract between the signatories to that document, the contract expired with their deaths. On the other hand if it be said that the signatories to that document entered into a covenant which would bind them and their heirs and legal representatives for an indefinite period such a covenant is bad in law as it contravenes the rule of perpetuities. Various authorities have been cited in support of this contention, namely, Sreemuthy Tripoora Soonduree v. Juggur Nath Dutt (1), Nobin Chandra Soot v. Nabab Ali Sarkar (2), Nabin Chandra Sorma v. Rajani Chandra Chakravarti (3), Gurunath Balaji Matalek Deshpande v. Yamanara Kom Nalarav Diwan (4) and Kolathu Aiyar v. Rangavadhya (5). On behalf of the respondent pre-emptor reliance is placed on the case of Avula Charamudi v. Marriboyina Raghavula (6). The observations of the learned Judges in the latter case are relied upon by the learned Counsel for the pre-emptor in support of his contention that the contract embodied in the document of 1883 is binding upon the present co-sharers of the village. The balance of authority appears to us to be on the side of the vendees, i. e., the appellants before us. We cannot do better than to re-produce here the observations of the learned Chief Justice of Bombay made in the case of Dinkarrao v. Narayan (7) which were as follows—

"Although contracts for the sale of land which can be specifically enforced immediately, or contracts creating a right of pre-emption which cannot be specifically enforced until the proper occasion arises in the future, do not, according to the law in India, create an interest in land either equitable or executory, they do create rights which are capable of being enforced with regard to the land in certain circumstances against third parties and to that extent they are not ordinary personal contracts and stand in a category by themselves. The principle which underlies the rule of perpetuities, applies to this class of contracts. The law in England and India is substantially the same with regard to the enforcement of contracts in respect of lands. The only difference is that in England the owner of the equitable interest is considered as the owner of the property contracted to be conveyed. But no such result can follow from a contract creating an executory interest. If such a contract purports to do by indirect means what the law forbids to be done directly it is void and the principle is the same in India as in England."

We accept these observations as correctly describing the nature of the contract which is the subject-matter of discussion in the present appeals. We are, therefore, of opinion that the contract mentioned in the Wajib-ul-arz of 1883 upon which reliance is placed by the Courts below in discussing the claim of the plaintiff-pre-emptor is not one which can be enforced now. We, therefore, allow the two appeals, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the claim of the plaintiff-pre-emptor with costs throughout including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

on their shoulders. I am inclined to think that this contention is sound. The plaintiff, who is malguzar of the village in which they live, alleges that they were rightly in possession of a plot of land in the abadi which they had held for many years but had lately extended their boundaries and encroached upon a comparatively small area of the abadi. In view of sections 101 and 102 of the Evidence Act I think it was for the plaintiff to prove that the area which he claimed was not a part of the plot that the defendants have been holding all along. The case was originally decided on these lines and on appeal by the plaintiff it was remanded as long ago as 12th May 1920, on the ground that the burden of proof was on the defendants and not on the plaintiff. Section 105 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code precludes the defendants from questioning the correctness of that decision now. This appeal must, therefore, be dismissed and they must pay all the costs of the respondent.

—Rule against perpetuities, applicability of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 37, scope of.

The law in England and in India is substantially the same with regard to the enforcement of contracts in respect of lands; the only difference is that in England the owner of the equitable interest is considered as the owner of the property contracted to be conveyed. But no such result can follow from a contract creating an executory interest. If such a contract purports to do by indirect means what the law forbids to be done directly, it is void, and the principle is the same in India as in England. [p. 649, col. 1.]

Although contracts for the sale of land which can be specifically enforced immediately, or contracts creating a right of pre-emption which cannot be specifically enforced until the proper occasion arises in the future, do not, according to the law in India, create an interest in land either equitable or executory, they do create rights which are capable of being enforced with regard to the land in certain circumstances against third parties, and to that extent they are not ordinary personal contracts and stand in a category by themselves. Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 25th of May 1921.

GOPI RAM v. JEOT RAM.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala and Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellants.

Munshi Surendra Nath Sarma (with him Dr. S. M. Sulaiman), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that one Narain Ram was the owner of a house in the town of Ghazipur which is the subject-matter of dispute in this appeal. He sold it to one Madhuri Das under a registered deed of sale on the 7th of March 1894 in lieu of Rs. 275. One of the covenants of the sale was as follows:—

"If the vendee, his heirs or representatives, desired to sell the house purchased, they should in such a case first ask the executant, his heirs or representatives for the time being to purchase it. But if the executant or his heirs or representatives refuse to purchase, the vendee, his heirs or representatives had a right to transfer it to some one else. That, in case they make breach of this covenant, the executant, his heirs and representatives will be entitled to the specific performance of the contract".

Both the vendor and the vendee are dead. On the 31st of July 1919 the heirs of Madhuri Das, the vendee, who are represented by the defendants second party, sold the house in question to the defendants first party in lieu of Rs. 700.

On the 28th June 1920 the suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by Jeot Ram, the son of Narain Ram, for the possession of the house on the payment of Rs. 700. He based his claim on the covenant in the sale-deed of the 7th March 1894, recited above, and described his suit as one for specific performance. The claim was resisted on the ground, among others, that the covenant on which the plaintiff relied was bad for remoteness and was not enforceable. The Court of first instance dismissed the claim on the ground that the contract sought to be enforced was bad for remoteness and that the suit being one for specific performance and it being discretionary with the Court to grant or refuse specific performance of a contract, the present case was one in which discretion should not be exercised in favour of the plaintiff.

On appeal by the latter the learned Judge disagreed with the First Court and allowed the claim of the plaintiff.

The defendants first party, the vendees of the 31st of July 1919, have filed the present appeal before us and contend that the covenant giving an option of pre-emption without any limit of time to the vendor under the deed of the 7th of March 1894 is void at law and cannot be given effect to. They argue that, if the contract relied upon by the plaintiff was merely a personal contract, it could not be enforced against or bind the heirs and representatives of the parties to the original contract. On the other hand, if the said contract created a prepetual covenant as to the disposition of the house, such a covenant would be void as contravening the rule against perpetuities. In support of his contention the learned Counsel for the defendants has relied upon the following cases: Sreemutty Tripoora Sunduree v. Juggur Nath Dutt (1), Nobin Chandra Soot v. Nabab Ali Sarkar (2), Nobin Chandra Sarma v. Rajani Chandra Chakravarti (3), Gurunath Balaji Muralik v. Jamunava Nalarao Divan (4) and Kolathu Aiyar v. Rangaradhyaar (5).

For the plaintiff-respondent the argument is that under the sale-deed of 1894 the contract to re-sell the house to the vendor, his heirs and representatives, was made by the vendee on his behalf and on that of his heirs and representatives at any time whenever the latter wanted to part with the house. A contract of sale of immoveable property under the Indian Law creates no interest in the immoveable property as is clearly laid down under section 54, Act IV of 1882, and if no interest is created in an immoveable property under a contract of sale the latter cannot be vitiated by the rule against perpetuities. The cases cited for the appellants, it is argued, do not apply as they follow the English Law and proceed on the assumption that an option of re-purchase reserved to the vendor of an immoveable property under a sale made by him creates an interest in that property in his favour. There is nothing in the Indian Law to confine the enforcement of a contract of sale to the lifetime of a contracting party. On the contrary, section 37 of the Contract Act binds the representatives of the promisors also. In justification of his position the plaintiff-respondent relies upon the case of Avulu Charamudi v. Marriboyina Raghamulu (6).

After due consideration of the arguments for the parties and the cases cited by them, we think that the contention of the appellants should prevail. The balance of authority seems to be in favour of the case of the appellant. The solitary case against him is the Madras case just mentioned above. The facts of the case before us are distinguishable from those of the case of Charamudiful (6). In the latter case the plaintiff executed a deed of sale in respect of some land in favour of the managing member of a joint Hindu family. The manager gave a separate agreement on the same day agreeing to re-convey the land, whenever demanded to do so, on the payment of a certain sum. The plaintiff sued to enforce the agreement. He was met with the objection that as there was no limit of time in which there sale was to be made, the agreement for re-sale was void as contravening the rule against perpetuities. For the plaintiff the contention was that the agreement was a personal contract and created no interest in land and hence did not offend the rule against perpetuities. It is obvious that in the case of Avulu Charamudi v. Marriboyina Raghamulu (6) the dispute was between the contracting parties and not between their representatives. The question whether an agreement such as that entered into between the parties to the Madras litigation, could bind their heirs and representatives also, was not before the Court, nor was it raised at the Bar, according to the report of the arguments. The dictum that a contract under which an option of re-sale is given without any limit of time, can be enforced against the representatives of the contracting parties also, under section 37, Act IX of 1872, was not necessary for the decision of the case of Charamudiful (6). The plaintiff-respondent, however, adopts and presses upon us the observation made in the case of Charamudiful (6) in connection with section 54, Act IV of 1882 and section 37 of Act IX of 1872. As to the last mentioned section, i. e., section 37, Act IX of 1872, with due deference to the learned Judges who decided the case of Avulu Charamudi v. Marriboyina Raghamulu (6), we think it doubtful whether its provisions enable an owner of an immoveable property to enter into an agreement with another, imposing a restrictive covenant for an indefinite period on the disposition of the said property, so as to bind his heirs and representatives. The case law under that section would not bear such an interpretation. A somewhat similar case came before the Madras High Court, subsequent to the case of Avulu Charamudi v. Marriboyina Raghamulu (6). The latter case was mentioned and in a way explained. The case is reported as Egala Nagappa Naidu v. Muniswami Iyer (7). In discussing the case of Charamudiful (6) their Lordships said that the case arose between the parties and the offer was not revoked by the death of the promisor or otherwise.

It appears from this remark that the observations made in the former case in connection with section 37 of the Contract Act were neither urged for the appellant nor accepted by the Court. As regards section 54 of Act IV of 1882 we would refer to the case of Dinkarrao Ganpatrao v. Narayan Vishwanath (8). The true nature of contracts like the one of 1894, between Narain Ram and Madhuri Das is described by the learned Chief Justice in the Bombay case. The learned Chief Justice remarked—

"Although contracts for the sale of land which can be specifically enforced immediately, or contracts creating a right of pre-emption which cannot be specifically enforced until the proper occasion arises in the future, do not, according to the law in India, create an interest in land either equitable or executory, they do create rights which are capable of being enforced with regard to the land in certain circumstances against third parties and to that extent they are not ordinary personal contracts and stand in a category by themselves. The principle which underlies the rule of perpetuities applies to this class of contract. The law in England and India is substantially the same with regard to the enforcement of contracts in respect of lands. The only difference is that in England the owner of the equitable interest is considered as the owner of the property contracted to be conveyed. But no such result can follow from a contract creating an executory interest. If such a contract purports to do by indirect means what the law forbids to be done directly, it is void and the principle is the same in India as in England."

We are in accord with these observations of the learned Chief Justice and we think that the rule of perpetuities applies to the contract of 1894 also. We, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the First Court by dismissing the claim of the plaintiff-respondent. Costs are allowed to the defendants-appellants throughout including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I., r. 10.

Transfer of plaintiff to category of defendants—Court, power of.

Under O. I., r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, a Court has power to pass an order transferring a plaintiff from the category of plaintiffs to that of defendants.

Bhayaabendi a Narain Deb v. Uday Narain Deb, 79 Ind. Cas. 298, 50 O. 853, (1924) A. I. R. (O) 251, Brojendra Kumar Das v. Gobinda Mohan Das, 34 Ind. Cas. 188, 20 O. W. N. 752, relied on.

Rule against an order of the Sub-Judge, First Court, Tipperah, dated the 18th April and 1st September 1923.

Babus Ram Chandra Mazumdar and Nripendra Chandra Das, for the Petitioner.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babus Hemendra Kumar Das, Satyendra Kishore Ghose, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This Rule is directed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Tipperah transferring the plaintiff No. 2 from the category of plaintiffs to that of defendants. I have patiently heard the learned Vakal who appears for the petitioner and have gone through all the relevant documents in the case but I am not satisfied that the petitioner has been able to make out a case for our interference under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. It is argued that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to pass the order he passed under O. I., r. 10, Civil Procedure Code. There is no substance in this contention. As has been observed in the case of Bhayaabendi Narain Deb v. Uday Narain Deb (1), such an order is within the jurisdiction of the Court in the exercise of its inherent powers or as is remarked in the case of Brojendra Kumar Das v. Gobinda Mohan Das (2), the Court has jurisdiction to pass such an order under O. I, r. 10. In any event, it cannot be said that the order is without jurisdiction.

It is next contended that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in making this order under O. I, r. 10 as he should have proceeded under O. XXXII, r. 15 read with rule 9. I do not think that this contention ought to prevail. No doubt the language used by the Subordinate Judge is rather loose as has been pointed out by Mr. Garlick the District Judge but what he meant to say was that it would be to the interest of the second plaintiff to have been transferred to the list of defendants.

Again it is argued that the learned Subordinate Judge's order is without jurisdiction inasmuch as it overrides the order of the District Judge passed on the 17th August 1922 in the lunacy proceedings. The District Judge by that order directed the then manager of the estate of the lunatic to sign the present plaint. It is, therefore, maintained that the learned Subordinate Judge had no right to allow the application of the plaintiff No. 2 to be made a defendant in the suit. It is not necessary for me to consider whether the Subordinate Judge who had seisin of the suit had exceeded his jurisdiction in allowing the application of a party before him in the suit thus virtually modifying the order of the District Judge passed in his extraordinary jurisdiction. But whatever substance there might be in this contention has now been removed by the subsequent order of the District Judge on the application of the petitioner. It is alleged that the petitioner moved this Court sometime ago and he was asked to apply to the District Judge to direct the guardian representing the lunatic to continue to act as a plaintiff and in pursuance of that suggestion the petitioner moved the present District Judge who upheld the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. He has observed that it is clear that the interests of the first plaintiff are adverse to those of the lunatic in some respects and that there are considerable objections to the lunatics joining the suit as a co-plaintiff. This has set the matter right. The District Judge in his capacity as a District Court under the Lunacy Act is entitled to pass order for the management of the lunatics' estate and in course of management to revise his order. No doubt the officer who passed the second order is not the same officer who passed the first order, but that does not in any way curtail the power of the District Judge.

Lastly it is argued that the order that has been passed by the Subordinate Judge is calculated to cause injury to the petitioner. There is no question that there will be some change in the frame of the suit, but according to the lunatic's case it is unavoidable.

Apart from all the questions that have been raised I am not satisfied that the petitioner has been able to make out a case for our interference in the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction under section 115, Civil Procedure Code.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs to Opposite Party No. 10. The hearing-fee is assessed at three gold mohur.

Duval, J.—I agree with the order that my learned brother proposes to pass. I would only make one remark on one point in connection with this case and that is as to the way in which the guardian of the lunatic came into the case as a plaintiff and has been transferred to the position of a defendant. It appears that on the application of the plaintiff No. 1 Padmalochan Pal, the then guardian of the lunatic Gobindo, was ordered by the District Judge to become a plaintiff on certain allegations mainly made by Padma Lochan Pal. It also appears that the plaint itself was not before the District Judge when he passed that order and I doubt, when we consider the nature of the plaint and the pleadings of the parties, whether if he had considered them whether the District Judge would have passed any such order at all, as it appears to me to be very clear that the interests of the plaintiff No. 1 and plaintiff No. 2 are adverse to one another and that, to no inconsiderable extent, and though no doubt it was proposed in the suit to leave open the question of the exact share of these to brothers inter se in the partnership property, there was no reason why that matter should not be decided in this litigation. I feel, however, that when the Subordinate Judge found that the District Judge in his lunatic jurisdiction ordered the plaint to be signed, he had no power, on his own motion to permit one party or the representative of that party to withdraw from category of the plaintiff and I consider that technically he acted without jurisdiction. But the matter did at the instance of this Court go back to the Court below to be looked into the merits by the learned District Judge as to whether the lunatic ought to be yoked with Padma Lochan Pal as a co-plaintiff in a suit of this nature, and the present learned District Judge of Tipperah went fully into the question and decided that it was not desirable that the two should be co-plaintiffs, nor has anything in the argument of the learned Pleader for the petitioner before me convinced me that the order of the District Judge in this respect is wrong in this view, therefore, it is only just that the parties should not be yoked together as plaintiffs in this particular litigation. I, therefore, agree that the Rule should be discharged.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 34, 58, 199—

Landlord and squatter.—Suit for ejectment.—Omission to plead s. 34, effect of.—Question of proprietary right.—Reference to Civil Court.—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 145, proceedings under, whether bar suit.—"Eviction in due course of law," meaning of.

Under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act, a person who occupies land without the consent of the land-holder can be ejected as a non-occupancy tenant [p. 652, cols 1 & 2].

The fact that section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act has not been specifically pleaded in a suit for ejectment is not necessarily fatal to the suit [p. 652, col 2].

Bali v. Naubat Singh, 16 Ind. Cas. 120, 9 A. L. J. 711 and Jagdeo Singh v. Ali Hammad, 44 Ind. Cas. 919, 40 A. 300, 16 A. L. J. 249, doubted but followed.

In a suit for ejectment under section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act it is open to the defendant to ask to have the question of proprietary right referred to Civil Court under section 199 of the Act. [ibid].

An order passed under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code as no bar to a suit for ejectment of a tenant under the Agra Tenancy Act [p. 652, col 1].

The expression "eviction in due course of law" in section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is just as much applicable to ejectment in proceedings under Chapter V of the Agra Tenancy Act as it is to ejectment under the decree of a Civil Court. [ibid].

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated—the 6th of November 1922.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Harendra Krishna Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal in a suit for ejectment of a non-occupancy tenant under section 58 of the Agra Tenancy Act. The appeal has apparently been preferred to the Civil Court because a question of proprietary right is involved. The real question in dispute is whether the land in suit is situated in Dewara Jadid in the Azamgarh District of which the plaintiffs-appellants are zemindars or in the village of Dewara Sahitpur in the Fyzabad District of which the defendant Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh is in charge. The other defendants are the persons actually cultivating the land and claiming to cultivate under Babu Narendra Bahadur. The dispute between the principal parties the plaintiffs and Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh, was the subject of proceedings in the Criminal Court under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. In those proceedings Babu Narendra Bahadur Singh was found to be in possession and an order was passed in his favour under section 145 (6). The plaintiffs thereupon filed the present suit for his ejectment and that of the persons cultivating under him. No reference was made in the plaint to section 34 of the Tenancy Act, but there was also no reference to any agreement of tenancy between the parties and it was admitted that no rent had been fixed. Under the circumstances it must have been clear to all parties that the suit was filed with reference to section 34.

The Assistant Collector dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. The learned District Judge appears to agree with this conclusion and he also finds that there is nothing to show that the defendants are tenants of the appellants. On both these grounds he has dismissed the appeal.

It is clear at the outset that section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is no bar to the present suit and no attempt has been made to support the judgment of the Court below on this point. Section 145 (5) lays down that the party in whose favour an order is passed shall be entitled to possession of the land "until evicted therefrom in due course of law." The expression "eviction in due course of law" is just as much applicable to ejectment in proceedings under Chapter V of the Tenancy Act as it is to ejectment under the decree of a Civil Court.

The learned Pleader for the respondents supports the judgment of the Court below on the ground, first that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between parties, and secondly that section 34 of the Tenancy Act not having been pleaded in the plaint it is not open to the appellant to fall back on the provisions of that section. The two points are closely connected. If the plaintiffs-appellants are entitled to rely on section 34 it is not necessary for the success of their suit that any contract of tenancy should have been entered into between the parties. Section 34 applies wherever agricultural land is occupied by the defendant without the consent of the land-holder. If the plaintiffs' assertion that the land is within their zemindari is correct, a point which has not yet been determined, the case falls precisely within the terms of section 34. It is true that section 34 was not specifically pleaded, but I am not aware that it has ever been laid down that this omission is necessarily fatal and, as I have said above, in view of the pleadings and of the circumstances of the case it must have been perfectly clear to all the parties concerned that this was the provision on which the plaintiffs were relying for the success of the suit. If the matters were res integra there is, in my opinion, much to be said for the view that section 34 was not intended to be made use of for the purpose of ejectment. The land-holder has the option either of treating the squatter as a tenant and claiming rent from him under section 34, or of treating him as a trespasser and ejecting him through the Civil Court. The contrary view was, however, laid down by Sir George Knox in Bali v. Naubat Singh (1) as far back as the year 1912, and was re-affirmed by a Bench of this Court in Jagardoo Singh v. Ali Hammad (2) in 1918. It has also been adopted by the Board of Revenue in a large number of cases. The matter must, therefore, be regarded as settled and it is not open to me to dissent from these rulings. It is certainly an anomalous position that a dispute between two rival zemindars should be fought out by proceedings under the Tenancy Act, but this is what section 34, as interpreted by this Court, allows, and it is open to the defendant to ask to have the question of proprietary right referred to Civil Court under section 199 of the Act. The suit has been disposed of on a preliminary point and the real question at issue between the parties has not been determined by either of the Courts below. I, therefore, set aside the decrees of both the Courts below.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—These two cases were heard together as they involve to a large extent the determination of the same questions. In Case No. 66 of 1923 the petitioner is the Raja of Jharia. He was assessed to income-tax for the year 1922-23 upon a total income of Rs. 8,97,111. This included (1) a sum of Rs. 3,37,632 received by the assessee during the year by way of salami or premium for the grant of leases of the mineral rights on a portion of his estate, (2) Rs. 3,84,800 for royalties paid by the lessees of mining leases upon the coal raised, and, (3) a sum of Rs. 7,574 representing annuities paid to the widows of the late Raja under his Will and charged upon the estate.

The assessee objected that the amounts entered under the above three heads were not assessable to income-tax and applied to the Court on the 2nd August last to require the Commissioner to state a case and refer it to the High Court for decision under section 66 of the Income Tax Act, 1922. The Court granted the application and the matter has now come before us for decision upon a case stated by the Commissioner of Income-tax upon the 15th November last.

Some difficulty arises at the outset as the facts have not been very fully or clearly stated by the Commissioner. We are not told in the case stated anything about the nature of the leases under which the salami is payable except that they are leases of coal mining rights for a term of years. The number of the leases the amount of the salami in each case making up the total sum of Rs. 3,37,632 and the duration of the term are not stated nor are any other provisions of the leases referred to,

SHIVA PRASAD SINGH v. HMPHROB.

Again with regard to the annuities no very definite findings of fact are arrived at by the Commissioner. He refers to the Will of the late Raja but does not state the terms of the Will under which the annuities are granted. He assumes that the estate is impartible and passed by succession according to the law of primogeniture but in a later passage he treats the case as one in which the devolution is governed not by inheritance but by survivorship and he questions the right of the late Raja to dispose of the estate by Will in so far as it has granted annuities to his widows for their maintenance, if such grants should exceed that which they would otherwise be entitled to under Hindu Law. The case stated is in fact an argumentative expression of his opinion as to the law to be applied in the course of which certain facts incidentally appear. We desire to take this opportunity of stating for the guidance of the Income Tax Commissioner in future that whilst it is quite proper for him to state his opinion upon the questions involved, it is his first duty to state clearly and fully the material facts admitted or proved in evidence before him. To adopt any other course must, in most cases, result in embarrassment and uncertainty when the matter comes before the Court for its decision, the Court being bound by the findings of fact arrived at. The result in the present instance is that we have had to consider some of the documents and the verbal evidence for ourselves and with the help of admissions by Counsel for the parties arrive at certain conclusions of fact. Otherwise we should have felt bound to return the case for further findings.

It appears that the total salami amounting to Rs. 3,37,632 is made up of seven different sums payable to the proprietor by the lessees under seven instruments of lease. The leases which are for all material purposes in similar terms are for a period of 999 years. The salami is payable at the inception of the lease and is a non-recurring payment. An annual rent is reserved and royalty is also payable by the lessees on the quantity of coal extracted. It would seem that the salami in the present case is really in the nature of a premium paid for granting a lease. In other words it is the purchase price of a leasehold interest, and it is contended on behalf of the assessee that it represents not income but capital and that the transaction is merely the transference of the corpus from one form of security into another, from minerals or mineral rights into cash. Section 4, clause (3) of the Income Tax Act, 1922 provides that the Act shall not apply to certain classes of income including "any receipts, not being receipts, arising from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation, which are of a casual and non-recurring nature, or are not by way of addition to the remuneration of an employee." Now these salamis are in no sense receipts arising from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation but it is urged on behalf of the Crown that they may recur for the leases may fall in by forfeiture and in any event they are for a definite term. The case of Birendra Kishore Manikya v. Secretary of State for India (1) has been relied on. There the question was whether certain receipts including, inter alia, (a) salami paid by transferees of occupancy holdings for obtaining the landlord's consent to the transfer, and, (b) patta salami, a fee generally of one rupee, paid by the tenant on settlement of waste lands or abandoned holdings were assessable to income-tax. The real question for determination in that case was whether the sums so paid were agricultural income which is exempt from income-tax under the Act. It does not appear to have been argued that they were not income at all. The Court held that the first of the above classes of salami was not agricultural income within the meaning of sections 2 and 4 of the Income Tax Act, 1918 but that the second class was exempt from tax as it might reasonably be regarded as rent or revenue derived from land. It by no means follows, however, that because a particular class of payment included under the term salam is regarded as the income of the recipient, every payment which may be popularly described as salam must be income. Small payments recurring from time to time in connection with the same holding may perhaps be legitimately regarded as income in most cases, although I am not prepared to subscribe to the proposition which might be deduced from the case cited that the capitalised value of the rent paid in a lump sum is in all cases to be regarded as income. The fees payable on transfer of holdings may perhaps bear some analogy to certain classes of fines payable to the lord of the manor in England on the enfranchisement of copy holds (Earl Cowley v. Wellesley (2) or those paid to the landlord on the grant of a fresh lease under a covenant for perpetual renewal Brigstocke v. Brigstocke (3) or under the power to renew contained in the settlement: Simpson v. Bathurst (4). These are now regarded as casual profits to which under the Settled Land Acts the tenant for life is entitled. The distinction between capital and income is one of importance in the case of settled lands in England, and the principles there followed are of some assistance but not necessarily conclusive, and it may be mentioned that under these Acts a fine received on the grant of a new lease under statutory powers is treated as capital money arising under the Act and not as casual profits to which the tenant for life is entitled as in the case of renewals under a power conferred by the Settlement. Moreover in the case of mining leases a part of the rent must be set aside and applied as capital money unless a contrary intention is expressed in the settlement. It would appear that under the Settled Land Acts except in so far as they make such receipts income to which the tenant for life is entitled they are treated as capital.

Royalties paid to the lessor although they may be regarded in one sense as instalments of the purchase price of the minerals forming part of the land are treated in England as income and have been so treated in this Court. See In the matter of Raja Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo (5). They are nonetheless income merely because they are paid for rights the exercise of which involves a waste of the capital. As was pointed out by Lord Halsbury, L. C., in The Secretary of State for India v. Sir Andrew Scoble (6) "where you are dealing with income-tax upon a rent derived from coal (and the same would apply to royalties) you are in truth taxing that which is capital in this sense, that it is a purchase of the coal and not a mere rent," but he adds "The income-tax is not and cannot be, I suppose from the nature of things, cast upon absolutely logical lines." At the same time there is a vast difference between a sum paid once for all for the lease of mineral rights and a rent or royalty paid annually to the lessor. The lessor in this case who holds an unfettered right of disposal would appear, in granting these leases to have had two objects in view which are distinguishable. In so far as rent and royalty are reserved, he is founding an annual increment to the income of the Raj for himself and his successors but with regard to salam it is the price he demands for parting with his direct enjoyment of the property by himself and his successors for a period of 999 years. He is parting with the capital to persons who, whilst not purchasers of the fee simple, are undoubtedly purchasers of a large interest therein. The purchase price is presumably not based upon the estimated out-turn but is paid in exchange for the long term transferred. Possibly it may be objected that the distinction is one of degree rather than of kind, recurring payments at short periods being treated as income and a single payment of a similar kind covering a long period being treated as capital, but after all this is a distinction acknowledged in section 4 of the Act itself and, as has been observed, the Income Tax Acts are not cast upon absolutely logical lines. Nor does there appear to be any reason why we should extend the exception made in the case of rent and royalty to the case of a non-recurring payment made to cover a long period.

In so far as the leases in question form transactions by which a lump sum is paid under the name of salami for the granting of the lease I consider that it is more in the nature of an out and out sale of property and that the sum so received by the lessor is in no sense income within the meaning of the Indian Income Tax Act. In so far as the leases reserve rent or royalty the sums so paid are in my opinion income.

It was also urged that the question could not be judged by a priori standards but that it should first be ascertained how the money was in fact treated by the assessee, that is whether it was re-invested as capital or spent as income. The short answer to this argument would appear to be that the assessee having absolute control over his estate was under no obligation to invest the capital for the benefit of those who might succeed him. Imprudent or embarrassed persons might spend their capital as they would their income, but it is nonetheless capital and an enquiry on these lines would be fruitless.

With regard to the annuities payable to the widows of the late Raja under his Will the facts as I have stated do not fully appear from the case presented for our opinion. The Will, however, is on the record. It is dated the 27th August 1915. It recites that the entire Pargannas Jharra and Jaynagar in Manbhum are the ancestral zemindari of the testator and that he has other immoveable properties in the District of Manbhum and elsewhere. These he leaves to whoever may be his heir at his death. Of his cash and moveable properties including diamonds and precious stones a 6-annas share is to appertain to his zemindari and to go to his heir. The remaining 10-annas share he leaves to his wives who shall survive him in equal shares for their absolute use. The Will then provides as follows:

"Each of my wives shall get a maintenance of Rs. 3,600 per annum and he who will inherit and be in possession of the zemindari at any time shall be bound to pay to each of my wives maintenance at the above rate, i.e., at the rate of Rs. 3,600 per annum and he shall pay the said amount of maintenance in 12 equal instalments, i.e., Rs. 300 every month. If the amount be not paid according to the instalments, then he shall pay interest at the rate of Re. 1 per cent. per mensem, and the zemindari left by me shall remain charged for the amount of maintenance and interest for default, i.e., my wives shall be competent to sue, individually or jointly, for the amount of maintenance with interest which will be due to them respectively and realize the same by selling the property left by me."

The assessee contends that the sums paid by him as maintenance under the above terms of the Will should be deducted from his assessable income. These sums are payable out of the income of the zemindari which includes in addition to the taxable income agricultural income which is immune from tax and which admittedly is much more than sufficient to pay the maintenance. It is clear that on the facts disclosed the assessee has made out no case for deducting the whole of this sum from his taxable income nor has he shewn how much is charged thereon. The maintenance granted to the widows is charged upon the whole zemindari and to that extent it is the income of the widows. The income of the zemindari, however, is that of the assessee subject to the charge. This he may pay either from the agricultural or the non-agricultural income and so fulfil the obligation cast upon him, but there is no evidence from which we can say how much should be charged to agricultural income and how much to the taxable income. The agricultural income has not been disclosed and although I am not prepared to say that no portion could be properly deducted from the taxable income if proper materials were forthcoming I consider that there is no evidence which would entitle us to direct any reduction on the taxable income of the assessee in the present case.

It was argued that the widows were entitled to be maintained in any case out of the income of the estate and, therefore, the fact that maintenance was granted to them under their husband's Will could make no difference to the assessee's obligation to pay income-tax on the sums paid for their support. It may be that he could not deduct sums expended by him out of his income to support his children and others dependent upon him even though he were bound by law to support them but in the present case the maintenance is made a charge upon the estate by the late Raja's Will. The right of a widow under the Hindu Law to be maintained out of her late husband's share in the family property in the hands of surviving co-parceners it is true creates no immediate charge upon the property but if it became necessary to do so she could by proper steps obtain such a charge upon a reasonable portion of the joint property not exceeding her husband's share. See Jayanti Subbiah v. Alamelu Mangamma (7). But in the present case the obligation of the assessee arises not by reason of the Hindu Law but because the income of the zemindari, to the extent of the maintenance granted belongs to the widows and not to the assessee and the whole zemindari is subject to a charge for its enforcement. As already stated, however, there is no evidence before the Court to enable it to determine to what extent the maintenance is charge upon the taxable income of the assessee and we do not think the decision of the Commissioner in its result can be disturbed.

The result is that I find that the salam received in this case is not chargeable to income-tax, that the royalties received are taxable income and that in the particular circumstances and on the facts disclosed no case has been made out for deducting the maintenance annuities from the taxable income of the assessee. The petitioner has succeeded roughly as to half the deductions which he claims and has failed as to the other half. We consider that in the circumstances he is entitled to be paid half the costs of this reference. The hearing fee we assess at Rs 80.

In Case No. 73 of 1923 the petitioner is Raja Jeoti Prashad Singh Deo of Panchkote. His income for the year 1922-23 was assessed at a sum of Rs. 3,19,693 for the purposes of income-tax. This includes (1) Rs. 1,25,279 received as salam under mining leases similar to those in the other case and (2) Rs. 1,97,752 on account of royalties from the mines. It is conceded that the facts material for determining these two questions are similar to those of the previous case and that the same considerations apply. The judgment just pronounced in the previous case will govern this case in so far as the above two items are concerned.

A further point, however, arises in this case as to the amount which should be deducted from the total income for the purpose of arriving at the income assessable to super-tax. Section 55 of the Income Tax Act provides for the imposition of super-tax in any year at the rates laid down for that year by Act of the Indian Legislature. The super-tax for the year in question is laid down in the Indian Finance Act, 1922, Schedule III, Part 2. The effect of the latter enactment is that in the case of every individual super-tax shall be payable on the excess over Rs 50,000 of total income whereas in the case of every Hindu undivided family it is payable only on the excess over Rs 75,000 of total income. The assessee was assessed to super-tax as an individual. He claims that his income is that of a Hindu undivided family and that the larger exemption should be made. He admits that his estate is an impartible Raj and that the collateral members of his family have their separate property, but he contends that he and his three sons constitute a Hindu undivided family and that the income is that of the joint family. Once it is admitted that the estate is impartible, and this is the only evidence we have about it, then we must assume that the members of the joint family have none of the rights of co-parcenership except a right of succession by survivorship limited by the rule of impartibility which allows only one member at a time to hold. They cannot demand partition or assert any right to any individual share in the estate nor can they restrain alienation. The income of the estate is that of the incumbent for the time being, nor does the fact that he is bound to maintain his sons entitle him to treat the income as that of the undivided family. It is essentially his income and I so hold. The Finance Act contemplates the larger deduction for purposes of super-tax only in a case where the income is that of the undivided family in which they are all jointly interested and not in the case of an impartible estate where the income is the sole property of the holder for the time being. In my opinion the Income Tax Commissioner was right in assessing super-tax upon the excess over Rs 50,000 of total income. There will be the same order as to costs as in the previous case. We assess the hearing fee at Rs 80.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss 102, 103—Burden of proof—Sale on credit or for cash—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 115—Revision—Provision of law disregarded

Where the seller of goods avers their sale for credit and the buyer pleads that he bought them for cash, the onus of proving payment is on the latter.

Where a Court has applied its mind to the law and decides wrongly, there is no ground for revision but where it disregards some provision of law and has not applied its mind to that provision, there is ground for revision.

Revision against the decree of the District Court, Yamethin, in Civil Appeal No. 33 of 1923.

Mr P S Chari, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hay, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—In this revision case the plaintiff pleaded that he had sold certain cattle on credit. The defendant replied that he had bought them for cash. The learned Judges in the Courts below placed the onus on the plaintiff to prove that he had sold them for credit. The plaintiff contended that the onus was wrongly placed. In this, I think, he was correct. The plaintiff pleaded the sale and no payment. The defendant replied pleading payment. The onus, therefore, was on him.

The next question is to consider whether I can take cognizance of this fact in revision.

The learned Judge certainly applied his mind to the question but came to a wrong decision. He considered the case fell under section 102 of the Evidence Act. It is contended that section 103 is the more specific section, more particularly applicable, and that this provision of law would have been of valuable assistance if he had applied his mind to it.

In Zeya v. Mi On Kra Zan (1) it was held that where a Court has applied its mind to the law and decides wrongly, then there is no ground for revision, but, where it disregards some provision of law and has not applied its mind to that provision, then there is ground for revision. In my opinion, the learned Judge failed to apply his mind to section 103, and I think there is ground for revision. The decree must be set aside and the case must be remanded for a new trial. A right of immediate access from private property to a public highway, as a private right, is distinct from the right of the owner of that property to use the highway itself as one of the public. Messrs. B. K. Mukerji and P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiffs asked that a certain portion of a recently constructed building which had been put up by the defendant might be removed inasmuch as it was interfering with a right of way which the plaintiffs had in respect of the houses they occupy. Shortly their case was that for a period of over 40 years they had been accustomed to travel by foot, with ekkas and carts over what is marked upon the map before us as "public way BBBB". They traced the origin of this public way by saying that at one remote period round about 1864 the land was covered with houses which at some date not specifically stated fell down and that for a very long period of time there were marks of where the houses had been and portions of the ruined houses, that there arose a practice of passing over the site of the ruined houses and that for a period longer than is necessary to obtain a prescriptive right ekkas and carts and foot passengers had uniformly, openly and without interruption passed to the houses lying to the east along this defined route. Recently the defendant having purchased the land has erected buildings upon it. The particular building which is said to interfere with the right of way is the smaller southern rectangular building. According to the map it completely blocks out the old route and a new road appears to the south and is indicated by letters, YY, but the plaintiffs' complaint is that YY is only 4' 11" in width whereas the previous public way was more than 6' 7" wide. The lower Appellate Court accepted the contention of the plaintiffs that the building of the smaller southern rectangular portion of the house was an infringement of the right of way which they had acquired and though the pleadings indicated a private right of way the discussion in the Courts seemed to have opened out until this right of way was being talked of as a public right of way. To our mind the matter is not one of great practical importance because what the plaintiffs are complaining of is the particular damage which they now suffer inasmuch as whereas formerly they were able to drive ekkas and carts right up to their houses they are now compelled to leave those ekkas and carts some 400 or more yards away from their house. It has been contended by Dr. Katju that this action is not competent to be brought by the plaintiffs because they have not suffered a particular damage over and above that which other people have suffered: but that is not quite a complete statement of the law because although the plaintiffs must show a particular damage it is clear that a private right of this kind has been recognised as being particular damage in the case of individual members who have enjoyed access to the highway from adjoining property and if authority were needed for that passage it is to be found in the case of Lyon v. Fishmonger's Co. (1). Lord Selborne said after referring to several authorities. "Those authorities recognise such a right of immediate access from private property to a public highway, as a private right, distinct from the right of the owner of that property to use the highway itself as one of the public." Therefore, the plaintiffs in this case can be regarded in two capacities, one as ordinary members of the public in relation to this road and, secondly, as having a particular right in it by virtue of the long user. In our opinion the decision of the learned Judge of this Court cannot stand. It is certainly not in conformity with the case of Ram Chandra v Joti Parshad (2) nor with the case of Bharwan Singh v Narotam Singh (3) and the decision of this Court in the unreported case of Mahpal Singh v Manwa and Jankra [Letters Patent Appeal No 35 of 1914 dated the 7th of November 1914]. This is a case in which we set aside the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court and restore that of the lower Appellate Court, but we stay execution for three months if within that period the defendant is able to provide a way by deepening YY to the south which will permit of an uninterrupted access. We think that this is a case in which the defendant should confer with the Municipality and if the defendant can within three months produce before us an alternative scheme which will do away with the necessity of cutting their smaller building in half as will be the consequence of the order of the lower Appellate Court we will vary our order by embodying such scheme in our decree. In our opinion all that would be necessary would be for the defendant to obtain the consent of the Municipality to a passage 6' 7" passing round the southern part of the smaller building and proceeding northward until it joins the public way BBBB. We have very roughly in black lead pencil indicated the sort of pathway that we mean but the object of the defendant's obtaining the help of the Municipality is that there may not hereafter come forward some owner of land lying to the eastward of the smaller building who will contend that the road is an invasion of his private right. On this point we must have proper assurances. Our decision, therefore, to-day is that we restore the judgment of the lower Appellate Court subject to our embodying in the decree an alternative arrangement within three months if such alternative arrangement can be arrived at. The period of three months is not to be extended unless for good cause shown. The question of costs will be decided later.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 59—Payment—Appropriation

JUDGMENT.

Lentaigne, J.—I would hold that on the 9th May 1922 when Dayal handed the cheque for Rs. 6,000 to the plaintiff Chetty, he gave the Chetty a specific direction that the proceeds of that cheque should be paid to the promissory-note in suit.

It is admitted that the Chetty realised the proceeds of this cheque on the 18th

(2) 8 Ind. Cas 808, 8 A. L. J. 19, 33 A. 287.

FOSTER v. E. M. A. L. CHETTY FIRM.

May, and I would hold that payment by cheque, which was only conditional on the 9th, became an absolute payment on the 18th May when the proceeds were obtained. The Chetty states that he then credited the Rs. 6,000 to Dayalal's account in order to keep it in suspense until he could see Dayalal. I will discuss below the legal question whether he was legally entitled to take that course.

The Chetty has then stated, and the District Judge has found as a fact, that on the 22nd May an arrangement was come to between the Chetty and Dayalal that the Rs. 6,000 should be appropriated to certain earlier promissory-notes and that only Rs. 750 and Rs. 120 should be credited to the promissory-note in suit. The District Judge has also found as a fact that the Chetty had entered the amount in the suspense account with the object of persuading Dayalal to alter the previous appropriation to that recorded in the accounts on the 22nd May and that he succeeded in persuading Dayalal to do so. Having regard to the fact that Dayalal admits that he signed Exhibit B, showing that he had received the other promissory-notes from the Chetty on the 22nd May, I would agree with these findings of fact as to what occurred on the 22nd May, but, in my opinion, these facts will not affect the legal position as existing on the 18th May.

I think that a question arises whether Dayalal was really acting in part as the agent of Foster when he made the payment on the 9th May, but for the purposes of argument I will first assume that Dayalal was not acting as agent for anybody and that he was merely paying a debt due by himself and others. On this assumption he was a debtor paying a debt by a cheque which was a conditional payment and when making such payment he gave a direction as to the appropriation of that payment which became an absolute payment on the 18th May at a time when the said direction still remained uncanceled. It appears to me that there is no question that the Chetty, on the 9th May, accepted this conditional payment by cheque, and it is clear that he did not repudiate such acceptance at any time up to the date of his receiving the actual cash amount. In my opinion it was the duty of the Chetty creditor to obey the direction as to appropriation when he received the cash or proceeds on the 18th May, and that the provision at the end of section 59 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, would have applied and was mandatory to the effect that the payment "must be applied accordingly." If then the Chetty had done what he was bound by law to do, he would on the 18th May have made an entry of satisfaction to the extent of Rs. 6,000 in respect of the promissory-note in suit. In that case there would be no question that both Foster and Datta, as well as the other appellants, would have ceased to be liable to the Chetty for more than the small balance of Rs. 120 by reason of the increase of the total debt to the extent of the one month's interest of Rs. 120 then due. I think that the appellants were entitled to that benefit from this payment, whether the Chetty did his duty or not, and I do not think that the Chetty can alter that position by committing a breach of duty. If it is held, as I think it must be, that Foster and Datta were released from liability to the extent of Rs. 6,000 on the 18th May 1922, I do not see how any agreement come to between Dayalal and the Chetty on the 22nd May could alter that position and revive a liability which had been pro tanto extinguished. I think that it would be necessary to get Foster and Datta, as well as the other appellants, to join in the agreement reviving that liability for the portion of the debt which had been extinguished.

Though I am satisfied that the above propositions are correct statements of the law applicable to the facts of this case, I have been unable to find any authorities on cases exactly parallel to this case, and it was admitted at the Bar that the Advocates concerned had been unable to obtain any authority in point. On behalf of the respondent it was contended that so long as the Chetty did not act on the direction, if any, received on the 9th May, it was open to him to keep the money in a suspense account and subsequently to get the debtor to cancel the appropriation. My answer to this argument is that, in my opinion, the Chetty was not entitled to keep the money in a suspense account for a single hour, because he had received and accepted the cheque and the money with a specific direction which by law he was bound to carry out. Section 59 of the Indian Contract Act is specific and mandatory to the effect that the payment must be applied accordingly, and a failure to carry out that statutory provision for a single day or a single hour was illegal and a breach of duty. The section does authorise a creditor to refuse to receive a payment, if he does not agree to the specific direction as to the appropriation thereof; but, in my opinion, it is clear that such election must be made at once, and if he does not at once reject the payment, it is too late for him to contend that he has not received a payment legally appropriated to the particular debt. Once he receives the payment, the question arises with what intention did the debtor make the payment? For example, it has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Davenport v. Queen-Empress (1), that in a case where a tenant, who had incurred a forfeiture, tendered a sum for rent which the landlord nominally refused to accept as rent but did in fact keep under protest, stating that he was receiving it conditionally and without prejudice to the right to deal with the land as forfeited, the landlord was taking a course he was not entitled to take, and had thereby waived the forfeiture. The same point had previously been decided by the House of Lords in the case of Croft v. Lumley (2), where the landlord told the tenant at the time of payment that he refused to accept the money as rent but that he took it solely as compensation for the use of the land. Consequently, it would seem that even if the Chetty had told Dayalal on the 9th May that he refused to comply with his direction to apply the cheque to the note in suit and that he intended to apply it to other notes, it would not have justified him in keeping the cheque in contravention of Dayalal's direction, and his only proper course would have been to return the cheque then and there to Dayalal. A fortiori the Chetty after apparently accepting the cheque without protest on the 9th May, was not entitled to disregard the direction on the 18th May when he received the cash. These two authorities and other decisions to which I have referred bear out the construction which I have placed on section 59 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. That being so it seems clear that the note would have been satisfied and discharged pro tanto on the receipt of such payment; and such was in fact the intention of Dayalal on the 9th and there is no evidence that he had any change of intention before the 22nd May, and, moreover, it is not suggested that he had any communication with the Chetty between 9th and 17th May. Once it is clear that the note was satisfied and discharged pro tanto on the 18th May, it seems an obvious proposition that the satisfied portion could not be revived without the consent of the five obligors, assuming even that a revival with their consent would not have been a breach of the stamp law.

For the above reasons I would hold that the promissory-note in suit was satisfied by the two payments discussed above except as regards a small balance of Rs. 4-12-0 due for interest which has not been referred to in the argument and is too small to justify a decree when it can more conveniently be deducted from the cost to be awarded.

I, therefore, set aside the decree of the District Court and direct that the suit as against all defendants be dismissed, but that the plaintiff Chetty shall pay the costs in both Courts to the appellants, Foster and Datta, less Rs. 4-12-0 to be deducted therefrom as the balance of interest.

appeal by defendants Nos. 1 and 2 from a judgment of the Second Additional District Judge of Dacca, dated the 14th of July 1922.The judgment of the lower Appellate Court dealt with two Suits Nos. 305 and 321. The plaintiff alleged that the first and the second defendants had by erection of a building encroached beyond the land which the plaintiff had settled with them.It appears that the defendants had a building in the Srinagar Bazar, that the building was blown down in the Cyclone of 1919. Thereupon, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 erected a new building and it is in respect of this building that the plaintiff alleged the encroachment, and two suits were brought and,it was alleged that two plots of land belonging to the plaintiff had been encroached upon.Suit No. 305 referred to the alleged encroachment on the West, and suit
No. 321 related to the alleged encroachment on the South and the East.The learned Munsif who tried three suits dismissed Suit No. 305 altogether.
Suit No. 321 was decreed in part. The learned Munsif made a decree that the plaintiff's alleged title to the extent of half a cubit of land in breadth lying along the length of defendants' hut and to the East thereof should be declared and established and, he made a further order granting a permanent injunction against the defendants restraining them from using Jhaps horizontally to their shop in the east sideWhen the appeal was before the lower Appellate Court, the learned Additional District Judge referred to the fact that the defendants admitted an encroachment to some extent, but on what part, whether it was on the North or South, East or West, was not clear and, apparently he was not satisfied with the decision of the Trial Court. He was not satisfied where the encroachment was or to what area the encroachment extended, and, he came to the conclusion that the only satisfactory way of dealing with the case was to remand it to the lower Court for further trial after local enquiry. The result was that he made that order and remanded both the suits to the lower Court for further trial after local enquiry.The learned Vakil for the defendantsappellants, argued that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to make that order, or, that at all events under the circumstances of this case he ought not to have made that orderOn the other hand, the learned Vakil for the respondent relied upon the decision of a Full Bench of this Court

Judge had jurisdiction. I content(1) 41 Ind. Cas 598, 44 O 929, 21 O W. N 877, myself by referring to a passage in my judgment in that case which is to be found at page 936* It runs as follows "The question whether it is necessary for the ends of justice to exercise such powers of remand must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case and in exercising such jurisdiction the Court must, no doubt, be careful to see that its decision is based on general legal principles and subject to the rule that, if the Code does contain specific provisions which would meet the necessities of the case in question, such provisions should be followed and the inherent jurisdiction should not be invoked". Assuming for the sake of argument, though I do not decide it, that the learned Judge had jurisdiction in this case to make the order of remand, in my judgment he ought not to have made it, because the Code contains specific provisions which would meet the necessities of the case. It is not disputed by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the learned Judge could have made an order that an independent surveyor should proceed to the "locus in quo", make measurements and give his evidence before the lower Appellate Court, having regard to the difficulty in which the learned Judge found himself. That order might have been made under O. XLI, r. 27 (b) of the Code, and in my judgment that was the course which the learned Judge ought to have followed in this case and that course would have met the necessities of this case. Consequently, the learned Judge, even if he had jurisdiction to order a remand should, not, in my opinion, have made use of it.

During the course of the argument my learned brother drew attention to the case of Prosunna Chandra Chattopadhyaya v. Boudya Nath Mistry (2), where a course similar to that which I have indicated was directed by the learned Judges who heard the appeal.

The result, therefore, in my judgment is that the judgment and the order of the learned Additional District Judge so far as directed a remand must be set aside.

It appears that the order of the learned Additional District Judge has been carried out, and that a Civil Court Commissioner was appointed by the Trial Court to carry out the directions of the lower Appellate Court and that he has in fact made reports. The learned Vakil who appeared for the appellants has agreed, and if I may say so, wisely agreed that the reports should be submitted to the lower Appellate Court instead of to the learned Munsif's Court, so that the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court may have the advantage of the reports of the Civil Court Commissioner and may, if necessary, take the evidence of the Commissioner in his own Court to enable him to pronounce judgment on the appeal. The learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court dealt with the question of the permanent injunction restraining the defendants from erecting the jhaps. He came to the conclusion that the defendants had failed to prove any custom entitling them to erect and use the jhaps in the manner contended for by the defendants. Upon that point his judgment must stand. But if the defendants Nos 1 and 2 can succeed in showing that the jhaps do not project at any time beyond the boundaries of the land settled with the defendants, then, of course, the injunction will be set aside. That will be a matter which the lower Appellate Court will consider.

In the circumstances of this case each party will pay his or their own costs of this appeal. All other costs will be in the discretion of the lower Appellate Court.

Chakravarty, J.—I agree.

STEEL BROTHERS & CO. v. EMPEROR.

RANGOON HIGH COURT.
FULL BENCH.

CIVIL REFERENCE No. 12 of 1923.

March 10, 1924.

Present—Sir Sydney Robinson, K.T., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Heald and Mr. Justice Beasley.STEEL BROTHERS & COMPANY, LIMITED—APPLICANT,versusEMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss 2 (15), 12, 16, 55—Undivided profits—Bonus shares—Income, profit or gain*

Where a Limited Company in order to increase its capital allots its undivided profits to its share-holders in the form of fully paid up bonus shares, and no amount is taken from the Company or received by the share-holders, the acceptance of the allotted shares by the share-holders is not an acceptance of an income, profit or gain within the meaning of the Income Tax Act [p. 677, col. 2, p. 678, col. 1.]

REFERENCE.—This was a reference to the High Court made on the 7th December 1923 by the Commissioner of Income-tax Burma, (J. C. Mackenzie, Esquire, M. A., I. C. S.); the question referred being,

"Did the transactions evidenced by the resolutions passed by the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, dated 19th July 1921 and 10th October 1921 respectively, by the returns of allotment dated 27th July 1921 and 25th October 1921, and by the contracts dated 23rd July and 10th October 1921, involve the receipt by Messrs. Steels of, any income, profits or gains within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 15, section 16 and section 12 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, and consequently liable to super-tax under section 55?"

The learned Commissioner's opinion on the question referred to as required by section 66 of the Income Tax Act is reported below.—

"In the case in point the sum of Rs. 56½ lakhs capitalized was profits in the hands of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, and they had paid income-tax on it. The sum was taken out of profits current and accumulated, a bonus was voted to the share-holders, and the money was appropriated to the payment for new shares issued in satisfaction of the bonus. The bonus shares received by Messrs. Steels were issued in respect of an actual sum of Rs. 28½ lakhs. Prima facie, in receiving these shares, which were saleable and were certainly worth their face value, Messrs. Steels certainly received money's worth. As will be shown below this was the opinion both of the Company at home and of their representatives in Rangoon. The letter dated January 1923 from Messrs. Allan, Charlesworth & Co., show that Messrs. Steels base their claim that the sum of Rs. 28½ lakhs, being the value of the bonus shares, is not liable to super-tax, on the House of Lords' decision in the case of Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1). In that case Lords Haldane, Finlay and Cave (Lords Dunnedin and Sumner dissenting) held that in the circumstances of that case the bonus shares received by John Blott were of the nature of an accretion to capital and that the recipient had not received anything that could be classed as income. The decision in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) followed a previous House of Lords' decision in Bouch v. Sproud (2). A Privy Council decision in Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) was differed from; but as will be noted below, there is considerable doubt as to how far the majority Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) were aware that they were overruling the principles laid down in Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3).

My opinion is that the decision in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) does not apply, that furthermore if the reasoning of the majority Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) be analysed it will be found to be fallacious, and that the present case is governed by the Privy Council ruling in Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3), and that Messrs. Steels are liable to pay super-tax on the sum of Rs. 28½ lakhs being the value of the bonus shares received from the STEHL BROTHERS & CO. v. EMPEROR.

Indo-Burma Petroleum Company Limited.

II

The arguments against the application of the principle followed in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) to the present case, which are stated at greater length below, may be summarized as follows:—

(a) The language of the taxing section involved in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) is different to that of the section involved in the present reference.

(b) The relations existing between Messrs. Steels and the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, make the circumstances of the present case so completely different from the circumstances in respect of which the decision of the majority Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) was specifically given that that decision does not apply.

(c) The circumstances attending the declaration of the bonus and the issue of the shares, and in particular the fact that Messrs. Steels by crediting the bonus shares to profits and loss and subsequently by taking them into consideration in distributing a dividend have treated the value of the bonus shares as income, differentiate the case entirely from Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1).

(d) The reasoning of the majority Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) is fallacious. If the facts are analysed it will be seen that in the present case Messrs. Steels in receiving the bonus shares have received a profit or gain and that they are liable to pay income-tax on their value.

(e) A necessary step towards the issue of the bonus shares is the distribution, by imputation, to each share-holder of his proportional share of the amount capitalized. This involves the receipt by him of a profit or gain, which is liable to super-tax. There is no justification for disregarding this necessary step.

(f) Even if there were, in the case of an individual share-holder, justification for disregarding this necessary step, there is none where the recipient shareholder is a juridical person like a Limited Company.

III (a)

The first point to be noticed is that there is a difference between the United Kingdom Act and the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, in the wording of the relevant portion of the taxing sections. The charging section of the English Act [section 66 of Finance (1909-10) Act 1910, as reproduced later] imposes super-tax in respect of the income of any individual, the total of which from all sources exceeds a certain sum. In the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, the charging section (section 55) imposes an additional duty, (i.e. super-tax) in respect of the total income of the previous year of any individual, unregistered firm, Hindu undivided family or Company. Section 2 (15) defines "total income" as the total amount of income, profits, and gains from all sources to which this Act applies.

The Indian super-tax is charged with reference to an assessee's 'income, profits and gains,' whereas in the United Kingdom super-tax is charged in respect of the income of an individual. The scope of the taxing section in the Indian Act is wider than that of the English Act.

III (b)

Even if it were conceded that the principles laid down by the majority of the Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) were right as applied to the circumstances in that particular case, the present case differs so much in essentials from Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) that these principles cannot be held to apply. Of the five noble Lords who gave judgments in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) two (Lords Dunedin and Sumner) were completely against Blott's; and three (Lords Haldane, Finlay and Cave) decided in his favour.

When the individual judgments of the majority Lords are scrutinised in detail it becomes clear that the judgment as a whole has no reference to a case like the case in point. For it is clear throughout that John Blott was merely an ordinary share-holder, an individual who happens to own certain shares in a particular Company. He had no controlling interest in the Company. On the other hand Messrs Steels own half the shares in the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, the other half being owned by another Limited Company, Messrs Jamals. These two Limited Companies had between them the appointment of the Directorate of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company.

The following passages from the judgments may be cited as showing that the majority of the Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) had in mind, in arriving at their decisions, circumstances entirely different from those in the present case.

Lord Haldane states (vide page 182, Volume II, Appeal Cases, 1921) —

'A share-holder is not entitled to claim that the Company should apply its undivided profits in payment to him as dividend. Whether it must do so or not is matter of internal management to be decided by the majority of the share-holders.'

Lower down (page 184, ibid) he states:—

'It is by no means certain that the majority in such a general meeting would consist of persons liable to super-tax and assembling to devise a method of escaping it. The majority may on any occasion consist of persons who escape from super-tax because their incomes, even with the additions to be derived from the distribution by the company, are below the level required for the tax.'

Lord Finlay discussing the case of Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) states (page 194, ibid):—

'No option was left to any particular share-holder. He was compelled by the action of the Company to take the preference shares.'

Lord Cave explicitly states:—

'I think it right to add that if in the present case [as in Bouch v. Sproud (2)] an option had been given to the share-holders to take or refuse the bonus shares, different considerations would have arisen; and I desire to reserve my judgment as to the effect of such an option upon the liability to tax.'

The above passages show clearly that the majority of the Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) had in mind an individual share-holder, who had no controlling interest in the Company. The reverse is the case in the present case. The two limited companies which between them owned all the shares in the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, and appointed the Directorate, could, as they wished, have distributed their surplus profits either as dividends or bonus shares. They had complete control over the doings of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company. Messrs Steels and Messrs Jamals undoubtedly had the option of taking the money as dividends or through the medium of bonus shares. This in itself differentiates the present case from the case of Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) to such an extent that the same principles do not apply. This dictum of Lord Cave's quoted specifically, rules out a case like the present case from the scope of the principle laid down in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1). A further point of difference between Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) and the present case is that in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) the bonus shares issued were part of capital previously authorised but as yet unissued. In the case in point prior to the declaration of the first instalment of the bonus on July 1921 the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, had not the power to "capitalize" profits or reserves. This power was assumed by a special resolution amending the Articles of Association passed at a meeting on 29th June 1921 and confirmed on July 19th, 1921. The authorised capital of the Company had up till June 1921 been Rs. 1,00,00,000 of which Rs. 93,38,000 had been issued. The amount of unissued capital would not have permitted the capitalization of the Rs. 31.5 lakhs capitalized by the resolution of 19th July 1921. But just prior to this a special resolution passed at a meeting on 18th May 1921 and confirmed at a meeting on 2nd

STEEL BROTHERS & CO. v. EMPEROR.

June 1921 had increased the capital of the Company from Rs. 1,00,00,000 to Rs. 2,00,00,000.

The next set of arguments against the application to the present case of the principles laid down in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) is that Messrs Steels have themselves treated the value of the bonus shares as a profit. It must first be noted that the intention of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, in declaring the bonus apparently was that the bonus should be income. The words of the resolution authorising the bonus show this:—

“... that that sum be distributed as bonus free of income-tax.”

It is to be remembered that the present appellants, Messrs. Steels themselves, supplied half the Directorate of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited.

The manner in which the present question was raised is significant. Messrs Steel Brothers & Company, Limited, in their accounts treated the value of the bonus shares as a profit. The value of the bonus shares was taken into account by showing it in the Profit and Loss Account as a profit received. This was done in the accounts prepared in London. The assessment in Rangoon was made after Messrs Steels' representative had had several interviews with the Income Tax Officer. The details of the assessment were fixed up between the Income Tax Officer and Messrs Steels' representative before Messrs Steels made a formal return. When the formal return was made Messrs Steels also filed a pro forma assessment. The actual assessment finally made was practically the same as the pro forma assessment put in by Messrs. Steels. At none of the preliminary meetings was any question raised as to Messrs Steels' liability to pay super-tax on the value of the bonus shares. In the return of income and in the pro forma assessment the value of the bonus shares—Rs. 28½ lakhs—was included in Messrs. Steels' income. The point is of significance as showing that the ordinary unsophisticated business man regarded the value of the bonus shares as income, and income liable to tax. The assessment was finally made on 9th January 1923. It was not till seventeen days later that Messrs. Steels having presumably in the meantime received enlightenment from some quarter, raised the question as to whether or not the value of the bonus shares was liable to super-tax.

However, the main point raised in this paragraph is this: that Messrs Steels having in general meeting passed the account in which the value of the bonus shares is treated as a profit, have irrevocably, so far as the Company is concerned, stamped the sum in question with the character of profits.

The Company in general meeting having thus declared the amount now in question to be profits, I cannot see that the executive of the Company is competent now to plead that this amount is not profits.

An examination of the Profits and Loss Account shows that not only was this sum of Rs. 28½ lakhs taken into account as a profit received but that if this sum had not been so taken into account, Messrs Steels would not have been able to pay so large a dividend.

The value of the bonus shares formed part of the fund from which Messrs Steels paid their dividend.

Article 129 of the Articles of Association of Messrs. Steel Brothers & Company, Limited, is as follows—

“No dividend shall be payable except out of the profits of the Company and no dividend shall carry interest.”

It may be argued that the manner in which a Company in its account deals with a particular sum of money does not determine the nature of that sum of money as regards its liability to taxation. The reply to this argument is that the ruling in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) is to the effect that a Company can decide what is to be the nature of certain of its profits as regards liability to taxation. According to Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) in the present instance, the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company have stamped the sum of Rs. 28½ lakhs with the character of capital, and Messrs. Steels have received neither money nor money's worth. As a matter of hard fact, on the other hand, Messrs. Steels have declared this sum of Rs. 28½ lakhs to be profit and taken it into account as such and proceeded to distribute it as a dividend.

I cannot see any reason why for the purpose of deciding the question of liability or non-liability to super-tax, the distributing Company should be dominant, any more than the recipient Company.

III (d)

At the end of the previous paragraph it was shown that the application to the present case of the principle laid down in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) leads to an incongruity. According to the ruling in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, declared validly against all the world, that the sum of Rs. 28½ lakhs at present in question was capital. Messrs. Steels had received neither money nor money's worth. And Messrs. Steels, equally validly against all the world, have declared that this sum is income and proceeded to take it into account in distributing a dividend. There is a complete incongruity.

The majority Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) say that Messrs. Steels in receiving the bonus shares have received neither money nor money's worth. Yet Messrs. Steels, one of the largest concerns in India, in their accounts which, be it noted, were prepared by a leading London firm of Chartered Accountants, show the value of the bonus shares a profit received and take it into account in order to distribute a dividend. Their representative in Rangoon, in submitting the firm's return for income-tax purposes included the value of the bonus shares in the income received.

The inevitable conclusion, it is submitted, is that the decision of the majority Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) is not in accordance with the facts and that the reasoning is fallacious. One may take this line with more boldness as the noble Lords who passed orders in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) take exactly opposite views on a question of fact regarding one of the previous rulings referred to in the judgment, viz., that in Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3). The point in question is as follows:—

Lord Haldane held that the finding in that case turned on the fact that in the relevant part of the Statute concerned (The Dividend Duties Act, 1902, of Western Australia) the word 'advantage' is used.

As quoted on page 188 of Volume II of Appeal Cases, 1921, Lord Haldane states: 'What is clear is that the wide character of the word 'advantages' was a primary consideration in what was said by their Lordships who took part in advising His Majesty'.

On the very same point Lord Sumner states (vide page 217 ibid)—

'That case did not turn on the special definition of dividend in the Taxing Statute of West Australia.'

The judgment in Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) can be read in a few minutes. A perusal will show that the case did not turn on the word 'advantage'.

The question given shows that it was not at all clear to what extent the principle involved in Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) was being differed from. Nor yet is it clear how far Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) confirms the principle laid down in Bouch v. Sproud (2). Lords Dunedin and Sumner held that Bouch v. Sproud (2) did not apply. In a passage already quoted Lord Cave differentiated the case of Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) from Bouch v. Sproud (2). The passage is, 'I think it right to add that if in the present case [as in Bouch v. Sproud (2)] an option had been given to the shareholders to take or refuse the bonus shares, different considerations would have arisen; and I desire to reserve my judgment as to the effect of such an option upon the liability to tax.'

Surely the effect of this passage is that Lord Cave did not consider that the case of Commissioners of Inland Revenue v.

STEARL BROTHERS & CO. v. EMPEROR.

Blott (1) was governed by the decision in Bouch v. Sproud (2). The fact is that it is not clear how far the majority Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) were consciously differing from the decision in Swan Brewery Co v. King (3). Nor yet how far they regarded the point at issue in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) as previously decided by Bouch v. Sproud (2) is further justification for a critical attitude towards the decision of the majority Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1).

The gist of the ruling in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) is that when bonus shares are issued there is merely an appreciation of the capital of the recipient share-holder but he received nothing that can be classed as income. In examining the decision in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) it must be kept clearly in mind that the liability of a share-holder who receives bonus shares to pay super-tax on their value depends solely on whether or not in receiving the bonus share, he has received, as distinct from his capital, either money or money's worth. If this criterion be adhered to, some of the dicta in the judgments in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) are seen to be irrelevant. It is stated for instance, that when bonus shares are issued what might have gone to the share-holder as dividend has gone to increase the capital of the Company. But surely the fact that the Company has not parted with any of its assets is quite compatible with the share-holders having received a profit or gain. It is true that the Company has retained the money capitalized. But the bonus shares have a value. In receiving the bonus shares the share-holder receives money's worth. The fact that the Company has not parted with any of its assets is quite irrelevant so far as the liability or otherwise of the share-holders to pay super-tax on the value of the bonus shares is concerned.

It is also said that when the bonus shares are issued to share-holders the new shares do not give the share-holder an immediate right to a larger amount of the existing assets. The new shares, it is argued, together with the old ones entitle him merely to the same amount of the existing assets as he was entitled to by the old shares before the issue of the bonus shares. This is so far true. It must be pointed out, however, that exactly the same is true of a dividend. After the declaration of a dividend the dividend-warrant of any share-holder taken together with the shares entitle him only to the same amount of the existing assets as, prior to the declaration of the dividend, he was entitled to by reason of his shares alone. The significant point, for our present purpose, is that when a dividend is paid, the share-holder receives something quite separate from and above and beyond his capital as represented by his shares. The processes which lead up to the paying of a dividend are as follows:—

A Company begins a successful year with a certain amount of assets. At the end of the year these assets have increased. The extent of the increase can only be ascertained after an account has been taken. By the process of accounting the increased amount of assets at the end of the year is divided up into the assets with which the Company started (the capital) and the profit. The profit is separated out after precautions are taken, by allowing for depreciation, for doubtful debts, etc., for ensuring that, so far forth the original assets (the capital) is left intact. The profits are what is left over when all provision has been made for ensuring that the original capital, ceteris paribus, is undiminished. In India the Company pays income-tax on its profit. Out of its profits, current or accumulated, the Company pays a dividend. When the share-holder receives a dividend he receives something separate from and in addition to his capital as represented by his shares. He has received a 'profit' or 'gain' or 'income'. This is liable to income-tax. Accordingly under section 16 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, sums received as dividends are included in the total income of an assessee and in his assessment he is given credit for the amount paid by the Company. When a dividend is paid, the share-holder receives a dividend-warrant which he can encash.

It appears to me that all the essential factors which make dividends liable to income-tax and super-tax are present in the case of an issue of bonus shares like the present. To begin with the fund which is capitalized was profits. The Company has paid income-tax on these profits. These profits had been separated off from the capital, which after they had been separated off, was still, so far forth, undiminished. The value of the bonus shares falling to each share-holder is the portion of the total amount capitalized proportionate to his holding in the Company. The bonus shares are realizable quite apart from the share-holder's original shares. He can sell his bonus shares and still have his capital as represented by his original shares intact. I do not see, therefore, that it can be held that a share-holder who receives bonus shares has not received money or money's worth. In the present case Messrs. Steels having their capital, invested in the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, intact received in addition thereto bonus shares to the value of Rs. 28½ lakhs. Surely this is obviously a profit or gain. That it was so is shown by the fact that Messrs. Steels took the value of these shares into account in their Profit and Loss Account. It is to be noted that it is not necessary that what the share-holder receives should be cash. Even in the United Kingdom if the shares distributed by the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, had been shares in another Company, Messrs. Steels would have been liable to pay super-tax on the value of these shares—vide the ruling in Pool v. The Guardian Investment Trust Co. (4). There does not appear to be, so far as income-tax purposes are concerned, any difference between its own shares which a Company distributes to a share-holder as a bonus and shares in another Company which it similarly distributes. Both alike are equally separate from and in addition to the share-holder's capital as represented by his original shares. Both are therefore to the share-holder a 'profit' or 'gain' or 'income.' The same process of sale is necessary before the shares in either case can be turned into money.

The present case is simplified by the fact that Messrs. Steels have, since the formation of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, in 1909, held practically the same holding in the Company right up till the end of the period which is concerned in the present reference.

III (c)

In the preceding paragraph it has been shown, quite apart from the machinery used in issuing the bonus shares, that the bonus shares are a 'profit' or 'gain.' Another line of argument is that adopted by the dissentient Lords—Lords Sumner and Dunedin—in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1). This line of argument is that in order to effect the issue of the bonus shares two steps are necessary:—

(1) the distribution by imputation of a sum of money to the share-holders,

(2) the application of the money so imputed to the payment of the bonus shares.

Lord Dunedin states the case concisely:—

"The Company cannot issue the shares for nothing. They must be paid for in money or, under certain conditions, in money's worth. Furthermore, the Company cannot itself provide the money to pay for the new shares. If it did so, it would do what is equivalent to buying its own shares, and that it cannot do Trevor v. Whitworth (5)."

Accordingly a necessary step to the issue of the bonus shares is the distribution, by imputation, to each share-holder of his proportional share of the amount capitalized. This amounts to the receipt by the share-holder of this particular sum of money. The share-holder receives a 'profit' or 'gain' which is liable to income-tax and, if the total income of the share-holder in question is above the requisite minimum, to super-tax. The fact that the amount capitalized is credited, in their several appropriate amounts, to the share-holders, is not affected by the fact that the share-holders are bound by the decision of the Company as to the manner in which such money will be utilized.

In the present case—vide the resolution cited in the statement of facts—the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, decided that the two sums of money, of which the sum of Rs. 28½ lakhs now in question is one moiety, should be distributed to the share-holders as a bonus. The returns of allotment filed show that the consideration for which the shares were allotted was the satisfaction of the bonus in question. The procedure followed—and it was the inevitable, necessary procedure—involved the payment by imputation, of the amounts in question to the share-holders. The receipt by the share-holders of such moneys rendered them liable to pay super-tax on them.

In the case Bouch v. Sproud (2), which the majority of the Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) followed, the Company actually issued a warrant for the amount distributed as bonus. The fact that as a necessary step to the issue of the bonus shares, payment, by imputation or otherwise of his proportional amount must be made to each share-holder was got round by disregarding the actual processes followed and regarding solely the substance of the whole transactions, which was that a sum which had been available for distribution as dividends had been added back to capital. This procedure may have been justifiable in deciding a question between a tenant-for-life and a remainder-man. It does not appear to be justifiable in deciding a question of liability to income-tax or super-tax where the question at issue is whether or not an assessee received anything amounting to a profit or gain.

III (f)

A further consideration is this: in the judgments of the three Lords who decided against the Crown in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1), as in the previous judgment Bouch v. Sproud (2) which they followed, the principle adopted was that it was necessary to look, not at the form of the processes by which the bonus shares were issued, but at the substance. Admittedly the form of the transactions involved was

(1) the distribution of a sum of money as a bonus to the share-holders,

(2) the issue of bonus shares in satisfaction of that bonus. The distribution of the bonus unquestionably involves the receipt by the share-holder of "profits" or "gains". But according to the principle followed in Bouch v. Sproud (2) and by the majority of Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) one must look not at the form but at the substance of the transactions. This in net effect was that a certain amount of money available for dividends was added to capital; the share-holders getting nothing that could be classed as "income". Whatever justification there may have been for this view taken either in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) or in the case Bouch v. Sproud (2) the circumstances of the present case require that the actual formal process followed should alone be taken into consideration. As has been shown above, John Blott was an ordinary share-holder with no controlling interest in the Company concerned in his case. The tenant-for-life in Bouch v. Sproud (2) was in a similar position.

In the present case Messrs. Steels are not, as regards their holding in the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, in the position of ordinary share-holders. They owned half the shares, the other half being held by another Limited Company. There were provisions in the Articles of Association reserving to Messrs. Steels and to Messrs. Jamal Brothers and Company, Limited, rights controlling the transfer of shares to outsiders, and also controlling the Directorate. Both Messrs. Steels and Messrs. Jamal Brothers and Company were precluded from engaging in any other oil business, and without the consent of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, even from holding shares in another oil Company. By the Articles of Association the Mangang Agency of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, was reserved to Messrs. Steels. As set out in the statement of the facts of this case, Messrs. Steels carry on some branches of their business directly while other branches are carried on through the agency of limited Companies. Thus Messrs. Steels own all the shares in the Burma Company Limited, a Company whose business is rice-milling, except five shares (out of 22,500) which are held by Directors or Managers of Messrs. Steels. Messrs. Steels are in a similar position as regards Messrs. George Gordon & Company (Burma) Limited, a Company whose business is insurance.

"Messrs. Steels are not in the position of ordinary share-holders as regards either the Burma Company, Limited, Messrs. George Gordon and Company (Burma) Limited, or the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited. The truth is that these subordinate limited companies are artificial devices through which Messrs. Steels find it convenient to carry on different branches of their business. These subordinate companies are artificial devices. Their status, powers, and duties are those formally fixed by Statute. Formal procedure is of the essence of their being. In their case, whatever may be true in the case of individuals like John Blott, there is no justification for looking away from the form of the processes by which the bonus shares were issued and regarding only the net effect of the processes. The parties concerned are all juridical persons and as such, their whole existence is regulated by Statute. There is, therefore, no justification for disregarding the formal steps in the procedure."

JUDGMENT.

Robinson, C. J.—This is a reference by the Commissioner of Income Tax, and the question referred is:

"Did the transactions evidenced by the resolutions passed by the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, dated 10th July, 1921, and 10th October 1921, respectively, by the returns of allotment dated 27th July, 1921, and 25th October 1921, and by the contracts dated 23rd July and 10th October 1921, involve the receipt by Messrs. Steels of any income, profits or gains within the meaning of section 2, sub-section (15), section 16 and section 12 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, and consequently liable to super-tax under section 55?"

The Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, is a Company consisting in effect of two share-holders only, namely, Messrs. Steel Brothers and Company, Limited, and Messrs. Jamal Brothers and Company, Limited. There are a few other share-holders—nominees of these two companies—who hold shares for the purposes of the Companies Act. But we may treat this reference as if there were only two share-holders holding an equal number of shares each in the Company.

During 1921, the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, capitalized a sum of Rupees fifty-six and a half lakhs, being part of their profits, accumulated and current, and issued bonus shares for this amount. Messrs. Steel Brothers and Company, Limited, received bonus shares to the value of Rupees twenty-eight and a quarter lakhs.

The question is, whether, these bonus shares are income, profits or gains on which, subject to the provisions of the Act, Messrs. Steel Brothers and Company, Limited, can be called upon to pay super-tax.

Acting in accordance with the powers conferred by their Articles of Association, the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, increased their capital, and then proceeded to pass resolutions authorizing the issue of bonus shares with the object of transferring the accumulated profits of the Company to capital. There were two resolutions in respect of two sums, but the resolutions are the same, and it will be sufficient if I set out the first resolution.—

"That this meeting pursuant to Article 105A directs—That it is desirable to capitalize the sum of Rs. 31,50,000, being part of the undivided profits of the Company standing to the credit of the Company's Profit and Loss Account on the 31st December 1920, and since carried into Reserve Fund and accordingly that that sum be distributed as a bonus free of income-tax amongst the holders of the ordinary shares or their nominees in proportion to the ordinary shares held by them respectively and that the Directors be authorized to distribute amongst them 31,500 of the unissued Rs. 100 shares credited as fully paid in like proportions in satisfaction of such bonus."

The resolutions were carried, and the bonus shares were issued.

We have been referred to several authorities:—

Bouch v. Sproud (2), Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) and Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (6). This last case was first heard by Rowlatt, J., whose judgment is to be found in Law Reports, (1920) 1 King's Bench Division, page 114. The appeal is to be found in Law Reports, (1920) 2 King's Bench Division, page 657 [Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (7)]. The case was taken to the House of Lords whose decision is to be found in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1).

The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3), if applicable to the facts of the present case, is binding on us. It is impossible to reconcile that decision with the decision in Bouch v. Sproud (2) or with the decision in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1). I propose, therefore, first of all, to consider how far the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) was a decision under a special Act, and whether it can be distinguished from the present case on that ground. The matter is rendered specially difficult, because the learned Lord who delivered the judgment in the Privy Council case was also one of the Law Lords who delivered the judgment in the House of Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1). He there stated (page 217): "Having arrived at this conclusion on the general law of statutory companies as now settled by decisions, I turn to the case of Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3). I have re-examined the case of the appellants and the respondents represented to the Privy Council and the record on that appeal, the report in the Court below, and the Companies Act of West Australia applicable to the case, that of 1893. I am quite clearly of opinion that what was said by the Judicial Committee, as to the effect in law and in business of a distribution of bonus shares, was part of the decision and cannot be distinguished from the present case. Of course it does not bind your Lordships, but I think it ought to be followed by all who do not feel themselves prepared to say that it was wrong and to say clearly why it was wrong. That case did not turn on the special definition of dividend in the Taxing Statute of West Australia." He further said: "Bouch v. Sproud (2) was cited and was considered. The passage in question was an essential part of the decision. It is in point now and I adhere to it. My Lords, no authority has been cited to the contrary of the proposition laid down in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) apart from Bouch v. Sproud (2) and, with all respect to the Court of Appeal, I do not think there is anything in the opinions there expressed which really touches the present case." Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., as he then was, argued the case for the appellants before the Privy Council, and he is recorded to have stated in argument (page 233). "The decisions in cases as between a tenant-for-life and a remainder-man, such as Bouch v. Sproud (2) etc., are not applicable to the case, which depends entirely upon the construction of the Statutes."

delivered by Lord Sumner to Bouch v. Sproud (2), that it was referred to is clear, that it was considered, we have the word of Lord Sumner. But there is nothing in the judgment to show why it was held to be inapplicable. So far as the judgment itself goes, it refers throughout, except for a passage at the very end, to which I shall presently refer, to refer to the Dividend Duties Act of Western Australia, and to the special definition of the word "dividend" therein, and it emphasizes in particular the word "advantage" which forms part of that definition. Lord Sumner said (page 234): "In ordinary language the new shares would not be called a dividend, nor would the allotment of them be a distribution of a dividend. The question in issue here is whether, or not the new shares were a dividend under the Act above mentioned." He then quotes the definition of the word "dividend" and goes on. "The new shares were intended to be and were distributed among the share-holders; they were intended to be and doubtless are advantages to the allottees. The Supreme Court of Western Australia held that they were dividends within the meaning of the Act, and that duty was payable on their amount or value accordingly." Then, after setting forth the argument for the appellants, the judgment goes on (pages 235, 236): "There can be no doubt that the new shares were distributed and were not the same things as the old ones. They certainly were supposed to be advantages to the members of the Company, none-the-less that the making of the issue was probably an advantage to the Company also. In so flourishing a business doubtless they really were advantages." And then comes the passage to which I have referred above: "True, that in a sense it was all one transaction, but that is an ambiguous expression. In business, as in contemplation of law, there were two transactions, the creation and issue of new shares on the Company's part, and on the allottees' part the satisfaction of the liability to pay for them by acquiescing in such a transfer from reserve to share capital as put an end to any participation in the sum of £101,450 in right of the old shares, and created instead a right of general participation in the Company profits and assets in right of the new shares, without any further liability to make a cash contribution in respect of them. In the words of Parker, C. J., 'Had the Company distributed the £101,450 among the share-holders and had the share-holders re-paid such sums to the Company as the price of the 81,160 new shares, the duty on the £101,450 would clearly have been payable. Is not this virtually the effect of what was actually done? I think it is'."

This decision appears to me to be in direct conflict with the decision of the House of Lords in Bouch v. Sproud (2) and the question whether it was a decision based on the special wording of the West Australia Act or not was considered by all the learned Judges who dealt with Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (8). Mr. Justice Rowlatt, in the First Court, referring to it said (page 134): "There it was held that a share-holder receiving bonus shares, as in the present case, was receiving an advantage within the meaning of a highly artificial definition of the word 'dividend' in a Colonial Act notwithstanding that his proportionate interest in the assets of the Company remained the same after the transaction as it had been before. It was further recognized that such advantage was the same as that which he would have received, if he had been paid the bonus in cash and expended it in subscribing for the new shares. Here the question is whether he has been paid, and in my opinion the decision has but little, if any, bearing." In the Court of Appeal [Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (7)] the Master of the Rolls said (pages 864, 865): "I have, however, felt great difficulty about Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) where Lord Sumner, delivering the judgment of Lord Moulton, Lord Parker of Waddington and himself, said that, in a transaction similar to this the shares in ordinary language would not be called a dividend nor would the allotment of them be the distribution of a dividend, but in another part of his judgment, that both in business and in law the shareholder received so much dividend out of undivided profits, and then used it in paying up the new shares. The actual decision was upon the special words of a Colonial Act containing what Rowlatt, J., calls a highly artificial definition of the word "dividend," and the learned Judge distinguished the case on that ground. Lord Sumner also stated that the question turned merely on the construction of a particular Act, and the case may be distinguishable from Bouch v. Sproul (2) on that ground, but I find it very difficult to reconcile the reasoning of the two cases. If, however, they cannot be reconciled, I consider that we are bound to follow Bouch v. Sproul (2). Warrington, L. J., referring to the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) said (pages 670, 671): "The decision itself was on the construction of an Act of Western Australia imposing on a Company declaring a dividend a duty on the amount or value of such dividend and providing that 'dividend' should include . . . " and he then quotes the definition. He goes on: "Obviously, therefore, the question for decision was far away from that in the present case. The discussion, both in argument and in the judgment, was mainly on the question whether there was any 'advantage' to anybody in the mere transfer of accumulated profits to capital and the allotment of shares representing the capital, but at the end the judgment contains the following passage and he then quotes the passage I have quoted. He goes on: "It was admitted in the argument that Bouch v. Sproul (2) and cases of that nature were inapplicable to the case under discussion, and I can hardly think that Lord Sumner intended by the expression he used to express a view of his own or to approve of a view of the Chief Justice which would conflict with that expressed by Lord Herschell in Bouch v. Sproul (2)."

Scrutton, L. J., referring to the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) stated (pages 673, 674-675) "That case turns on the construction of an Australian Act which taxes dividends, defining them as

The Privy Council held bonus shares paid up out of accumulated profits to be dividends under that Act, though saying: "In ordinary language the new shares would not be called a dividend, nor would the allotment of them be the distribution of a dividend." The judgment states that the question is merely the construction of the particular Act, but Lord Sumner treats the transaction as one, both in business and in law, in which the shareholder receives so much dividend out of undivided profits and then uses it in paying up the new shares. This decision, of course, is on another Statute, and is not binding on us, though entitled to the greatest respect. But it is very difficult to reconcile it with the reasoning of a decision which is binding on us, the decision of the House of Lords in Bouch v. Sproul (2). It appears to me that the reasoning of Lord Sumner in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) would have led the House of Lords to a different conclusion. The Privy Council do not state their view of Bouch v. Sproul (2) probably because for some reason, which I do not understand, Counsel for the appellant treated that decision as irrelevant, but the reasonings of the two cases appear to me to be in conflict, and if so, we are bound by the decision of the House of Lords."

In the House of Lords, Viscount Haldane, dealing with the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) stated (page 188): "But the Taxing Statute was couched in very different language. There were expressions in the judgment which may be construed as having gone rather further, and treated the payment made by the Company as equivalent in substance to a payment by the Company to the shareholders, and by them back to the Company. It may have been so, and without a fuller knowledge of the facts in the case and of the local law than the report discloses, it is difficult to be quite sure about the point, but what is clear is that the wide character of the word 'advantages' was primary consideration in what was said by their Lordships who took part in advising His Majesty. I, therefore, do not feel embarrassed by the decision in that case."

Viscount Finlay merely stated (page 199) "I must, however, confess that the reasoning on which the judgment is rested appears to me to be inconsistent with the decision of this House in Bouch v. Sproul (2)."

Viscount Cave stated (page 202) "In Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) it was held that transactions similar to those now in question were, in effect, a declaration of a dividend within the meaning of the Dividend Duties Act, 1902, of Western Australia, and accordingly that duty was payable under that Act. The decision in that case is, no doubt, fully supported by the definition clause in the Western Australian Act, but if it were not for the definition clause the decision would, I think, be inconsistent with the decision in Bouch v. Sproul (2)."

Lord Dunedin merely said (page 206) "In conclusion, I would only add that I have in this opinion of set purpose refrained from relying on the dictum of Lord Sumner delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the Australian case, not because I in any way disagree with it, but because I recognize that if it is in conflict with the necessary grounds of decision in Bouch v. Sproul (2), then as I am sitting in the House I should be bound to follow the latter-mentioned case."

It is thus clear that all the learned Judges who have considered the Privy Council case have held that it is based on a special Act, although there are some remarks of a general character in the judgment. They all also recognize that, if it was not to be explained as being based on a special Act, it would conflict with the decision in Bouch v. Sproul (2), as to which Lord Sumner himself stated (page 219):—

"My Lords, needless to say, I fully accept every thing laid down in Bouch v. Sproul (2), unreservedly, but I think it is only indirectly a decision upon the power of companies to capitalize undistributed profits, and, as regards the steps by which this is or is deemed to be done, it is not a decision at all."

Lord Sumner distinguished Bouch v. Sproul (2), in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1), but, as will be seen from the quotations I have already made, that view was not accepted by any of the other Law Lords.

The only conclusion possible, to my mind, on these judgments, is that the fact that a decision had to be arrived at in Bouch v. Sproul (2) for the purpose of deciding a question between a tenant for life and a remainder-man in no way affected the decision of the general question as to bonus shares in cases similar to the present one—a fact which had to be decided in that case just as much as it had to be decided in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1).

I have given the matter my most careful consideration, and in my opinion the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) need not be taken to be a binding authority on us for the purpose of deciding the present reference, because it was a decision based on the special provisions of a particular Act of Western Australia—an opinion in which I am supported by a very large number of authorities.

The question before us, therefore, has been decided twice by the House of Lords, and in each case it has been held that bonus shares, such as were distributed in this case, are not income, profits or gain, and are not, therefore, liable to super-tax.

There can be no question as to what was the object of the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, and of its shareholders in passing the resolutions and making the large allotments of shares that they did. They were acting in exercise of the powers conferred by their Articles of Association. Their object was to transfer certain sums standing in their Profit and Loss Account and in their reserves to their capital in order thereby to increase their capital and enable them to use that money as capital for a purpose which they had in mind. There was no intention of paying any dividend to the shareholders. In my opinion the transaction must be regarded as a whole, and the obvious intention of the Company, must be taken into account. There never was, and was never intended to be, any payment at all to the share-holders. No amount whatever was taken from the Company or received by the share-holders. Both the Company and the share-holders were merely adopting a means, in accordance with their Articles of Association, for transferring profits to capital; because of the accretion to the capital effected by the resolutions, there had to be an allotment of shares, and the acceptance of the shares was in no sense the acceptance of an income, profit or gain within the meaning of the Income Tax Act.

It has been argued that the whole of these transactions were effected merely for the purpose of enabling the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, Limited, to acquire shares in the Attock Oil Company and that, therefore, the effect of the issue of the bonus shares was really equivalent transfer to the share-holders of share in the Attock Oil Company so as to bring the case within the rule in Pool v. The Guardian Investment Trust Co., Limited (4). I cannot accept this argument at all.

No shares in any other Company were transferred to the share-holders, and, furthermore, we are not concerned with what the Company may do with its increased capital, but only with the effect of adopting this method of increasing its capital.

It was further argued that the resolution directs that a sum be capitalized; that that sum be distributed among the share-holders; and that the Directors be directed to distribute it as bonus shares.

It is pointed out that the language differs somewhat from the language of the resolution in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1). The difference appears to me to be slight, and to be one of language only. In Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) the resolution ran that a bonus at a certain rate be declared, and for the rest, the resolution was the same.

There was, it will be observed, in this case no direction to the Directors to pay any dividend; on the contrary they were directed to distribute the bonus shares, and it, therefore, appears to me to be impossible to hold that, there was in effect, a payment to the share-holders, returned immediately by them to the Company in satisfaction of the bonus shares. There was no option left to the share-holders; they had to take the bonus shares; they could not demand any cash payment.

It is said that they had an option, and they exercised it prior to the passing of the resolution. Of course, they had; but we are not concerned with that but with the question whether they had an option, when the bonus shares were presented to them, of refusing them and demanding instead an equivalent in cash.

It is unnecessary for me to recapitulate the arguments that are given much more ably than I could do in the judgments in the cases I have already referred to.

In my opinion, therefore, the question referred should be answered in the negative.

Heald, J.—Up to the 2nd of June 1921 the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company had an authorised capital of one crore of rupees divided into one lakh of Rs. 100 shares of which 94,380 were issued. On the 18th of May 1921 the Company by special resolution resolved to increase its capital to two crores. That special resolution was confirmed on the 2nd of June 1921, so that thenceforward the authorised capital of the Company was two crores, of which nearly one crore was represented by shares already issued. On the 29th of June 1921 the Company by special resolution resolved to add to its Articles of Association a new article authorising a General Meeting of the Company on the recommendation of the Directors to direct capitalisation of the whole or any part of the profits or reserve funds of the Company by the distribution of paid-up shares of the Company among the holders of the ordinary shares of the Company in proportion to the number of shares held by them and directing the Directors to apply such portion of the profits or reserve funds as may be required for the purpose of making payment in full at par for the shares of the Company so distributed. That resolution was confirmed on the 19th July 1921 and thereafter the Company had power to capitalize its profits or reserve funds by the distribution of shares among its share-holders. On the same date, the 19th of July 1921, the Company resolved to capitalize the sum of 31½ lakhs of rupees out of its reserve fund and to distribute that sum as a bonus free of income-tax amongst the holders of the ordinary shares in proportion to the ordinary shares held by them, and authorised the Directors to distribute amongst the holders of the ordinary shares 31,500 of the unissued Rs. 100 shares, credited as fully paid in the same proportion in satisfaction of such bonus. On the 10th of the October 1921 by an exactly similar resolution the Company resolved to capitalize another 25 lakhs of the reserve fund and to distribute similarly another 25,000 of the unissued shares.

As a result of those resolutions Messrs. Steel Brothers & Company, Limited, received shares in satisfaction of bonus to the amount of Rs. 28½ lakhs, and the question which we have to decide is whether or not those shares represented "income, profit or gains" within the meaning of those words in the Indian Income Tax Act (XI of 1922).

A somewhat similar question was decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1913 in the case of Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3).

That Company, like the Indo-Burma Petroleum Company, resolved to increase its capital, and did increase it by £ 101,450. It then resolved that £ 101,450 out of its reserve fund should be transferred to the share capital account to represent the capital value of the new shares. It also authorised its Directors to allot the new shares pro rata amongst the existing ordinary share-holders of the Company in consideration of the sum of £ 101,450 transferred to the capital account from the reserve fund which, it is to be noted, represented accumulated profits, exactly as it did in the present case. In Western Australia a Dividend Duties Act provided for the levy of a duty on "dividends" and defined or described "dividends" as including "every dividend, profit, advantage, or gain intended to be paid or distributed among any members . . . of any Company."

What, therefore, the Privy Council had to decide was whether or not shares distributed in the same manner and by the same procedure as the shares in this case were a dividend, profit, advantage or gain intended to be paid or credited to or distributed among the share-holders. Their Lordships held that the shares were an "advantage" distributed among the share-holders and were, therefore, liable to the tax. They said: "There can be no doubt that the new shares were distributed and were not the same thing as the old ones. They certainly were supposed to be advantages to the members of the Company."

In so flourishing a business doubtless they really were advantages. The new shares were credited as fully paid, and what is more they were fully paid, for after the allotment the Company held £ 101,450 as capital produced by the issue of those shares and for that consideration, and no longer as an undivided part of its accumulated reserve fund. True, that in a sense it was all one transaction, but that is an ambiguous expression. In business, as in contemplation of law, there were two transactions, the creation and issue of new shares on the Company's part, and on the allottees' part the satisfaction of the liability to pay for them by acquiescing in such a transfer from reserve to share capital as put an end to any participation in the sum of £ 101,450 in right of the old shares, and created instead a right of general participation in the Company's profits and assets in right of the new shares without any further liability to make a cash contribution in respect of them." It was on this reasoning that their Lordships decided that the shares were an "advantage" distributed to the share-holders and so were liable to duty as a "dividend."

But in the case of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1), the House of Lords decided that shares similarly distributed were not income but were an addition to capital and so were not assessable under the English Income Tax (or Super Tax) Acts.

These two decisions can hardly be reconciled and if we follow one of them we are bound to answer the reference in the affirmative while if we follow the other we must answer it in the negative.

The only question to be decided, therefore, is which of them we are to follow.

We are bound to follow the decision of the Privy Council if that decision is applicable to the case before us and we ought to follow the decision of the House of Lords if the decision of the Privy Council is not applicable and that of the House of Lords is.

The House of Lords considered the Privy Council decision, and distinguished it from Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) on the ground as Lord Haldane put it, that it was a decision on a Taxing Statute which was couched in very different language from the English Act which the House was considering. But it must be remembered that the House of Lords was not bound by the decision of the Privy Council while we are bound by it, and I do not think that a mere difference in the purpose for which the decision on the facts is necessary would warrant us in, coming to a decision which was different from that of the Privy Council on the same facts. The purpose of the decision in Bouch v. Sproul (2) was that Lord Herschell himself called the "artificial" division of the enjoyment of property between a tenant-for-life and remainder-man and there were special difficulties in that case, because it was not clear what part of the accumulated profits with which that case was concerned had been earned before the death of the testator. Nevertheless the House of Lords felt itself bound by that decision in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1), which was a decision on a Taxing Statute couched in very different language from the law for division between a tenant-for-life and remainder-man and in which no such difficulties arose. The present case and the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) are both on Taxing Statutes couched in very similar language and although the definition or description of dividend in the Colonial Act may be, as Mr Justice Rowlatt said "highly artificial" the description of "income" in the Indian Income Tax Act is similarly artificial, so that it seems clear that there is a much closer analogy between the present case and the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) than there was between Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) and Bouch v. Sproul (2). If, therefore, in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) the House of Lords felt itself bound to follow Bouch v. Sproul (2) we can hardly avoid the conclusion that in this case we are bound to follow the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) to the full extent to which it goes.

I have considered whether this case can be distinguished from the Privy Council case on the ground that it was not necessary for their Lordships to decide more than that the shares were dividend "intended to be paid or credited or distributed," but it seems clear that what their Lordships decided, on facts which were essentially similar to those of the present case was that the shares were an "advantage" actually distributed to the share-holders, so that if the question which we had to decide in the present case was whether or not the shares represented such "advantages" we could hardly avoid an affirmative answer.

But the word "advantage" does not appear in the provisions of the Income Tax Act which we are considering and, therefore, we have to decide whether the difference in meaning between the words "advantage" and "gains" is such that although the Privy Council has found such shares to be "advantages" we should be justified in finding that they were not "gains."

In Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) Lord Haldane said that it was clear that the wide character of the word "advantages" was a primary consideration in what was said by the Privy Council in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3), and it must be admitted that the meaning of the word "advantage" as used in the Australian Dividend Duties Act was probably wider than that of the word "gain" as used in the same Act.

I have little doubt that the meaning to be attached to the word "gains" in the Income Tax Act is to some extent artificial since it could hardly be read as including what might be called intangible gains.

Webster's Dictionary defines "gains," as "profits in the form of sums of money or acquired assets arising from business transactions or dealings" and although it is possible that in the Income Tax Act "gains" are not restricted to business profits, I think, that they must be restricted to "profits in the form of money or acquired assets."

I think, therefore, that it does not follow that because the Privy Council found that shares distributed in the same way as the shares in this case were distributed were "advantages" to the share-holders, we are bound to find that they represented "gains." If the matter had been res integra I should, I must admit, have felt justified in going a step further than the Privy Council actually went in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) and in finding on the reasoning of the Privy Council in that case that the shares in this case represented not only "advantages" but actual "gains" received by Messrs Steel Brothers and Company, Limited, but I feel that I am precluded, by the decision of the House of Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) from taking that further step and that in accordance with the decision of the House of Lords I must hold that the shares did not represent "gains" within the meaning of the Indian Income Tax Act.

I would accordingly answer the reference by saying that in my opinion the transactions mentioned in the Order of Reference did not involve the receipt by Messrs. Steel Brothers and Company of "income profits or gains" within the meaning of section (2) (15) and section 12 of the Indian Income Tax Act or within the meaning of "total income" in section 16 of the Act.

Beasley, J.—In my opinion the only point to be considered on the question referred to us is whether we are bound by the decision of the Privy Council in the case of the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) or whether we can and ought to follow the judgment of the House of Lords in the Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1).

The facts in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) are identical with those in the case before us and the facts in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) are very similar, but the Taxing Statute, viz, the Dividend Duties Amendment Act, 1906, of Western Australia, is differently worded to the Taxing Statutes both in India and in England, and the question is whether the decision of the Privy Council was a decision based upon the construction of that particular Act, or whether it was of wider and more general application. In the latter case undoubtedly we are bound by that decision, but in the former case we are not bound by it and can, and in my opinion ought to follow the decision of the House of Lords in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1).

According to the report of the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) the whole of the argument of Sir Robert Finlay, for the appellants, which appears on page 233 of the report, was directed to and concentrated upon that particular Taxing Statute and the Statute it amended; and when Lord Sumner delivered the judgment of the Privy Council on page 234, he stated as follows: "The question in issue here is whether or not the new shares were a dividend under the Act above-mentioned" (The Dividend Duties Amendment Act of 1902 of Western Australia.) "If they were, dividend duty was and is payable and the judgment appealed against was right. Section 2 of the Act defines, or rather describes the word 'dividend' as used in the Act, as including, 'every profit, advantage, or gain intended to be paid or credited to or distributed among the members of any Company'." And with the exception of the last few lines of Lord Sumner's judgment, the remainder of it discusses throughout the question as to whether or not this allotment of bonus shares was an advantage to the members of the Company and, therefore, assessable to income-tax.

Upon reading the report of the argument and the judgment in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) I am of the opinion that the decision of the Privy Council was based upon the construction of the particular Taxing Statute, and, when the expressed opinions of the eminent Judges and Law Lords who considered Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) are referred to will be seen that with the exception of Viscount Finlay, who expressed no opinion on this point and Lord Sumner who very definitely was of the contrary opinion, all of them, Rowlatt, J., in the King's Bench Division, in the Court of Appeal, Lord Sterndale, M. R., and Warrington and Scrutton, L. J., and in the House of Lords, Viscounts Haldane and Cave and Lord Dunedin, took to the view that the decision in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) was a decision upon the particular Taxing Statute of Western Australia.

In the King's Bench Division, Rowlatt, J., thus states his opinion with reference to the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (6) on page 134.—"There it was held that a share-holder receiving bonus shares, as in the present case, was receiving an advantage within the meaning of a highly artificial definition of the word 'dividend' in a Colonial Act notwithstanding that his proportionate interest in the assets of the Company remained the same after the transaction as it had been before." And then Rowlatt, J., stated that in his opinion the decision of the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) had little, if any, bearing upon Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1).

In the Court of Appeal, the Master of the Rolls in the course of his judgment on page 684, stated:—"The actual decision was upon the special words of a Colonial Act containing what Rowlatt, J., calls a highly artificial definition of the word 'dividend' and the learned Judge distinguished the case on that ground."

Warrington, L. J., on page 670, stated that "The decision itself was on the construction of an Act of Western Australia imposing on a Company declaring a dividend a duty on the amount or value of such dividend..." Later on he said: "Obviously, therefore, the question for decision was far away from that in the present case." And Lord Justice Scrutton, on page 673, stated that, "That case turns on the construction of an Australian Act which taxes 'dividends'.... The judgment states that the question is merely the construction of the particular Act.... This decision, of course, is on another Statute and is not binding on us, though entitled to the greatest respect."

In the House of Lords, Viscount Haldane, in commenting upon the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (2) expressed a very definite opinion that it had no bearing upon Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) because on page 188 he stated that the Taxing Statute was couched in very different language and after some observations upon his requiring a fuller knowledge of the facts of the case and of the local law he further stated, "but what is clear is that the wide character of the word 'advantages' was a primary consideration in what was said by their Lordships who took part in advising His Majesty. I, therefore, do not feel embarrassed by the decision in that case."

Viscount Cave in dealing with the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) on page 202 of the report stated that "the decision in that case is no doubt fully supported by the definition clause in the Western Australia Act; but if it were not for the definition clause the decision would, I think, be inconsistent with the decision in Bouch v. Sproul (2)." And Lord Dunedin on page 203 stated as follows—"I may say at once that I do not feel that the case is concluded by a decision. Swan Brewery Company v. King (3) was a decision upon an Australian Statute in the words of which if anything became 'an advantage' it would fall within the tax." In the House of Lords, their Lordships, with the exception of Lords Dunedin and Sumner took the view that the decision in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (2) would be inconsistent with the decision in Bouch v. Sproul (2) were it not for the definition clause in the Western Australia Act; and in the Court of Appeal Lord Justice Warrington was of the opinion that Lord Sumner, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, did not intend to express any opinion in conflict with Bouch v. Sproud (2) because, he stated "I can hardly think that Lord Sumner intended by the expressions he used to express a view of his own or to approve of a view of the Chief Justice which would conflict with that expressed by Lord Herschell in Bouch v. Sproud (2)."

From the judgment in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) itself and from the judgments of the Judges and the Law Lords who had to consider the bearing of the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) upon Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1), I am clearly of the opinion that we need not follow the decision in the Swan Brewery Co. v. King (3) it being a decision upon a particular act and not of general application. That being so, we are not embarrassed in considering whether we can follow Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1). The facts in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) are identical with those in this case and the Taxing Statutes are similarly worded. By a majority in the House of Lords it has been held that such an allotment of bonus shares to the members of a Company does not render the shares so allotted liable to be assessed for super-tax inasmuch as they are not a part of income but are an addition to capital. In my opinion, we ought to follow the decision in Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Blott (1) and I would, therefore, answer the question referred to us in the negative.

When a relationship of agent and principal exists between two persons and the agent enters into a contract for purchase of goods on behalf of his principal, property in the goods bought does not pass to the agent as against the principal.

Therefore, where goods purchased by an agent on behalf of his principal are destroyed by fire, the principal and not the agent must bear the loss.

JUDGMENT.

Walmsley, J.—The plaintiffs who are the appellants sued the defendants for a sum of Rs. 663 as due on Arat accounts for business done by them as agents for the defendants.

It is common ground that the plaintiffs were employed by the defendants as agents for buying various goods.

The dispute has arisen between them because a fire broke out after some goods had been bought for the defendants by the plaintiffs, and practically the question is whether the plaintiffs or the defendants are to bear the loss. The decision of the lower Court is that it is the plaintiffs who must bear the loss, and it is against that decision that the plaintiffs appeal.

It appears to me that both the Courts below have fallen into error in their conception of the agent's position. Both take the view that there is a time at which the property in the goods bought by the agent for the principal vests in the agent. The learned Judge speaks of the plaintiffs as commission agents who re-sell the goods to the defendants. This view, the learned Pleader for the respondents, admits, goes too far.

The error is probably due to the fact that the plaintiffs made allegations about a representative of the defendants being present at the time of purchase and about the method of delivery to the defendants. Connected with the latter allegation was an answer elicited from plaintiffs' witness about property passing to the defendants when the goods were put in sacks provided by the defendants. The question must have been put in the belief that the matters referred to in section 18 of Sale of Goods Act had something to do with the relation between the parties.

It appears to me that those allegations in the plaint have nothing to do with the question, and that the failure of the plaintiffs to prove their allegations does their case no harm. They were admittedly employed as agents and it is contrary to the whole idea of the relation between agent and principal to hold that property passes to the agent as against the principal. An attempt has been made to support such a view by reference to the case of Ireland v. Livingstone (1) but that was a case of a merchant in one country, and a commission agent in another, and the passage to which reference is made must be read with due regard to the words of limitation which it contains.

Apart, however, from the law as contained in the Contract Act, I think that the defendants are bound by the statement contained in the fourth paragraph of their written statement. They deliberately charged the plaintiffs with telling a false story about the fire, with a view to taking advantage of a rising market and selling goods which belonged to the defendants. It is said that this statement was made to meet the hypothetical case that the property in the goods had passed to the defendants, but in my opinion, it is impossible to put that construction on the paragraph.

Lastly, an attempt was made to justify the decision of the lower Courts on the ground that the plaintiffs were guilty of negligence. It appears however that the plaintiffs were not guilty of any act or omission which could be regarded as negligent.

In my judgment, the Courts below were wrong and the appeal must be allowed, and the suit decreed in full with costs in all Courts.

Mukerji, J.—I agree and wish to add only a few words. The contract in the present case was essentially one of agency and the findings of the Courts below as to purchase of the goods by the plaintiffs to the order of the defendants clearly show that in the present case they acted as commission agents on behalf of the latter. The views of the respective liabilities of the parties taken by the Courts below are to my mind wrong, the Court of first instance having laid too much stress upon the stray statement of a witness for the plaintiffs about the property in the goods passing to the defendants when the goods are put into sacks supplied by the latter, and the lower Appellate Court having introduced into its consideration a theory of re-sale by the plaintiffs to the defendants after making the purchase to the order of the latter. The former is an opinion on a question of legal liability which should not form the basis of the Court's decision and the latter is based upon a misconception of the relations between the parties. In support of the latter view, reliance has been placed upon a dictum of Lord Blackburn in Ireland v. Livingstone (1) which is in these words: "It is quite true that the agent who in thus executing an order, ships goods to his principal is in contemplation of law a vendor to him. The persons who supply goods to a commission merchant sell them to him, and not to his unknown foreign correspondent, and the commission merchant has no authority to pledge the credit of his correspondent for them, and just so does the property in the goods pass from the country producer to the commission merchant, and then, when the goods are shipped, from the commission merchant to his consignee. And the legal effect of the transaction between the commission merchant and the consignee, who has given him the order, is a contract of sale passing the property from the one to the other, and consequently the commission merchant is a vendor, and has the right of one as to stoppage in transitu. These observations define the relations between the commission agent and his foreign correspondent and proceed upon an appreciation of the difficulty which would exist in establishing any privity of contract between the foreign correspondent and the original vendors. In his work on contract, on Sale Lord Blackburn reviews the cases of Feise v. Wray (2), Stiffken v. Wray (3) and Tucker v. Humphrey (4), and says that the same conclusion follows from them in respect of a factor acting for a foreign correspondent and purchasing goods in his own name. In Turner v. Liverpool Docks (5) it was assumed that the relation of vendor and purchaser existed between the foreign commission merchant and his principal in England. Story in his work on Agency in like manner treats a factor in a foreign country who purchases goods on his own credit for his principal and ships them to the latter as one having the rights and remedies and being in the same predicament as a vendor of the goods. This dictum of Lord Blackburn was explained in the case of Cassabougu v. Gibbs (6). In that case Brett, M. R., observed as follows: "Lord Blackburn has not said that as long as the contract of principal and agent is executory the principal can sue the agent and make him pay as though the contract were that of vendor and purchaser. He has considered the point with reference to two matters, one with regard to the theory of passing the property in the goods, and the other as to the power of stopping the goods in transitu, and as to these two matters, he has said with reference to the first of them, that if a foreign commission agent has purchased the goods which he was ordered to purchase, and has put them on board, consigned to his principal, by that appropriation the property in the goods passed from the commission agent to the principal as if such agent were a vendor. Then as regards the power to stop in transitu Lord Blackburn has said that if the commission agent abroad is bound to pay for the goods to the foreign seller of whom he bought them, and after he has shipped them to his principal, such agent has not been paid, and his principal is insolvent, so that the foreign seller could only have the agent to look to for payment, the Courts have held that such agent may stop the goods in transitu as if he were a vendor, or in the position of a vendor. These observations make it clear that even in the case of foreign correspondent, the contract remains a contract of agency, and only for certain purposes he was to be treated as a vendor or as one in the position of a vendor. In this connection the remarks of Fry, L. J., in that case are worth quoting, as they clearly summarise the position. He observed as follows:—"Now as to the first of these grounds, was there such a contract (meaning such a contract as created the relation between a vendor and a purchaser)? Was the contract of principal and agent merged into that of vendor and purchaser? This must be a question of fact, and as a matter of fact there was no such contract. It is said, for two reasons, first, because otherwise the property in the goods would not pass to the English merchant for whom the agent abroad bought them. In my judgment the property would pass. If the article was specific it would pass by the purchase, and if not specific, but was appropriated by the agent for his principal, it would pass by virtue of the appropriation. The other reason for inferring the relation of vendor and purchaser was said to be because the foreign agent who has bought for his principal has the right of stoppage in transitu, but that, in my opinion, is no reason for such inference." After dealing the cases of Lickbarrow v.

LECUN V. LECUN.

Mason (7) and other cases where the right to stop in transitu has been allowed without the relationship of vendor and purchaser existing, and where it was held that even an agent, who puts the goods on board is able to exercise that right being in the same condition as if he had been an ordinary unpaid vendor; Fry, L. J., referred to the case of Ireland v. Livingstone (1) and observed as follows:—"Then in the case of Ireland v. Livingstone (5) Cleasby, B., says that there was 'there not a mere contract between vendor and purchaser although after the goods were shipped a relation like that of vendor and vendee might arise.' No doubt in that case Lord Blackburn uses stronger language, and says that the legal effect of the transaction is a contract of sale passing the property from the one to the other, and consequently the commission merchant is a vendor and has the right of one as to stoppage in transitu; but by the legal effect of the transaction, he means the legal effect of an analogous contract, to that of a contract of purchase and sale. It is important also to observe that Lord Chelmsford in that case puts the matter so as to exclude the existence of any contract of purchase and sale. He says 'I would preface what I have to say by stating my opinion that the question is to be regarded as one between principal and agent though the plaintiffs might in some respects be looked upon as vendors to the defendants, so as to give them a right of stoppage in transitu.' Therefore, in such a case as the present there is in fact no contract of a vendor and purchaser."

LECUN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

LECUN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Benami transactions—Transfer of property by Anglo-Indians—Presumption of advancement, whether arises—Documents, executed in solemn form, interpretation of—Courts, duty of, in interpreting—Gift—Subsequent acts, whether relevant.

There is no widespread and persistent usage and practice among Anglo-Indians in Burma of transferring land benami without any intention of transferring the beneficial ownership in the way there is amongst Hindus and Muhammadans. [p. 690, col. 1.]

The presumption of advancement arises in the case of a transfer of land made by a registered deed by an Anglo-Indian husband to his Anglo-Indian wife [ibid].

In cases of transfers of land to wives or children without any intention of conferring on them the beneficial ownership, not only race, place of birth, domicile or residence have to be taken into consideration, but widespread and persistent usages and practices of executing such documents have also to be depended upon. [p. 690, col. 2.]

It is necessary that Courts should regard documents executed in a solemn form as primarily expressing the intention of the executant according to their tenor and evidence of strong motive should be forthcoming for acting with an intention contrary to that which the document indicates. [p. 690, col. 2.]

It is not only acts and conduct at, or about the time of a deed of gift that are relevant but the evidence of subsequent act and conduct is also admissible. [p. 691, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the High Court (Rutledge, J.,) passed in its Original Civil Jurisdiction, in O. R. S. No. 172 of 1923.

Messrs. Higinbotham and Villa, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent, Mrs. Lecun, against her husband defendant-appellant for possession of a house which had been gifted to her by her husband in 1908. It is necessary for the purposes of our decision to set out the facts in some detail.

Appellant was originally in the Public Works Department, but owing to his superior not approving certain measure, ments in a contract which he had passed, he was dismissed and set up a business on his own account. He obtained a valuable contract from the Burma Rice and Trading Company to erect for them a mill at Bassein. In 1904 he bought a piece of land in Rangoon and for the purchase price or part of it he executed a mortgage on the land in favour of the vendor. In the year 1906-1907 he built a house on part of this land. In the latter year he paid off the vendor's mortgage borrowing money from one Ma Ma Gyi to do so. To her he gave a mortgage on the house and land. He had a dispute with one of his sub-contractors, and on the 6th April 1907 this man filed a suit against him for Rs 16,000 odd. Appellant then paid into Court Rs. 5,749 and joined issue as to the balance. The sub-contractor attached the money due to him by the Burma Rice and Trading Company; but appellant gave security and got the attachment removed. While that suit was pending he married the respondent on the 3rd of June 1908. He alleges that acting under advice he paid off Ma Ma Gyi's mortgage with money that he had, and fearing that the same sub-contractor in execution of the decree that he was likely to get might attach this house, he decided to put it in his wife's name; and to that end in order to save his property from the risk of attachment he executed a deed of gift dated the 23rd of June 1908 in favour of his wife. The parties lived in this house and have done so all along until the disputes arose which led to a separation and to the bringing of the present suit. On the 4th of September 1908 part of the site originally bought was sold to Sir A. Jamal by Exhibit C for Rs. 7,500. The deed of sale was executed by the respondent as vendor. Both parties claimed to have taken the purchase money. Two other bits of this land were sold in the same or the next year to Messrs. Burjorjee and Vertannes, but the deeds of conveyance have not been produced, nor have any certified copies of them. It has not been proved whether these two sales took place before the marriage or after, though it seems more than probable that they were after the marriage. There was in 1911 a boundary dispute between Messrs. Lecun and Burjorjee. Appellant naturally negotiated the sales and gave instructions in respect of the boundary dispute. Judgment was delivered in the sub-contractor's suit on the 8th of March 1909 and a decree passed for Rs 595 and costs in his favour in addition to the sum paid into Court by appellant. The decree was confirmed on appeal, and the 20th of March 1911 appellant paid the decretal amount. To do this he raised money from his wife's uncle who had been his Counsel in this case. The title deeds of the property were handed over to him and pro-notes executed by both the husband and wife for the amount advanced. Those pro-notes had been renewed from time to time; they were last renewed on the 25th of October 1921 for Rs. 13,500.

After living happily together until 1922 various differences arose between the husband and wife. She found letters of a compromising character written by a lady, who had been living with them, to her husband. Appellant had apparently been told by this lady that his wife was misconducting herself with one Lambert and he taxed her with it. She strenuously denied it and brought a counter-charge against him with reference to the other lady. On the 26th of July 1922 she left him and went to her mother's house. On the 27th of July there was a meeting between the husband and wife. There appears to have been some sort of settlement arrived at by which appellant was to take his wife back, and she was to execute a document transferring to her children this house or a document by which she was to be trustee for her children. However, on the next day her husband sent Lambert to the house having heard from him a confession of his misconduct with the respondent. He followed and confronted his wife with Lambert. Lambert admitted the misconduct, but his wife denied it, and there was evidently a stormy interview. On the 29th of July respondent wrote a letter to appellant expressing her disappointment that he had not come the previous day and taken her back as he had promised to do on certain conditions, the chief of which was that the children were to have shares in the house. Appellant had had a document prepared for execution by his wife which sets out that the husband was absolutely entitled to the land and buildings, the subject of the gift of the 23rd of June 1903 in favour of the wife, and that the property had been held by her in trust for her husband during his life time and upon his death for the benefit of his children. The document then declares the trust as set out above in favour of the husband and three children who were named. . . . these three to take the property after the husband's death in such shares as may be directed by the Will of her husband. Respondent refused to execute such a document. She would not apparently agree to the allegation that she had all along held the property in trust for her husband and she did not approve of the house going to the three children then living as she was in the family way, and that child ought also to share. Apparently appellant was not satisfied that he was the father of that child; but, whatever the reasons may be, all these negotiations fell through. On the 17th of August appellant's Counsel wrote to her a letter calling upon her to acknowledge that she was merely a benamidar in respect of the property in suit and requesting her to fix a date when she would execute a conveyance of the property in favour of her husband. No answer was sent to this letter, and on the 7th of February 1923 respondent wrote through her Counsel calling upon appellant to deliver possession of the house to her. The present suit was then filed by the wife for possession by ejectment, if necessary, and for mesne profits. Plaintiff respondent bases her claim on the deed of gift of the 23rd June 1903. She had been in possession of the house, living there with her husband ever since, and it is urged on her behalf that the parties being Anglo-Indians, the same exception to the general rule as regards resulting trusts applied in this case as it would in the case of Europeans under the law as administered by the Court of Chancery at Home. It is urged that the prima facie presumption is that this property was gifted to her by way of advancement, and that the onus lies on the appellant to establish that that was not his intention at the time the deed was executed.

For the appellant it is urged that the general law in India is the same as the general law in England as regards resulting trusts; and that, having regard to the facts as regards the nationality or race, domicile and residence of the parties, the presumption of advancement does not apply, but that, on the contrary, the primary presumption is that the gift was made benami without any intention of transferring the beneficial ownership to the respondent.

Reliance is placed on the facts set out at the beginning of this judgment which occurred at the time the deed was executed. Further, reliance is placed on the facts that throughout appellant has been dealing with the property as owner, exercising all those rights that he would exercise if he had never ceased to be the beneficial owner of it. Lastly, reliance is placed on the happening on the 26th of July 1922 and the following days.

There is little doubt as to the law in respect of resulting trusts and the presumption of advancement in India. As regards Hindus, the law has been laid down in the case of Gopeekrust Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (1), and in respect of Muhammadans in the case of Moulne Sayyud Uzhur Ali v. Beebee Ultaf Fatima (2). The same rules have been held to apply in the case of Burmans in Meerappa Chetty v. Maung Ba Bu (3).

LEOUN v. LECUN.

As regards this last case we desire to express no opinion at present. It may be necessary to give this question of law further consideration in the case of Burman Buddhists; but the two former cases are decisions by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In the case of Europeans who had been born and had a permanent residence in India, the law has also been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kerwick v. Kerwick (4). Lord Atkinson in delivering the judgment of their Lordships said: "The general rule and principle of the Indian Law as to resulting trusts differs but little, if at all, from the general rule of English Law upon the same subject, but in their Lordships' view it has been established by the decisions in the case of Gopeelkrish Gosain v. Gungapersaud Gosain (1) and Maulvi Sayyad Uzhur Ali v. Utaf Fatima (2) that owing to the widespread and persistent practice which prevails amongst the natives of India, whether Muhammadans or Hindus, for owners of property to make grants and transfers of it benami for no obvious reason or apparent purpose, without the slightest intention of vesting in the donee any beneficial interest in the property granted or transferred, as well as the usages which these natives have adopted and which have been protected by Statute, no exception has ever been engrafted on the general law of India negating the presumption of the resulting trust in favour of the person providing the purchase money, such as has, by the Courts of Chancery in the exercise of their equitable jurisdiction, been engrafted on the corresponding law in England in those cases where a husband or father pays the money and the purchase is taken in the name of a wife or child. In such a case there is, under the general law in India, no presumption of an intended advancement as there is in England. The question which of the two principles of law is to be applied to a transaction such as the present which takes place between two persons, born in India of British parents, and who have resided practically all their lives in India is of general importance." It was further stated: "It is a mistake to suppose that according to the cases already cited in determining which rule of law is in any given case to apply in India entirely depended on race, place of birth, domicile or residence. These were not to be treated as constituting per se as decisive. What were treated as infinitely more important were the widespread and persistent usages and practices of the native inhabitants." Their Lordships then held that the presumption of advancement did apply in the case with which they were dealing. In that case the parties were of pure European descent, though both had been born in India and had resided in the East ever since. Whether the same presumption arises in the case of Anglo-Indians of the descent of the parties in this suit is the first point we have to decide. It is clear that race, place of birth, domicile or residence are all matters to be taken into consideration, but they are not the only grounds on which a decision must be based and indeed the more important grounds are widespread and persistent usages and practices of executing documents benami to transfer lands to wives or children without any intention of conferring on them the beneficial ownership. Even if the presumption be held to arise, it would be open to the party against whom that presumption is made to rebut it and show what the intention of the donor or transferor was at the time the transfer was made. In Kerwick v. Kerwick (4) after examining the facts which are all of the same character as those we have before us in this case, their Lordships held that the husband had rebutted the presumption, and the decision is of the utmost value in dealing with the facts that arise in the present suit.

Appellant's father was a Frenchman and his mother an Anglo-Indian lady; her father was an Anglo-Indian and her mother a Burmese lady Respondent's father was an Englishman, her mother an Anglo-Indian, and her maternal grandmother a Shan lady So far, therefore, as the respondent is concerned, and so far as descent governs the matter there is good reason for holding that the presumption of advancement will arise. Appellant must be described as an Anglo-Indian. Both appellant and respondent were born in Burma; they have always lived here; they were educated here, and they are by religion Raman Catholic They follow English customs as regards dress and manner of living No evidence has been given, and we are not prepared to hold that there is any widespread and persistent usage and practice amongst Anglo-Indians in Burma of transferring lands benami in the way there is amongst Hindus and Muhammadans. Some of them may at times resort to such a practice with a fraudulent attempt to save property from the hands of creditors, but we have no ground for holding that there is any such common practice prevailing as a common rule for all general purposes The rule, therefore, which, in our opinion, is to be applied in the present case, is that the presumption of advancement arises in this suit It is a rule which, having regard, to the status of the parties, would be, in our opinion, a rule of equity and good conscience.

This being our finding the further question remains whether the appellant has succeeded in establishing that, at the time he made this deed of gift in favour of his wife, he had no intention of parting with the beneficial ownership, and that he intended her to be merely a trustee for himself. His own bare statement that this was his intention advances his case little, if at all. It is a statement which he was bound to make and which so vitally affects his interests that it must be received with the utmost caution, and all the more so, as the appellant has shown that he is not the person whose allegations and motives can be readily accepted Such a statement was held by their Lordships in Kerwick v Kerwick (4) to be of little avail, unless he establishes at the same time with reasonable clearness that he had other and different motives for the action he took.

At the time this deed of gift was made appellant had but one creditor, the sub-contractor, to whom he had to pay at most Rs 5,000 over and above the amount he had already paid into Court. He had at that time apparently some Rs 18,000 in cash The property was mortgaged for an amount practically equal to that sum, and that, when he had to pay the decretal amount, he was able without difficulty to borrow the money from a relation shows that he could have had but little fear of the attachment and sale of the house, if he had still kept it in his own name This is further shown by the fact that he preferred to use his ready money in redeeming the mortgage. Appellant was at that time a man of about 35 years of age or so. It is clear that he fell much in love with respondent who was then 18 or 19. He gave her jewellery worth, it is said, Rs. 5,000 or thereabouts, but it is urged, that by this deed of gift he deprived himself of every scrap of property he possessed in the world. He had this contract, and he knew that the use and benefit of the house would still be his even if he transferred the real ownership to his wife. It is necessary that the Courts should regard documents executed in a solemn form as primarily expressing the intention of the executant according to their tenor, and it is, therefore, clearly necessary that ordinarily speaking, evidence should be forthcoming of a strong motive for acting with an intention contrary to that which the document indicates; and in addition to that there is in this particular case a presumption of advancement. We are unable, therefore, to hold that any such strong motive has been established in this case, as it must be established, if we are to go against the express terms of the document Moreover, all fear of any action on the part of the sub-contractor had passed away when his decree was satisfied on the 20th of March 1911. It is not shown that thereafter appellant was in any fear of creditors, or had any motive in allowing the position created by the deed of gift to continue, and yet he never sought for 11 years to alter that position.

in the slightest degree, and it was not until the trouble arose between his wife and himself that he ever put forward any claim or contested the validity of the deed of gift. It was not an unnatural act on the part of a man marrying a girl very much younger than himself with whom he was infatuated, and it was a right and proper thing for him to have done to make provision for his wife at an early date in their married life. This, we hold, was the motive which led him to execute the deed of gift.

It has been urged that he sold the various strips of land and took the purchase price for his own use, although the money really belonged to his wife. It is urged that he spent a large sum of money, according to him some Rs. 26,000 on additions, improvements and repairs to the house. It is said that he always paid the rates and taxes; that he installed electric light at his own expense; and that he has throughout exercised acts of ownership, whereas the wife has never done so. In reply, it is urged that it is only acts and conduct at or about the time of the deed of gift that are relevant and that evidence of subsequent acts and conduct is inadmissible. That may be so in England, but we do not think that this evidence is inadmissible in India, and similar acts were considered by their Lordships in Kerwick v. Kerwick (4). But we do not think that any of these acts avail to any extent to establish the proposition, the burden of which is on the appellant. He was living happily with his wife in this house, and he spent large sums in repairs and improvements. The ordinary presumption as to those would be that, if the gift had been by way of advancement, these expenditures would also have been by way of advancement. His negotiation of the sales of the lands is referred to, but the transfers were executed by his wife, and it is to be noted that, when money was borrowed to pay off the decree from her uncle, she also executed the promissory note in his favour. Lastly, the events that occurred after she had left appellant's house are relied on. At that time, the feelings of the parties towards each other were very embittered, and we are unable to see in their acts and conduct at that time anything that lends great support to the appellant's case. She was charged with adultery, and the alleged adulterer was admitting misconduct. She was anxious to be reconciled to her husband on this account and for the sake of the children. The parties were Roman Catholics and their religion forbade a divorce. She might well agree to execute a document transferring this property for the benefit of the children without being taken thereby, to admit that she had never had any ownership in it. When Exhibit 4 was put to her, a document whereby her rights in the property were denied, she strenuously refused to execute it.

On a consideration of all the facts and circumstances in this case we hold that the presumption of advancement arises and that the appellant has failed to rebut that presumption. The decree of the Court below was correct and will be confirmed; and this appeal will stand dismissed with costs throughout. We certify for two Counsels. We further direct that this decree be not executed for one month on the appellant undertaking to vacate the premises within that time and provided further that he pay into Court the Rs. 200 per mensem; he was ordered to pay as rent which he has not yet done, within one week.

JUDGMENT.

Pullan, A. J. C.—These two appeals arise from a dispute as to the succession to the property of one Muhammad Ali Beg who died in the year 1908. At the time of the annexation of Oudh in 1856, this property, which is known as the Aurangabad taluka was in the possession of Ali Bahadur with whom the first summary settlement was made by the British Government. During the Mutiny, Ali Bahadur died, and the second summary settlement in 1859 was made with his nephew, Agha Jan. It was the policy of the British Government to confirm the so-called talukdars in possession of their estates and to establish as far as possible the rule of single heir succession. Letters were issued to all the talukdars who were asked to confirm in writing their family customs and in accordance with their replies the lists which form part of Act I of 1896 were compiled. Agha Jan declared that in his family there was a custom of gaddi-nashini, that the estate was impartible and that the eldest son succeeded. Accordingly Agha Jan's name was entered in lists Nos. 1 and 2 prepared under clause (8) of Act I of

ABADI BEGAM v. AHMAD MIRZA BEG.

1869 and he also received what was known as a primogeniture sanad. Agha Jan's eldest son died five days before his father on the 13th of June 1875. Under section 22 of Act I of 1869 Agha Jan should have been succeeded by his grandson Hamid Mirza who was then a boy of eight. Muhammad Ali Beg who has the eldest surviving son of Agha Jan took possession of the property and was confirmed in his possession by Government. When many years later a suit was brought by Hamid Mirza Beg it was held by a Bench of this Court that Muhammad Ali Beg was entitled to the property in virtue of the declaration made by his father that his eldest son should succeed in accordance with the family custom. The Judicial Commissioners held that this declaration of Agha Jan must be construed as a Will in favour of Muhammad Ali Beg which had the effect of transferring the estate. In 1908 Muhammad Ali Beg died. Five persons claimed to be in possession of the property and applied for mutation. These were Ahmad Mirza brother of Muhammad Ali Beg, Abadi Begam his daughter, Achchi Begam his widow and Amir Mirza and Hamid Mirza his brother's sons. In the course of the proceedings Ahmad Mirza, Amir Mirza and Hamid Mirza came to an agreement and mutation was effected in their favour. Simultaneously an order was passed by a Criminal Court, which had cognizance of the dispute under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure putting these persons in possession and directing the other parties to have recourse to the Civil Courts. Subsequently Abadi Begam has fought out two suits with Ahmad Mirza, one for her dower debt and one for possession of the property which she inherited from her mother. She did not, however, lay claim to the estate left by Muhammad Ali Beg until August 1918 when she filed the present suit. Abadi Begam claims in the alternative either that the property should be dealt with under Muhammadan Law in which case she is entitled to one half or that the property should be held to be an impartible estate and that she as the nearest heir of her father is entitled to the whole. Musammam Akbari Begam, the sister of Muhammad Ali Beg, and, therefore, the aunt as well as the mother-in-law of Abadi Begam merely claims her one-sixth share under the Muhammadan Law.

The Subordinate Judge found that the suit of Abadi Begam was barred by limitation, as under Art 47, Schedule I of the the Limitation Act it should have been filed within three years of the Magistrate's order passed in the proceedings under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure on the 14th of July 1909. He has also found that the property left by Muhammad Ali Beg is governed by Muhammadan Law subject to a family custom of single heir succession and that there is a further family custom excluding females from inheritance.

The burden of proving that the case of Abadi Begam was barred by limitation was laid by the lower Court on the defendants. This decision is contested but the reasons given by the lower Court are sound. The plaintiff stated that her claim was within the twelve years period of limitation allowed for such suits and it was no part of her case that there was any decision by a Criminal or other Court which could in any way affect her claim. This case was set up by the defendants in their written statements and it was primarily for them to show that there was a decision of a Criminal Court which brought the plaintiff's claim under any other rule of limitation than that on which the plaintiff relied. It is now conceded that Abadi Begam was a party to certain proceedings taken under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure after her father's death, and that the Magistrate concluded those proceedings by passing an order putting Ahmad Mirza, Hamid Mirza and Amir Mirza into possession of the property and directing Abadi Begam to go to the Civil Court. Prima facie these facts bear out the defendant's plea that Art. 47, Schedule I of the Limitation Act applies to the claim of Abadi Begam and that it is, therefore, barred by time. The appellant has endeavoured to show that for certain reasons the Magistrate's order is not binding upon her. This can only be done by showing that the proceedings or at any rate the final order, were without jurisdiction, and so it has been argued first that the proceedings were not properly initiated and secondly that the finding was invalid. Many of the rulings on which the learned Counsel for the appellant relies are those of Courts sitting on the criminal side and such rulings must be followed with caution by a Civil Court which is only considering the effect of certain proceedings on the question of limitation. As to the initiation of proceedings it is clear that in the first instance the Police reported that there was danger of a breach of the peace between the three male claimants to the estate, but when the Magistrate took up the case he decided that it was rather a case for section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure than section 107 and finding that Abadi Begam and her step-mother Achchi Begam were also claiming the property he included them in the proceedings. Whether he considered that these ladies were likely to commit a breach of the peace or not does not appear from the record which has been weeded. There are no doubt rulings of the Calcutta High Court on the criminal side to the effect that an apprehension of a breach of the peace is essential before a Court has jurisdiction to take proceedings under section 105 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and that where such apprehension ceases jurisdiction also ceases. I refer to the rulings reported as Siv Narayan Mukherjee v Satish Chandra Ghosal (1), Muhammad Khandu Sarkar v. Sadaq Ali Sheikh, (2). On the other hand it was laid down in a Full Bench ruling of the Calcutta High Court, Krishna Kamini v. Abdul Jabbar (3), that the words "parties concerned in such dispute" are intended to indicate all persons claiming to be in possession and that the proceedings are not without jurisdiction merely because some of those parties are not likely to cause a breach of the peace. The Magistrate, therefore, acted within jurisdiction when he made the two ladies parties. It is also contended that he committed a formal irregularity in the matter of drawing up the order required by section 145 (1) but the bulk of authority shows that such formal defect would not affect the Magistrate's jurisdiction, and as a matter of fact there is nothing to show that the Magistrate failed to issue proper orders to any of the parties.

The appellant's main argument attacks the Magistrate's final order. The chief objections taken to that order are that it was passed (1) in favour of three persons, (2) when there was no longer any fear of a breach of the peace, and (3) that the order was passed on a compromise and not after an inquiry as required by the Code of Criminal Procedure. Certain rulings have been shown to us to the effect that a Magistrate has no jurisdiction under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in a case of joint possession or when joint owners claim exclusive possession or when partners fight among themselves for managership. But none of these rulings apply to the case before us. When the Magistrate passed his final orders there were five distinct parties three of them agreed to come to terms and they asserted that there was no longer any fear of a breach of the peace, but it was held by the Calcutta High Court in ruling reported as Ranoda Ranjan Bhattacharjee v. Bharat Chandra Saha (4) that mere allegations of the parties that no breach of the peace is likely do not go to the root of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. No doubt the three parties who filed the compromise agreed among themselves that if the Magistrate accepted their compromise they would not fight among themselves, but they made no statement as to the other contesting parties, and we have no reason to believe that the Magistrate when he passed his final order was of opinion that without such an order putting certain parties in possession there was no fear of a breach of the peace. We have been asked to find that an order in favour of three parties is on the face of it illegal as being contrary to the wording of the Code. No relevant ruling has been cited in this connection, and in my opinion it would be straining the meaning of the Act to forbid a Magistrate to put into temporary possession two parties, who have come to terms. It is by no means clear that the words in clause (6) of section 145 confine the Magistrate's powers to placing only one of the original parties in possession if he is satisfied that two or more of these parties have become one for the purpose of the dispute before him. Nor would it be proper to hold that the Magistrate's order was invalid because it is merely based on a compromise. Had the compromise been filed by all the parties and had there been no longer any dispute it might be held that the Magistrate's jurisdiction had ceased, and that he was only empowered to cancel the proceedings under clause (5) of section 145, but in this case the Magistrate recorded evidence and based his opinion upon that evidence and not only upon the compromise drawn up by some of the parties. An order under section 145 clause (6) must be passed if there is still a dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace and the very fact that the Magistrate passed such an order and directed Abadi Begam and Achchi Begam to take their claim to the Civil Court shows that in his opinion the dispute had not come to an end, and it was not a case in which he could merely cancel the order under section 145, clause (5). In dealing with a case of this kind it is not right to hold that the Magistrate's proceedings were without jurisdiction in any but the strictest sense of the term. As held by the Calcutta High Court in a civil suit dealing with the application of Art. 47, Schedule I of the Limitation Act, it is not every error which makes the result invalid; Before want of jurisdiction can be established in such a case a vice must be clearly established which infects the whole proceedings. Yar Mohammad Sahav. Hajjat Mohammad Saiba (5). Two minor points have been raised one that the mutation order has the effect of superseding the Magisterial order, and the other that the claim put forward by Abadi Begam at that time was not the same claim as that which she is making now. As to the first of these objections an order in mutation proceedings is not a final decision as to ownership and has no effect whatsoever on the order passed by the Magistrate in so far as that order limits the period within which a civil suit may be brought by any of the parties. The second point is not seriously pressed for one of the alternative claims made by Abadi Begam is to the whole property left by her father, and that is the identical property which gave rise to the dispute in 1908. In my opinion the order of the Magistrate was binding on Abadi Begam and her suit not having been brought within three years of that order is barred by limitation.

This decision on the point of limitation only affects the case of Abadi Begam and it is necessary, therefore, to consider at length the second plea put forward by both appellants that the inheritance to the property left by Muhammad Ali Beg should be governed by Muhammadan Law as apart from any custom which may be shown to have been attached to that property in the time of Agha Jan. It is not necessary to go at length into the history of the taluqdari properties in Oudh or to discuss all the rulings of this Court or of the Privy Council in similar suits. There is no question that the estate of Agha Jan became under Act I of 1869 a taluqdari estate of the class recorded in list II. Therefore under section 10 read with section 8 of the Act this Court is bound to hold that it was an estate ordinarily devolving upon a single heir. The custom of the family was twice declared by Agha Jan himself to be a custom of gaddi nashini by which the eldest son succeeded to the property and the younger sons received maintenance. Under the circumstances it seems hardly proper to consider whether Agha Jan rightly described the custom of his family or not. It is argued on behalf of the appellants that this statement was induced partly by the fear of the Government and partly by the fear of a claim set up by his uncle's widow Mehdi Begam. The history of the estate goes back to the time of an Arabian soldier of fortune Bahadur Beg and it is contained with some discrepancies in the Record of Rights of the Aurangabad estate itself and the Qutubnagar estate which was carved out of it. There is nothing to show that since the Qutubnagar estate was given to a younger son there has been any division of the Aurangabad estate or that it has ever descended to any but the eldest surviving son. It is, therefore, proved beyond all reasonable doubt that when Agha Jan died his estate was subject to a custom of single heir succession in the person of the eldest son. Further proof of the custom, if any is needed, is to be found in the fact that Muhammad Ali Beg succeeded to his father as being the eldest surviving son, and his right to do so was upheld by a decision of a Bench of this Court. The appellants' contention is that under section 15 of Act I of 1869 the succession of Muhammad Ali Beg was contrary to the order of succession laid down in section 22 and that, therefore, the estate ceased to be governed by the Act and any custom which may have appertained to the estate previously came to an end. The chief authority on which reliance is placed is the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Singh (6). In this judgment their Lordships laid down for the first time that section 15 of Act I of 1869 comes into force when an estate is transferred to any person outside the direct order of succession, and their Lordships say that in such cases it seems not unreasonable that the fetter of the entail such as it is, should no longer apply to the estate. These words have been interpreted to mean that if any person other than the next heir, under section 22, of a taluqdar succeeds to an estate, he will be bound by no rules applying to such an estate whether they be rules of law or rules of custom, and that in future succession will be according to the law of his tribe or religion. It is, however, doubtful whether the words "fettters of the entail" mean any more than that the property so inherited will be no longer governed by the Act, and, therefore, the rules of intestate succession as laid down in section 22 will cease to apply. As a matter of fact this interpretation of section 15 by their Lordships created a state of affairs which was not contemplated by the framers of the Act, and in 1910 the law was amended accordingly, but as far as Muhammad Ali Beg and his father were concerned the Act of 1869 applies and the decision of the Privy Council cited by the appellants is binding. In that case, however, there was no reference to family custom and it is only in later rulings that this question and also the further question as to the effect of a sanad has been put forward. Thus in the Dandikanchi case [Balraj Kuar v. Mahadeo Pal Singh (7)] one of the Judges gave his opinion that succession to an estate removed from the provisions of the Act by section 15 would be governed by sanad as restricting or qualifying personal law. In 1919 in the Kalakankar case [Narain Singh v. Deputy Commissioner of Partabgarh (8)] the view was taken that the person succeeding under the bar of section 15 would be governed by the personal law modified by the custom to which he was subject although he would not be bound by a custom of succession prevailing in the taluga, that is to say, the custom on which the succession is based, must be his own family custom and not a custom attached to the property as such. This leads to the last decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sitla Bakhsh Singh v. Sital Singh (9). In this case all the previous decisions of the Privy Council were reviewed, and it was definitely ruled, that in that case the property would be descendible according to the ordinary Hindu Law (in this case Muhammadan Law) unless a particular custom of the religion or tribe be proved. Now it had already been held by the Privy Council in the Deogaon case [Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (10)] that a family custom follows the custom of the taluka and so we find that a Bench of this Court in the Bhilwal case [Zarif-un-nisa v. Shafiq-uz-Zaman (11)] goes so far as to find that a custom broken by transfer outside the family may come back into existence when the property returns to the family in which the custom previously prevailed. The general trend of these decisions is to show that family custom may be set up in regard to a property even though it has been withdrawn from the scope of Act I of 1869, and that property of this nature may still be held to be governed by a family custom of single heir succession, although it is no longer an estate within the meaning of Act I of 1869.

(5) 42 Ind. Cas. 765, 22 O. W. N. 342, 18 Cr. L. J. 1024.

Against this the point taken by the appellants is that Muhammad Ali Beg being a younger son could not claim that he was governed by the family custom attaching to the estate in the time of his father, and that the defendants should have proved that there was another custom in the family by which younger sons who acquired property left an impartible estate. Now it is clearly impossible to prove any such custom. Nothing is known about younger sons in this family or whether they left any property and if so what customs, if any, were attached to their properties. But in this case Muhammad Ali Beg did not succeed as a younger son. He succeeded according to his father's assertion of family custom as the eldest surviving son. He did not succeed to a younger son's portion but to the whole property of his father, and this was the very property which had carried with it the family custom. Moreover he appears to have scrupulously carried out the instructions laid down by Agha Jan as to younger sons, by giving to the other members of the family villages for their maintenance, vide Exhibit C19 printed at page 68 of Part III of the Record. The so-called Will by which Muhammad Ali Beg made good in Court his title to the estate was really a declaration of family custom and it was not a custom which belonged to him personally as a younger son but a custom which he inherited as his father's heir.

Some doubt has been raised as to the exact meaning of the custom asserted by Agha Jan, but the main facts are perfectly clear. In February, 1860 Agha Jan made an application that after his death the taluka should continue intact in his family without being partitioned and should be governed by the rule of gaddinashini. To this he added subsequently the words "It may also be mentioned that after my death among my sons the eldest son shall according to the old custom obtaining in the family ascend the gaddi" and again on the 5th of September 1861, in reply to a further letter from the Chief Commissioner, he wrote: "In my family after my death my estate shall remain intact and undivided governed by the rule of rajgaddi and my eldest son shall sit on the gaddi." There is no doubt that these words mean at least that there is in the family a custom of single heir succession by the eldest son. The law of primogeniture as it is understood in England never applied to India, and although Agha Jan had received what is known as a primogeniture sanad there is no reason to suppose that either he or the Government at the time interpreted this to mean that the eldest son meant the first born son and his descendants rather than the eldest surviving son. This point, however, hardly arises in the present case for the Bench decision already referred to expressly found that in this case primogeniture meant succession by the eldest surviving son, and no distinction was drawn between the meaning of the so-called Will and the sanad. The fact is that Muhammad Ali Beg actually succeeded by virtue of the family custom as interpreted to mean succession to the whole estate by the eldest surviving son, and although the unfortunate wording of section 15 of Act I of 1869 had the effect of excluding the estate from the Act on account of the succession of the second born son of Agha Jan, the fact of his succession is a very strong proof that the family custom set up by Agha Jan survived in the person of his son. This custom did not come into existence with the Act or cease when the estate was technically excluded from the Act, and I am of opinion that the plaintiffs-appellants have entirely failed to prove that on the death of Muhammad Ali Beg this property came under the rules of intestate succession laid down by the Muhammadan Law. On the contrary I am of opinion that there was in this family a custom of single heir succession appertaining to the family property both before it became an estate under the Act and after it ceased to be such an estate and that the plaintiffs-appellants have, therefore, no claim to the shares to which they would have been entitled under ordinary Muhammadan Law. This finding applied not only to the property actually inherited from Agha Jan, and which formed the original talugdani estate but also to the property subsequently acquired by Muhammad Ali Beg as an accretion to that estate. Under Muhammadan Law there is no distinction between ancestral property and property otherwise acquired, as has been laid down by the Privy Council in the Deogaon case [Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (10)]. Both appellants, therefore, have failed to establish any claim to any part of the property under Muhammadan Law. Thus the appeal in the case brought by

Akbari Begam, and carried after her death by her transferees, fails, and I have already found that the suit of Abadi Begam is barred by limitation. It is, however, proper to consider the claim of the latter to succeed to her father's estate even if it is an impartible estate governed by the custom of single heir succession. On this point also the appellant is, in my opinion, unsuccessful. No doubt there is nothing in the meaning of the terms impartible estate or single heir succession which precludes a female from claiming such an estate by inheritance, but in this family at least there is a custom of gaddi nashini as well as a custom of inheritance by the eldest son. There is no instance in which a female has succeeded to any portion of this estate, and the only person who has made a claim to do so, namely, Mehdi Begam the mother of Agha Jan was unsuccessful. Nor is there any parallel case in other Oudh families where a female has succeeded as heir to a gaddi and it is quite certain from the papers quoted in Mr Sykes Compendium of Talugdani Law that the whole idea of the gaddi in Oudh presupposes inheritance by a male and not by a female. This is further borne out by the terms of the sanad granted to Agha Jan. The only point on which the appellant relies is found in a suit brought by Ahmad Mirza Beg defendant No. 1 in the present suit against Abadi Begam to recover certain villages which Abadi Begam claimed to have inherited from her mother. This property did not belong to the family of Agha Jan and was as a matter of fact bequeathed to Abadi Begam by a Will. In the course of the hearing of the appeal by a Bench of this Court it appeared necessary to re-mand an issue as to whether there was any custom in the family of Muhammad Ali Beg by which daughters are excluded from succession. The finding of the lower Court was in the negative and this finding was accepted in appeal. Even against Ahmad Mirza Beg, no question of res judicata can arise, for it is perfectly clear that, the suit was decided on the finding that Abadi Begam obtained the property, by Will, and no finding as to exclusion of females was necessary. Moreover, as pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge the property belonged to another family and the custom which was relevant was rather the custom of the family of Shambhar Bahadur who was the original owner of the property than that of his son-in-law Muhammad Ali Beg. Under the circumstances the finding has not even any great value as evidence, and the plaintiff-appellant has produced no evidence to support her claim to succeed as a daughter merely because she is next of kin in view of the definite evidence that this family is governed by the rule of gaddi nashin which in Oudh at least has always been taken to mean succession in the male line.

The plaintiffs, therefore, have failed to make good their case in appeal on any of the pleas raised. There is, however, one minor point in which the plaintiff Abadi Begam should succeed and that is on the question of costs. Abadi Begam has obtained a decree against the present defendants in the suit for dower debt and the property now in suit was attached in execution of her decree and placed in the hands of the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur as Receiver. The receivership is now at an end but in the lower Court the Receiver was represented by Counsel and was allowed separate costs. The defence put forward by the Receiver was practically the same as that put forward by the other defendants and the Counsel engaged by the Receiver stated that he represented the three main defendants also and produced evidence on their behalf. Where co-defendants produced substantially the same defence separate costs should not be allowed except for special reasons to be given by the Judge trying the case. No such reasons have been given in the judgment before us and the defence of the Receiver is substantially the same as that of the other defendants. Under the circumstances separate costs should not have been allowed and the decree for costs will, therefore, be reduced by the amount of Rs. 3,000 which was the Pleader's fee allowed to the Receiver by the lower Court.

Kendall, A. J. C.—I need add little to the judgment of my learned colleague with whose conclusions I am in general agreement. I am, however, by no means convinced that the lower Court was right in laying the burden of proving that the case of Rani Abadi Begam was barred by limitation on the defendants. The plaintiffs stated that their claim was within the twelve years period of limitation, and thus was met in the written statement by the plea that Rani Abadi Begam had been a party to the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, and that as she had instituted no suit within three years she was barred by Art. 47, Schedule I of the Limitation Act. In her replication the plaintiff stated that the orders issued under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were wrong, invalid, ultra vires, etc. The question of the burden of proof is a technical one, as evidence has been recorded on both sides, and no doubt it is a fact that the onus is constantly shifting, but at the time when the issues were struck that order under section 145 was on the file, and it was one which was ostensibly passed against Abadi Begam, and by which she appeared to be bound for it ordered her to file a suit in a Civil Court. The ordinary period for one who is bound by an order under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, is three years and until she could prove that she was not bound by that order, I am of opinion, that Abadi Begam must be held to have been barred by the Statute of Limitation. The question of whether the proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code, were ultra vires or not has been discussed at inordinate length in the judgment of the lower Court. Unfortunately we have very little knowledge of what the details of those proceedings were. We know, however, that they were instituted by a Police report under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, against Ahmad Mirza, Hamid Mirza and Ameer Mirza, and that the Magistrate subsequently altered them into proceedings under section 145, Criminal Procedure Code. We have not been shown that there was anything irregular in this, nor have we been shown that the Magistrate was acting beyond his powers in making Abadi Begam and her step-mother parties to those proceedings and sending them notices under that section. We have no copy of the notices sent but we have a copy of the order of the Court directing that notices should be sent, and we must, therefore, assume that they were sent. There was an application under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, made, by Ameer Mirza, in which Abadi Begam and her step-mother were made parties. This was an application for a transfer of the proceedings on the ground that a fair and impartial trial could not be obtained in the Court of that particular Deputy Magistrate. So far as we can judge from the order passed, it was not suggested that the proceedings of the Magistrate were ultra vires. We cannot possibly assume that the Magistrate knew perfectly well that the ladies were not contemplating a breach of the peace, and his order is one that appears on the face of it to bind the ladies. The other parties were put in possession, and the ladies were kept out and referred to the Civil Court. I agree entirely with my learned colleague's remarks about the final order, and the result is that Abadi Begam's suit must be held to be barred by limitation.

The main contention of the plaintiffs was that succession to the property in suit must be according to Muhammadan Law and not according to any custom of single heir succession, but in the second place it was claimed that if the defendants were able to prove such a custom, there was no custom excluding females from succession. The property concerned consisted of (a) the estate known as the Aurangabad estate in Sitapur District entered in List I; (b) self-acquired landed property, and (c) self-acquired houses, etc., of the original taluqdar

Mirza Agha Jan whose name was entered in List II. The first property having been devised by Agha Jan in a document which has been conclusively held to be a Will to his second son (the eldest surviving son) Muhammad Ali Beg, and not to the heir under section 22 of the Oudh Estates Act, it is clear that section 15 of that Act comes into force. So far there is no contest between the parties. The main argument on behalf of the appellants is that the effect of section 15 of the Act is to abrogate the custom in the family by which the estates devolved upon a single heir. There is nothing in the section itself to suggest that it has such a drastic effect. All that it states is that the property bequeathed (i. e., in this case to Muhammad Ali Beg) shall be regulated by the rules which would govern the transfer of and succession to such property if the transferee or legatee had bought the same from person not being a taluqdar or grantee. There is no reason so far as I am aware why a person who is not a taluqdar or grantee should not be subject to a family custom by which the estates devolve upon a single heir. The appellants have placed chief reliance on the Privy Council ruling in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Singh (6), but that was a case in which the question of custom does not appear to have been raised at all, and there is nothing beyond the words quoted to show that in using the expression "fetter of the entail" their Lordships had in mind anything beyond the fetter of the entail imposed by the Act itself. In Umatul Fatima v. Asghar Ali Khan (12) on which the appellants have also relied, the plaintiff claimed to be the heir under section 6 of the Act, and to be entitled to oust the defendants, who were the successors-in-interest of the youngest of four half brothers of the original taluqdar. The decision following Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Rae Jagatpal Singh (6) was that the plaintiff had no case under the Act and he tried to fall back on the sanad, but was not allowed to set up a new case at that late stage. It does not appear that he ever attempted to set up the case that the estates must descend to a single heir by the family custom, as apparently he might have done, and we, therefore, do not know what the learned Judges would have decided on such a point, though they appear from some remarks on page 53 to have considered that it might have been necessary to enquire into the family custom if they had allowed the plaintiff to fall back on the sanad. At any rate it is clear that the reason for their decision was not that they believed that section 15 in itself freed the estate from the fetter either of the sanad or of a family custom. Another case in which the effect of section 15 was considered by a Bench of this Court is reported as Balraj Kuar v. Mahadeo Pal Singh (7) but this again contains no real support for the appellants. It is true that Mr. Justice Lindsay was of opinion that where section 15 applied the estate would not be subject to the fetter of the sanad, but from this view Mr. Justice Kanhaya Lal dissented as he believed that section 15 could only cut the fetter of the Act, and not that imposed by any other rule. It is not by any means clear that Mr. Justice Lindsay would have considered that the effect of section 15 would have been to abrogate a family custom, for it appears that he believed that the words "neither a taluqdar nor a grantee" under section 15 are to be taken to mean "a person without a sanad" a sanad being so to speak the absence of a taluqdar's estate but this is not by any means the same thing as a person without a family custom of single heir succession. On the other hand it has been admitted by Mr. Sen on behalf of the appellants that there have been cases in which section 15 has been held not to abrogate the family custom, and the dictum of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sitla Bakhsh Singh v. Sital Singh (9) seems to me to settle the point definitely. I may add that very recently a Bench of this Court has held that although a family custom of impartibility would cease to govern an estate which had passed out of the family of the taluqdar, yet if the estate were to return to the family, there would still be a presumption as to the custom of impartibility, though it would be a rebuttable and not a conclusive presumption. This finding appears to be perfectly consistent with the one in Murtaza Husain Khan v. Mohammad Yasin Ali Khan (10) in which it was held that the presumption applicable to an estate entered in List II (i. e., the estate of a taluqdar entered in List II) would also apply to the personal property of a Muhammadan taluqdar not so entered, but in regard to the latter the presumption would not be conclusive. In fact there appear to be two elements which have to be considered. There is in the first place the family custom, and in the second place there is the estate. So long as the estate devolves according to the Act, both elements come in and the custom is conclusively presumed. If the estate is transferred or bequeathed not in accordance with the Act, so that section 15 comes into operation the law will not allow a conclusive presumption because one of the elements has disappeared, i. e., the estate is no longer an estate within the definition of the Act. It cannot be, however, that the family custom has been abrogated by a single transfer or bequest, and consequently if the property returns to the family, the custom, which has remained unaffected, may be presumed to apply to the returning property in the same way as it would apply to any other non-taluqdari property which should accrue to the estate.

(12) 8 O. O. 45.

ABADI BEGANI V. AHMAD MIRZA BEG.

There is, therefore, a presumption in favour of a family custom of impartibility in regard to the property of Muhammad Ali Beg, i. e., not only in regard to what is called the taluqdari property but also to the self-acquired property. It is, however, a rebuttable presumption but there has been no rebuttal worth the name, the appellants having relied almost entirely on section 15 of the Act. Beyond the fact that the estate has ordinarily devolved on a single heir, we have no very clear evidence as to the nature of the custom beyond the statement of Agha Jan himself but that fortunately is supported by a decision of a Bench of this Court to which my learned colleague has already referred. The custom being one of succession to the eldest surviving son, and there being no surviving son of Muhammad Ali Beg, it has been argued that the succession should go to the daughter. It was part of Abadi Begam's case that if a custom of single heir succession or impartibility should be held to exist, she, as a daughter, should be preferred to the brother and nephews on the assumption that the exclusion of females could not be proved. Musammam Abadi Begam's suit, however, has been barred by limitation, and there is no need to consider it further. It has not been suggested that the appellant, in the other suit, who is the sister of Muhammad Ali Beg has any claim to the full estate, but only that she is entitled to a 1-6th share in it if the succession is to be governed by the ordinary rules of Muhammadan Law. Her appeal also, therefore, fails.

By the Court.—The appeals are dismissed with the exception of the reduction of the costs allowed in the Court below. Costs in this Court are allowed to the parties in proportion to their success.

INSOLVENCY CASE No 233 of 1923.

Mr Paget, for the Petitioners

Mr Keith, for the Respondent.

Mr. J. Ali, for the Insolvent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the Bank claims that inter alia by their mortgage or hypothecation deed, dated the 12th May 1922, they have security over two cargo boats which bore the license Nos. 667 and 668 respectively of 1923, and over which the respondents have a mortgage dated the 23rd May 1923.

The case turned upon the construction to be put on certain words in the petitioners' hypothecation instrument of the 12th May 1922—"The mortgagor doth hereby hypothecate unto the Bank all and singular the logs, squares, planks, posts, scantlings, battens, shingles and all other sawn and unsawn timber and all other goods, chattels and stock-in-trade of the mortgagor which are now, or hereafter shall be in or about the saw mill and premises known as A. V. Joseph's Saw Mill at Botataung, Rangoon, or in any other place whatever including timber in the course of transit to the mortgagor or to his orders and including any goods, chattels and stock-in-trade which may hereafter be added to, or substituted for, those now in existence."

No inventory of the goods hypothecated was added to the deed, and towards the end of the deed the mortgagor covenants that he will, whenever required so to do, produce to the Bank a full and true account of his goods, chattels and stock-in-trade and the values thereof.

It is admitted that in the accounts which he furnished to the Bank under this covenant he never included the cargo boats, nor was any exception taken to his not doing so. It is, I think, also clear that, if the words "goods, chattels and stock-in-trade" were not limited by the preceding words, they are sufficiently wide to cover cargo boats. The question then is—Does the doctrine of ejusdem generis apply?

DINA NATH PATI v. UPENDRA NANDAN DAS MAHAPATRA.

For the petitioners it is urged that the doctrine of ejusdem generis must be applied with caution, and that the Court is bound, if possible, to give a meaning to the words used; and reliance is placed upon certain cases on the construction of Wills set out in Jarman on Wills, 6th Edition, at pages 1024 and 1028.

The rule is stated in its widest form by Lord Campbell in Reg. v. Edmundson (1). "I accede," said he, "to the principle laid down in all the cases which have been cited, that, where there are general words following particular and specific words, the general words must be confined to things of the same kind as those specified."

The doctrine is well stated by Farewell, L. J., in Tillmanns & Co. v. S. S. Kuntzford (2). He said, "It is perhaps not desirable, when dealing with the construction of Statutes and mercantile documents, to cite authorities on the construction of Wills, because a testator is of his own bounty doing what he pleases and there is no presumption that he will not be capricious. In a mercantile document or a Statute there is a presumption that business men do not intend to do anything absurd, which is some slight guide, but in all cases it is a question of construction. Now there is no room for the application of the ejusdem generis doctrine unless there is a genus or class or category—perhaps category is the better word, as 'class gift' has a technical meaning in Wills, and its employment might lead to confusion. Unless you can find a category there is no room for the application of the ejusdem generis doctrine." In the result their Lordships construed the words "or any other cause" ejusdem generis with the preceding words, "In consequence of war or disturbance." Applying this decision to the present case, one has here a mercantile document in which there is a distinct category dealing with the various types of timber which constituted the stock-in-trade of the mortgagor who was a timber trader and saw mill owner, and I am consequently of opinion that the words "goods, chattels and stock-in-trade" must be read ejusdem generis with the preceding words.

The respondents rely upon another argument, viz., that the cargo boats were in the possession of the insolvent at the commencement of the insolvency by the consent and permission of the true owner under such circumstances that he is the reputed owner thereof. The petitioners rely on a recent decision in the case of the Official Assignee v. Mohamed E. Nairwarah (3). But I do not think that this argument avails the respondents very much. If my construction of the words in the hypothecation deed is correct, then (apart from?) the petitioners' demand followed by a suit, the mortgagor's goods, chattels and stock-in-trade must be taken as limited to the mortgagor's timber stock-in-trade. If I am wrong in that construction, and the general words include the cargo boats, then the demand followed by a suit would be sufficient in my opinion under the decision already quoted in the case of the Official Assignee v. Mohamed E. Nairwarah (3) to take the case out of the operation of section 52 (ii) (c) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

For these reasons I hold under section 7 that the petitioners' hypothecation deed does not apply to cargo boats. Petitioners pay respondent's costs five gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—We think that this appeal must succeed as there has not been a proper service of notice of the appeal on the appellants before us. The suit was commenced by the plaintiffs against their tenants for the recovery of rent. The First Court decreed the suit. Against this decree the defendants preferred an appeal. In the plaint the plaintiffs have described themselves as residing at a village called Samsara. Accordingly, the notice of the appeal was sent for service to Samsara. The peon on arriving at Samsara did not find the plaintiffs there or any male member of their family upon whom the service could be effected. He found there a servant of the plaintiffs and the peon was told the plaintiffs were at that time living at their own bari at village Janki, some two or three miles distant from Samsara. The peon thereupon purported to effect service by affixing the notice at the entrance of the house at Samsara. This is shown by the receipt which is the first document in the paper-book and also by the peon's return. The appeal was heard ex parte and was decreed in favour of the defendants in the suit. The plaintiffs thereupon applied for the re-hearing of the appeal which was refused and against this refusal the present appeal has been preferred to this Court. As I have already stated, in my opinion, the service was not good service under the provisions of the Code. When the peon was told that the plaintiffs, whom he was seeking to serve, were not living at that time at Samsara but at their own bari in village Janki, in my opinion, it was his duty, to endeavour to effect personal service upon them either by proceeding to Janki or returning to the Court from which he came and stating the facts in order that fresh notice should issue for service on the plaintiff at Janki. It seems to me idle to say that the provisions of O. V. r. 17 have been complied with by the peon in doing what he did in this case. In my opinion, he did not use due and reasonable diligence. The service, if possible, should be personal unless there is an agent empowered to accept service and it is only if you cannot effect personal service that you are justified in proceeding in accordance with the other provisions of O. V. r. 17. In the present case, in my opinion, there was nothing to prevent personal service which could have easily been effected had due and reasonable diligence been observed.

The result is that the appeal succeeds and the appeal will be re-heard by the lower Court in the presence of the present appellants before us.

There will be no order as to costs in this appeal.

Costs in the lower Court will abide the result.

U P. Excise Act (IV of 1910), ss 3 (2), 10—"Excise Officer", meaning of—Police Officer specially invested with powers

Under section 10 of the U P. Excise Act the Local Government has authority to empower, not only a Sub-Inspector of Police, but any Police Officer, to perform duties and exercise powers under that Act, including the confinement of authority to make a report or complaint [p 706, col 1]

A Sub-Inspector of Police who has been invested with powers under the Excise Act by the Government is an "Excise Officer" within the meaning of the Act and is competent to make a complaint or report to a Magistrate under section 71 (a) of the Act [p 706, col 2]

Criminal appeal, by the Local Government, against an order of the Sessions Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 14th July 1923

The Government Advocate, for the Crown

Mr. Shabd Saran, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Local Government, presenting some peculiar features. The case itself was a simple one. Sub-Inspector Mohan Lal, Officer-in-charge of Aurangabad Police Station, received information that Chitar Singh, a petty shop-keeper of a village called Saidpura, was selling liquor at his shop, which he kept ostensibly for the sale of groceries. Chitar Singh had no license for the sale of intoxicating liquor. The Sub-Inspector raided the shop. He says, and he is corroborated by at any rate two witnesses, that Chitar Singh was sitting outside his shop as the Police Officer and those with him approached, and that he thereupon ran away. The shop being searched, there were found inside seven bottles of country spirit and a barrel of the same, together with a vessel used for filling bottles from the barrel. The expert evidence of Babu Girwar Singh, Excise Inspector, shows that the liquor was of abnormal strength, being more powerful than what is permitted to be issued from Government Distilleries. The accused was not found for some days. He was eventually arrested and the Magistrate took cognizance of the case on the report submitted to him by the Sub-Inspector.

The accused's defence was that the shop was raided in his absence, at the instigation of some enemy of his, and that the same enemy must have planted the liquor in the shop.

In view of the quantity found, this is a very improbable suggestion. We have examined the evidence in detail and we do not think there is any force in the accused's defence. Such evidence as he called in his defence was fragmentary and contradictory. We are satisfied that on the facts the Magistrate was justified in convicting Chitar Singh, as he did, of an offence punishable under section 60, clause (a), of the Excise Act. He did not think it necessary to record an opinion whether the accused had also been guilty of a further offence, that of selling country spirit, punishable under section 60 clause (a).

Chitar Singh appealed to the Sessions Judge. His memorandum of appeal challenges the decision of the Trial Court on all questions of fact. It suggests that the conduct of the Police in making the search was irregular. There is a plea that the Sub-Inspector ought to have reported the matter to the Magistrate more promptly than he did. But, apart from a general plea that the conviction is contrary to law, there is no suggestion in the petition of appeal that the Trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the offence on the report of the Sub-Inspector. Before the learned Sessions Judge, however, this plea was orally taken, and he allowed it to be argued without insisting on any amendment of the memorandum of appeal. Chitar Singh was accordingly acquitted upon the mere finding that, by reason of the provisions of section 71 (a) of the Excise Act, the Magistrate had acted without jurisdiction, in that he took cognizance of the offence, not having before him the complaint or report of any Excise Officer.

EMPEROR V. CHITAR SINGH.

If the learned Sessions Judge had insisted on this plea being formally taken in writing, it is probable that the Government Pleader would have found an answer to it, and much trouble and expenditure of judicial time would have been saved.

Curiously enough, however, the Local Government in filing this appeal have duplicated the very same mistake. The appeal comes before us on a general plea, that the order of acquittal is against the weight of evidence on the record. We have refused to entertain the appeal on that ground, which obviously is not an arguable one, but we have permitted the learned Government Advocate, who is himself not responsible for the drafting of the Government's memorandum of appeal, to amend the same by adding a further plea. This is to the effect that, in view of a Government order of the 13th of July 1910, the Sub-Inspector, being a Police Officer invested with certain powers under the authority exercisable by the Local Government by virtue of section 10 of the Excise Act, he was by definition an "Excise Officer", and, therefore, a person competent to make a complaint or report to a Magistrate under section 71 (a) already referred to. The appeal has been argued on this basis, and Counsel has been engaged to represent the accused Chitar Singh, who has also appeared in person.

There can be no doubt that under section 10 of the Excise Act the Local Government had authority to empower, not only a Sub-Inspector of Police, but any Police Officer, to perform duties and exercise powers under that Act, including the conferment of authority to make a report or complaint. Now the Local Government has in express terms authorised any Police Officer to arrest and to make searches in connection with a number of offences, including the offence of being in illicit possession of intoxicating liquor of which Chitar Singh has been convicted. It would certainly be anomalous if the Sub-Inspector had authority to arrest Chitar Singh and to search his shop, and was moreover required by law to produce Chitar Singh before a competent Magistrate within 24 hours of his arrest, but could not by reporting the facts to the Magistrate give that Magistrate authority to take cognizance of the alleged offence. We think that this anomaly has been avoided by the very wide definition of the words "Excise Officer" contained in sub-clause (2) of section 3 of the Excise Act. According to that definition, an "Excise Officer" means not merely a Collector, or other officer appointed as such, but also an officer, or person invested with powers under the Act by a Government order lawfully issued under the provisions of section 10. The Sub-Inspector as a Police Officer has been invested with powers under that section. This is sufficient to constitute an Excise Officer within the meaning of the definition, wherever the words "Excise Officer" occur in the Act. It was, therefore, unnecessary, and would have complicated matters, for the Local Government, to issue a further notification authorising persons on whom it had already conferred powers for the purposes of the Act to do something which the Act says any "Excise Officer" may do. The learned Sessions Judge, therefore, was mistaken in the ground on which he has acquitted Chitar Singh.

We set aside his order of acquittal, and in lieu thereof we restore the conviction recorded by the Trying Magistrate. We have given careful attention to the question of sentence. In view of all the circumstances and of the amount and strength of the liquor seized, we do not think the Trying Magistrate was in error in imposing the sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment. We restore that sentence, with effect from the date on which it was passed:—that is to say, any period of imprisonment already served by Chitar Singh since the date of his original conviction will be reckoned towards the period of imprisonment which he has been ordered to serve. The accused will be taken into custody and arrangements made for conveying him to the Bulandshahr District to serve out his sentence.

The evidence of an accomplice may be deemed to be unworthy of credit unless it is corroborated in material particulars. [p. 709, col. 1]

The mere fact that the accused were seen with the approver a few days before the dacoity is not material corroboration of the evidence of the approver to the effect that the accused joined him in the dacoity. [p. 707, col. 2]

Lasts of discovery of stolen property can no doubt be used by the persons who actually wrote them in order to refresh their memory at the time of giving evidence, but they are not themselves evidence. [ibid.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 28th February 1924.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a joint appeal from the order of the Sessions Judge of Hoshiarpur convicting Hazara Singh, Partap Singh I of Littar, Thakar and Partap II of Fatehpur, of dacoity under section 395, Indian Penal Code, and sentencing each of them to eight years' rigorous imprisonment. The dacoity was committed in the shop of Kanshi at Bassi Jalal on the night between 14th-15th August 1923 and a large amount of property was said to have been stolen. According to Kanshi, jewellery worth Rs. 200, cloth worth Rs. 1,750 and cash to the amount of Rs. 525 were stolen. The evidence upon which the convictions are based is that of Teku approver, corroborated by evidence of association and by the alleged production of certain articles out of the stolen property by each of the appellants. I have not the least doubt and it is admitted by Counsel for the appellants, that a dacoity was committed in the shop of Kanshi as described by him and other eye witnesses. I also do not think that there can be any doubt that Teku approver was one of the dacoits, but the point which has to be decided is whether his statement is materially corroborated as against each of the appellants by other evidence upon the record.

The learned Sessions Judge has divided the story of the approver into various sections. He relies upon the evidence of Mehr Singh and Waryam Singh (P. W. Nos. 10 and 12) as corroborating incidents B. and E. and upon the evidence of Puran Singh (P. W. No. 18) as corroborating incident D. Now, as regards B and E the evidence is that Hazara Singh, Teku and Partap Singh of Fatehpur were going about together some three days before the dacoity. The evidence of Puran Singh is to the effect, that Partap Singh, Teku and the two absconders, Banta Singh and Waryam Singh, were together on the day preceding the dacoity. Now, even assuming that the evidence of these witnesses is true, it does not at all follow that the persons named all took part in the dacoity along with Teku. In full the evidence shows that Teku's companions were constantly changing and even if these persons were with him a few days before the dacoity, it does not follow that they remained with him and along with him committed the dacoity in question. I, therefore, cannot regard this evidence as any material corroboration of the evidence of the approver to the effect that any of the appellants joined him in the dacoity.

There remains the evidence as to the production of certain articles alleged to have been stolen from the shop of Kanshi at the time of the dacoity. The evidence of respectable witnesses is to the effect that each of the accused took the Police to various places not in their exclusive possession, and dug up or produced articles which at the time Sundar, the brother of Kanshi, identified as part of the stolen property. The evidence of witnesses to the effect that Sundar identified these articles is, of course, inadmissible as being hearsay. This only evidence admissible would be evidence given in Court by Sundar himself to the effect that any or all of the appellants gave information which led to the recovery of articles of stolen property. When Sundar came into Court the various articles had, it appears, all been mixed together and he was quite unable at that time to identify them or to say which accused had produced which article. Again, there was evidence, that as each appellant produced articles a list was prepared by a Police Officer and signed by respectable persons. The latter have given evidence to the effect that they signed these lists and the lists themselves appear to have been used by the learned Sessions Judge as substantive evidence in the case. There seems to be a general impression among the subordinate Courts that lists of this sort are themselves evidence, but this is an erroneous view of the law. Such lists could no doubt be used by the persons who actually wrote them in order to refresh their memory at the time of giving evidence, but this is not the way in which they have been used in the present case. There is thus no admissible evidence in this case to show what articles of stolen property, if any, were produced by each of the appellants.

In order to corroborate the evidence of the approver it was necessary to prove that a certain accused person produced certain property which property was identified at the trial as having been stolen in the course of the dacoity. These facts, however, have not been proved by any admissible evidence upon the record. There is, however, one exception and that is in regard to Exhibits 65 and 66, a ring and a tandiri which were said to have been in a box produced by Thakar accused and which have been identified in Court by Kanshi. It would, however, in my opinion be unsafe to consider this evidence as a sufficient corroboration of the statement of the approver especially as the articles were, as admitted by the learned Sessions Judge, not found in the exclusive possession of Thakar.

There are various other matters which need to be noticed. Kanshi states that prior to the dacoity he knew Hazara Singh, Partap Singh of Littar and Thakar appellants who often came to his shop. This being so it is remarkable that he failed to identify any of them at the time of the dacoity even though their faces were wrapped up in mundassas. Sundar has gone so far as to say that he identified Thakar and Partap Singh of Littar after the lamp was lighted by the dacoits, but his evidence in this respect is unworthy of credit seeing that their names were not mentioned in the First Information Report. The greater part of the property which has been recovered consists of cloth said to be parts of whole thans stolen in the dacoity. It is remarkable, however, that cloth stolen was worth Rs 1,750 but that recovered is valued only at Rs 370. It was urged on behalf of the defence that the cloth recovered was really cloth belonging to Kanshi which had been left behind by the dacoits and that there were no real recoveries at all at the instance of the appellants. The suggestion was that the Investigating Officer had hidden the various articles in the places from which they were subsequently said to have been produced by the appellants. There certainly is the possibility that the productions were not genuine though I see no reason to disbelieve the evidence of respectable persons who gave evidence in support of the recoveries. Again it is remarkable that though jewellery of large value is said to have been stolen from Kanshi, the amount stolen, according to the approver, was quite small. There are other serious discrepancies between the statement of the approver and that of Kanshi and there cannot be the least doubt that Kanshi has very largely exaggerated his loss. In the absence of any admissible evidence to show what stolen property was produced by any one of the appellants, it is impossible to regard the evidence of production as material corroboration of that of the approver. The evidence of association has already been dismissed and I have held that it also does not in any way connect any of the appellants with the dacoity. The only clear evidence then which connects the appellants with the dacoity is that of the approver Teku and it certainly would not in this case be safe to depart from the general rule that the evidence of an accomplice may be deemed to be unworthy of credit unless it is corroborated in material particulars.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the convictions and the sentences and acquit all the appellants, and direct that they be forthwith released from custody.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 201, 302—Murder, charge of—Alternative charge of causing evidence of offence to disappear—Prejudice—Test

It is not illegal to charge an accused person first, with having committed a murder, and secondly, in the alternative, if the evidence does not show that he committed the murder, of having been guilty of causing evidence of the offence to disappear, with the intention of screening the offender. The real test is, whether the accused has been prejudiced by the alternative charge made in one trial [p 700, col 1, p 710, col 1]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Bijapur

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The three accused were tried before the Sessions Judge of Bijapur on a charge of murder as well as on an additional charge framed by the Sessions Court under section 201, Indian Penal Code, of causing disappearance of evidence of the commission of the offence of murder in order to screen the culprits. The second and third accused were acquitted on both charges. The first accused was acquitted on the charge of murder, but convicted under section 201, Indian Penal Code. It was argued for the accused that a conviction under section 201, Indian Penal Code, could not be legal as he was suspected to be one of the murderers. I do not see myself any reason why a person should not be charged first with having committed a murder, secondly, in the alternative, if the evidence does not show that he has committed the murder, that he has been guilty of causing evidence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender, in other words, of having been an accessory after the fact.

In Bucha v. King-Emperor (1) it was held that when an accused person has been acquitted of a charge of committing a crime, the fact that he had been suspected and tried of the principal offence would not prevent his conviction under section 201, Indian Penal Code, if there is clear proof that he has caused evidence to disappear in order to screen some unknown offender from legal punishment. In that case the appellants were charged only under section 302, Indian Penal Code, but the Sessions Judge having acquitted them of the offence of murder convicted them under section 201, Indian Penal Code. In appeal the learned Judges very carefully discussed all the authorities on this point, and we need say no more than that we agree with the conclusions at which they arrived as set out at page 6 of the report—

"The evidence was, however, held to be sufficient to prove that a murder had been committed. The evidence against two, the appellants, was held to be sufficient to establish an offence under section 201 to have been committed by them, in respect of the murder. We see nothing in the law, or in any of the rulings we have discussed, which lays down that such a conviction as the present is not a proper one, provided always that the prisoner has not been prejudiced in his defence. The appellants were charged only under section 302, but the evidence they had to meet clearly included the concealment of the body of the murdered man, and we think that they have been in no way prejudiced, that the case is covered by section 237 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that the appellants have been properly convicted."

In Queen-Empress v Limbya (2) it was held that a conviction on a charge of having been an accessory to an offence under section 201, Indian Penal Code, is not illegal merely because it is suspected, but not proved or admitted, that the accused committed, or was one of the several persons who committed, the principal offence.

In this case, the mere fact that it was believed at first that the first accused was concerned in the actual murder would not debar the Court from excluding all the evidence against the accused on the charge of murder, and convicting him of the charge under section 201, Indian Penal Code.

To the same effect is the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Teprinessa v Emperor (3) where it was held that although there might be circumstances of grave suspicion that a person was the murder, his conviction under section 201, Indian Penal Code, would not be vitiated by the existence of such circumstances.

If the accused had been charged with murder alone and had been acquitted, there would be no legal obstacle in the way of his being charged again with an offence under section 201, Indian Penal Code. As pointed out by the learned Judges of the Chief Court of the Punjab the real test is whether the accused has been prejudiced by the alternative charge made in one trial. I do not think in his case there was any such prejudice and, therefore, the appeal will be dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s 193—Application to refer case to Jirga under Frontier Crimes Regulations—Summary enquiry—Proceedings whether judicial—Magistrate whether can administer oath—Giving false evidence, charge of, whether can be sustained.

A applied to the District Magistrate stating that his son had been murdered by certain persons and asking that the case be referred to a Council of Elders under the Frontier Crimes Regulations of 1901. The District Magistrate directed the Magistrate Ilaga to make a summary enquiry into the case and the Magistrate Ilaga thereupon took the statement on oath of the applicant and his four witnesses. The applicant's story having been found to be false, complaints were framed against him and his witnesses under section 193, Penal Code.

Held, that as the statements of the accused were not taken by the Magistrate in the course of any judicial proceeding and as he had no authority to administer an oath, the accused could not be convicted of giving false evidence under section 193, Penal Code. [p 712, col 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Mianwali, dated the 11th February 1924.

Mr. Sagar Chand and Lala Nawal Kishore for Mr. M. Shah Nawaz, for the Appellant.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment disposes of the appeals of four persons, Jahangir, Sher Khan, Shah Jahan and Gulaya, who have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Mianwali of offences under section 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and also the four appeals by the Local Government which ask that they should be convicted instead of offences under section 194 of the Code. The facts are briefly as follows:—On the 25th June 1923, Abdul Qadir made a complaint to the District Magistrate, Mianwali, under section 302-118 of the Indian Penal Code against Alam Khan and others to the effect that they had murdered his son Hamid Ullah Khan on the 17th June 1923 and had thrown his body first into a pond and later into the river Indus. The District Magistrate sent this complaint to the Superintendent of Police for enquiry under section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Whilst it was being investigated by the Police, Abdul Qadir, on the 10th July 1923, made a further application to the District Magistrate in which he repeated his previous story and said that nothing was being done by the Police owing to the influence of a certain Honorary Magistrate whom he named and asked accordingly that the District Magistrate should refer the case to a Council of Elders under section 11 of the Frontier Crimes Regulations of 1901. On this the District Magistrate passed the following order:— "Magistrate Ilaqa: 'Kindly make a summary enquiry into this case. A complaint has been made to the Police which they are investigating.' The Magistrate Ilaqa, Pir Haider Shah took the statement of Abdul Qadir on the 19th July and those of the four appellants as witnesses on subsequent dates. These witnesses supported the allegations against the accused persons in regard to the murder of Hamid Ullah Khan. On the 25th August, the Magistrate reported that the murder had been committed, but the District Magistrate on the 14th September ordered the Police to make a further enquiry. On the 17th September the Superintendent of Police reported that the complainant wanted the case to be sent to a Jirga. On the 22nd September Hamid Ullah Khan, who was alleged to have been murdered, turned up alive. In consequence of this complaints were framed against Abdul Qadir and the four present appellants. Abdul Qadir was acquitted and the appellants were convicted as already stated.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the application of the 10th July 1923 was not a complaint within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code, and that it was not sent to the Magistrate Ilaqa for enquiry under the provisions of section 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code. It is further pointed out that the District Magistrate in fact merely directed a Subordinate Magistrate to make an informal and extra-judicial enquiry in order to enable him to decide whether or not he should take action under section 11 of the Frontier Crimes Regulations. It is contended that the Magistrate Ilaqa in making this enquiry has not acted in his judicial capacity as no judicial proceedings were before him and he was, therefore, not empowered to examine the witnesses on oath, and that, therefore, they could not be prosecuted for false evidence in regard to their statements under section 193, Indian Penal Code.

The learned Government Advocate admits that the application of the 10th July 1923 is not a complaint, for it was not an allegation made to the Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Code of Criminal Procedure. The object of the informant was that action should be taken under section 11 of the Frontier Crimes Regulations. The Government Advocate, however, contends that a complaint had already been lodged on the 25th June which had been sent to the Police for investigation and that the application of the 10th July was merely in continuation thereof. In our opinion the application of the 10th July was quite distinct from the complaint of the 25th June 1923. Action had already been taken on the latter, but the complainant being afraid that the accused would not be prosecuted made a further application that the District Magistrate should take action and refer the case to a Jirga under section 11 of the Frontier Crimes Regulations. The District Magistrate though he referred in his order to a previous complaint, and did not treat the application as in continuation thereof. He directed the Magistrate Ilaqa to make a summary enquiry, and having regard to the prayer in the application, it is clear to us that his object was to ascertain whether there were sufficient grounds for taking the action which the complainant asked should be taken. Under these circumstances we consider that the enquiry made by Pr Haidar Shah was clearly an extra-judicial one and was rather of an executive character. The case reported as Fateh Ali v Empress (1) has been referred to by Counsel for the appellants and appears to us to be in point. That was a case in which the District Magistrate had received a demi-official communication from the Secretariate regarding publication of a certain pamphlet. He ordered enquiries to be made, and it was held that there having been no complaint before the District Magistrate, section 202 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was inapplicable and that the Magistrate had no lawful authority to administer an oath to accused on the occasion in question, i e., when he was examined as a witness, inasmuch as the proceedings, though taken by a Magistrate, were not magisterial proceedings taken in pursuance of any authority given by the Code of Criminal Procedure. The present case, in our opinion, is very similar. The statements of the appellants were no doubt taken by a Magistrate, but they were not taken by him in the course of any judicial proceeding, and he had no more authority to administer an oath to them than a private individual would have had. We, therefore, hold that the appellants cannot be convicted of giving false evidence under section 193, Indian Penal Code, and we accept their appeals, set aside the convictions and sentences and acquit them and direct that they be released from custody. The appeals filed at instance of the Local Government are dismissed.

Report of professional misconduct against a Pleader

JUDGMENT.—This is a report made after enquiry charging a Pleader with unprofessional conduct submitted to this Court for confirmation and the passing of such order as may be appropriate.

The facts of the case are practically undisputed and are as follows:—

The members of the local Bar appeared to have taken a dislike to the Special Power Magistrate on the ground, it is alleged, that he was in the habit of dismissing their cases because Counsel did not appear immediately the case was called on. We do not know the details of this matter, or what justification there is for the opinions formed by the members of the Bar. It is clear that the Pleaders were in the habit of behaving in Court in a manner to which the Special Power Magistrate took grave exception. It is said that they were in the habit of sitting on the table or leaning over the rails of the Bench in addressing the Court, and addressing the Court as "you" instead of "your honour." On one occasion the Special Power Magistrate took exception to this mode of address by a Pleader, and administered a stern rebuke to him in open Court. He apparently asked the Pleader what his nationality was, the necessary implication being that he was ignorant of good manners and the proper mode of addressing the Court. The Special Power Magistrate told him not to address the Court as "you," but as "your honour." This Pleader reported the circumstances to the local Bar Association. The Special Power Magistrate further passed an order to the effect that he noticed with regret that some of the Pleaders appearing in that Court had been lacking in courtesy (a) by sitting on the table or resting their hands on the rails of the Bench when addressing the Court, and (b) addressing him as "you" instead of "your honour." The order goes on—"Personally I am indifferent; but as a Judge and Magistrate I feel it my duty to point out the disrespect to the Bench and must warn all concerned to desist from the practice." There is a note on the order to the Head Clerk to hang it upon the Bench for a fortnight.

Now it is perfectly clear that these acts, which are not denied, were grossly improper. They were lacking in respect to the Court—a respect which it was the bounden duty of the members of the profession to show, and which is invariably shown by them. It is also perfectly clear that, as the Counsel did not behave becomingly when addressing the Court, he should have been severely reprimanded for his conduct; and that it was the duty of the Judge to put a stop to it. The order was a perfectly proper one, and the only exception that can be taken to it is that the Special Power Magistrate would perhaps have shown more tact if he had sent the order to the President of the Bar Association for the information of the members instead of hanging it up in open Court, which is apparently what the Pleaders principally objected to.

The Bar Association held a meeting on the 2nd March, at which they considered these two questions. As regards the order, the resolution is "that while this Association does not deny some of accusations contained in the so-called order, such as putting the arm on the rails of the Bench and using the second personal pronoun to the Judge instead of repeating "your honour" every time the pronoun has to be used, it emphatically disowns all intention to offer thereby any slight to that officer, and states that the incidents are so insignificant that nothing short of a fanciful and highly exaggerated notion of office dignity could cavil or take offence at them." We are glad to notice that there was no intention to offer any slight to the presiding officer of the Court; but it must have been known to the members of this Association that such behaviour in open Court is not to be brushed aside as insignificant, and that it was not a mere fanciful notion of office dignity, but a proper sense of duty which led the Magistrate to issue the order he did.

On the complaint of a Pleader of what is called an insult in open Court we would point out that the Magistrate was perfectly right in taking exception to that Pleader's mode of address. It is unfortunate that he used language which might have been misunderstood, but to point out lack of respect and the proper mode of addressing the Court is not insulting, and the rebuke was the result of that Pleader's own conduct. He brought it on himself, and he deserved it. The resolution passed was "that the members should suspend their practice in that officer's Court until such time when a suitable apology is tendered by him." There is a proviso to the resolution—"A member who has pending cases before that officer may appear in the cases thus pending, if he cannot obtain a release from his responsibilities in respect of those cases."

The next day the Pleader now before us wrote a letter to the Superintendent of the Jail, in which his client was in custody, asking the Superintendent to inform the under-trial prisoner "that I shall not be able to defend him at the next hearing of his case before the Special Power Magistrate of Maubin on account of the latter's bellicose attitude towards the lawyers generally. The fees given to me by the prisoner's relations will be returned to them." The Pleader then obtained the signature of his client to a petition to the District Magistrate for transfer of the case. In that petition it is stated that the Pleader had written to say that he would not appear before the present Special Power Magistrate to defend the petitioner at the next hearing on account of the said Special Power Magistrate's haughty and insulting demeanour towards the lawyers who appeared before him. It goes on—"Thereupon the petitioner's relations had been to the local lawyers from door to door, but none agreed to accept brief in the Special Power Magistrate's Court."

The case came on for hearing before the Special Power Magistrate, and the prisoner was undefended. He was convicted on the 6th March. An appeal was filed, and it was argued by the Pleader now before us. The prisoner was acquitted. The learned Sessions Judge points out that the appellant had unfortunately been left in the lurch by his Pleader in the middle of the case, and he expresses the opinion that, if that Pleader had put forward his case before the Trial Magistrate as he had done in that Court, the conclusion arrived at would have been different. The judgment in appeal was passed on the 5th April, so that the result of leaving his client in the lurch was that he had to remain in custody for a month longer than was necessary.

After writing the letter to the Superintendent of the Jail, the Pleader interviewed the prisoner's employer who had originally engaged him on the prisoner's behalf, and it is clear that permission was given to him to throw up his brief, and arrangement was made that he would not appear before the Magistrate, but that he would file and conduct the appeal for the same fee.

The resolution of the Bar Association to boycott the Special Power Magistrate was recalled, but the Pleader before us still supported the original resolution and would not agree to its being rescinded. The charge framed in this case was that the Pleader had been guilty of grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty in that he was engaged to defend under trial prisoner, Po Taik; that he accepted a fee and appeared by proxy at one hearing when the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses was reserved, that the case was then adjourned to the 6th March, but that meanwhile on the 3rd he wrote to the Chief Jailor asking him to inform Po Taik that he would not be able to defend him at the next hearing of the case; and that he did not, in fact, appear at the next hearing or any subsequent hearing of the case either personally or by proxy.

It is argued that, having obtained a release from his obligation to defend the prisoner, he was clearly not guilty of the charge that had been framed against him. There can be no question that, in the first instance, the Pleader obtained no consent to his throwing up his brief. He wrote to the prisoner saying that he would not appear, and he so wrote obviously because of the resolution passed the previous day to boycott this particular Magistrate. It may be that, subsequently seeing that the position he had taken up was dangerous, he arranged for a consent on certain terms and conditions with a view to protecting himself from any such proceedings as these. But it is also clear that he has known throughout these proceedings the seriousness of the charge that he acted, as he did, in pursuance of this resolution to boycott the Magistrate, and that that was the motive that led him so to act.

In a case very similar to the present one, in which members of the local Bar passed a similar resolution boycotting a Court, the matter was considered by a Bench of three Judges of the Calcutta High Court—[Emperor v Tarini Mohan Barari (1)]. In the course of his judgment the learned Chief Justice said: "It must not be assumed that the Court regards the action of the Pleaders as a matter of little importance. On the contrary we regard it as a very serious matter. The Pleader deliberately abstained from attending the Subordinate Judge's Court and took part in a concerted movement to boycott the learned Judge's Court, a course of conduct which cannot be justified or tolerated. The Pleaders had duties and obligations to their clients in respect of the suits and matters entrusted to them; which were pending in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge. There was a further and equally important duty and obligation upon them, viz., to co-operate with the Court in the orderly and pure administration of justice. By the course which they adopted, the Pleaders violated and neglected their duties and obligations in both these respects. We desire to make it clear that such conduct cannot and will not be tolerated." With those remarks we entirely agree. This boycott resolution, had it not been withdrawn, would have called for serious notice of the Court, and we desire to point out that the conduct on the part of the members of the profession, such as has been mentioned and admitted in the course of this matter was conduct which the Special Power Magistrate was not only justified in taking notice of, but which he was bound to take notice of. We have no doubt that it was by reason of this resolution that the Pleader threw over his client, and that the subsequent consent was obtained merely because he saw that his position could not be justified.

The conduct in Court, which is brought out in this case, was most reprehensible. The conduct in passing this boycott resolution would have called for the severest punishment. We trust that this strong expression of our opinion will serve as a warning, and that we shall not be called upon to deal with such conduct in future.

This enquiry, however, has had an unfortunate course. The matter was first taken up by the District Magistrate, and it was pointed out to him that any such enquiry must be held in the Magistrate's Court. An enquiry was thereupon held by the Magistrate, but, as he had framed no charge, we set aside that enquiry and directed a fresh enquiry by his successor.

The matter has now been pending for a very long time, and though we think that there is no real substance in the defence the matter of the boycott resolution was not contained in the charge and he was not called upon to meet it and, therefore, we do not consider that it would be proper to pass any order of suspension. We trust that the warning that has been given and the fact that it is known that such resolutions of boycott are grossly improper and that, if repeated, they will be severely dealt with, will be sufficient. The Rule will, therefore, be discharged.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), as amended by (Act XVIII of 1923), ss 339, 339 (2) — Approver, proceedings against—Certificate of public prosecutor, whether essential—Provision, whether retrospective—"Statements" in s. 330 (2), whether include statements before pardoning Magistrate—Approver not examined about such statements—Use against him whether legal.

Under section 339, Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, as amended in 1923, the certificate by the Public Prosecutor that in his opinion the approver has not complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made, is a condition precedent to the validity of trial of the approver. But this does not apply to a case in which the pardon had been declared forfeited by the Magistrate and the proceedings against the approver, after the forfeiture, commenced before the amended section came into force [p 716, cols 1 & 2].

The words "the statement made by a person who has accepted the tender of pardon" in sub-section (2) of section 339 of the Code are wide enough to cover a statement before the pardoning Magistrate [p 716, col 2].

It is not, however, fair to use such statements of approver against him unless they are put to him in his examination as accused person and he is asked if he has any explanation to offer regarding them [ibid].

Appeal against the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Raipur, in Sessions Trial No. 23 of 1923, dated the 11th December 1923.

Mr. N. G. Sarkar, R.B., for the Appellant.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The mother, wife and two daughters of Chhattu Nai, a resident of Mouza Bandabra in the Janjgir Tahsil of the Bilaspur District were murdered by a number of villagers about midnight between the 11th and 12th September 1922. A third daughter Punai survived the murderous assault. Seven persons were convicted of the murder and attempt to murder and were sentenced in Sessions Trial No. 36 of 1923. The case came up in appeal to this Court and the convictions were upheld. The present appellants Gangaram and Bastiram were approvers in that case. They were examined by the Magistrate who tendered the pardon on the 3rd October 1922 when they implicated themselves and other persons in the murders. When examined by the Committing Magistrate they stated that they knew nothing and the Magistrate having held that they had forfeited their pardon put them on trial with the accused in the case on the 20th November 1922 and later committed them to the Sessions Court. On a reference to the Additional Sessions Judge this Court quashed that commitment and directed them to be examined as witnesses in the Sessions trial. They adhered to their retracting statement before the Committing Magistrate. They have now been separately tried for the offences of murder and attempt to murder and convicted and sentenced to death and transportation for life for the two offences.

It has been rightly found by the Sessions Judge that the two appellants have forfeited their pardon. The only question now is whether the appellants took part in the murders. The only eye-witnesses of the offence were Chhattu Nai and Punai. Chhattu was murdered about eight days after he was examined as a witness in the previous Sessions trial. His depositions before the Committing Magistrate and the Sessions Court have been admitted in evidence by the Sessions Judge under section 33 of the Evidence Act. Punai is the only eye-witness examined at this trial.

Before dealing with the merits of the evidence three objections in law urged on behalf of the appellants have to be considered.

The first is that in the absence of a certificate by the Public Prosecutor that in his opinion the appellants have not complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made the trial is without jurisdiction. The Counsel for the Crown contends that such certificate is, under section 339, Criminal Procedure Code, not a condition precedent to the validity of the trial. We are of opinion that, as the section is worded, the certificate is essential to the validity of the trial, but we think that it does not apply to a case in which the pardon had been declared forfeited by the Magistrate and the proceedings against the approver after the forfeiture commenced before the section came into force. Here the section came into force on the 1st September 1923 and the proceedings against the approvers began on the 19th March 1923. This objection, therefore, fails.

The second objection is that the statements of the approvers before the pardoning Magistrate are not admissible against them in the trial. It is urged that the statement referred to in section 339 (2) is only the statement made before the Committing Magistrate. We think that the words "the statement made by a person who has accepted the tender of pardon" in sub-section (2) are wide enough to cover a statement before the pardoning Magistrate. In fact the statement before the pardoning Magistrate is likely to be the only statement of any use against the approver where the retraction has begun in the Committing Magistrate's Court. In the present case, however, we do not think it fair to use the appellants' statements against them for the reason that the statements were not put to them in their examination as accused persons and they were not asked if they had any explanation to offer regarding them.

The third objection is that Chhattu's statement is not admissible under section 33 of the Evidence Act, the appellants not being parties to the proceedings in which they were made. This objection must be sustained with regard to Chhattu's statement at the previous trial in the Sessions Court where the appellants were only witnesses. But in the Committing Magistrate's Court where Chhattu was examined as a witness the appellants were, as a matter of fact, parties, though wrongly made such, and had the right and opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses. We, therefore, think that Chhattu's statement before the Committing Magistrate is admissible against the appellants.

PANCHAM SAO V. EMPEROR.

We now come to the merits of the evidence. This consists of the deposition of Punai and the statement of Ohhattu before the Committing Magistrate. Punai's evidence is attacked on the ground that there is a possibility of her having been tutored before she made her first statement to the Sub-Inspector of Police, and that there are discrepancies in the statements made by her at various times. Punai was one of the persons who were attacked and was in a position to have witnessed what occurred. The Police appear to have visited her while in hospital to take her statement and probably Ohhattu also visited her there. But we have no grounds for believing that she was tutored either by Ohhattu or any of the Police. Her story does not bear marks of tutoring. There are a few discrepancies in the various statements made by her, but these are immaterial, and they indicate an absence of tutoring. Tutoring in the case of a child of her age would scarcely be effective. Possibly it would have led to discrepancies more material than appear in her statements. We agree with the Sessions Judge in accepting her statement as to the presence of the two appellants among the men who entered the room where she was sleeping with her mother and sisters.

Ohhattu stated before the Committing Magistrate that he saw the two appellants with others go into his house.

Both the appellants denied that they had gone to Ohhattu's house and had taken part in the offences. Bastiram further pleaded an alibi. Gangaram produced no evidence in defence. Bastiram examined four witnesses to prove that he was in Malda on the day of the murder. The evidence of the first three witnesses is, as the Sessions Judge observes, too vague to be accepted. The fourth witness does not even try to support the alibi.

We are satisfied that the appellants were among the persons who entered Ohhattu's house and committed the murders. As regards the punishment, considering the length of time that has elapsed between the commission of the offences and the trial, and the fact that there is no corroboration of the evidence of Punai as to the actual part taken by the appellants in the murders, we alter the sentence to one of transportation for life.

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional District Magistrate, Patna, affirming that of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Dinapore, dated the 27th October, 1924.

Mr S. N. Banerji, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was convicted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Dinapore under section 2, clause (2) of the Bye-laws framed by the District Board of Patna which provides that whoever makes any encroachment or causes obstruction by means of a building wall, chabutra or fencing or by planting trees or cultivating crops, or in any other way on any road, shall on conviction, be liable to a fine not exceeding Rs. 20 and to further penalty not exceeding Rs. 2 each day after the imposition of the fine for the continuance of the encroachment, obstruction or nuisance. The offence with which the petitioner has been charged is that he has constructed a house on a portion of the District Board road. The learned Sub-Deputy Magistrate has found it as a fact and in fact it was admitted before him that there was a slight encroachment on the District Board road. He accordingly imposed a fine of Rs. 15 under section 2, clause (2) of the By-laws. In so far as the fine of Rs. 15 is concerned, the petitioner has no grievance; but the learned Sub-Deputy Magistrate proceeded to impose a further fine of Rs. 2 per day till the encroachment continued. The petitioner objects to the fine of Rs. 2 per day for the period during which the encroachment continued. He contends that the Magistrate had not jurisdiction to impose a fine for an offence which had not been committed at the time the charge was laid against him and the sentence was passed. In other words, he says that the conviction in so far as it relates to a future offence of continuing the encroachment is bad in law.

To my mind the contention is sound. The learned Sub-Deputy Magistrate allowed the petitioner one month's time to remove the encroachment and he ordered that if the petitioner failed to remove the encroachment within a month, he would be liable to pay a fine of Rs. 2 per day till the encroachment continued. It has been stated on behalf of the petitioner that within the month allowed by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, he approached the District Board authorities for a settlement of the portion of the road encroached upon and the District Board authorities, as a matter of fact, have settled this portion of the road with him on a certain rental per year. The letter of the District Board Engineer on the record supports this contention of the petitioner. As authority for the proposition that it is bad in law to impose a daily fine in anticipation of the commission of the offence, reference has been made to Ram Krishna Bishwas v. Mohendra Nath Morumdar (1), Nilmani Ghatak v.

(1) 27 C. 505; 14 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 371.

Emperor (2) and In re Limbaji Tulsiram (3). These cases support the contention of the learned Vakil for the petitioner.

The sentence of fine of Rs. 2 per day imposed by the learned Sub-Deputy Magistrate for the continuation of the encroachment is, therefore, bad in law and must be set aside. The fine of Rs. 15 imposed by him under clause (2) of section 2 for the encroachment will stand. The additional fine of Rs. 2 per day has already been realised. This will be refunded.

Penal Code, (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 182, 211, distinction between—Ingredients of offences

To constitute an offence under section 182, Penal Code, the information given to a public servant should not only be false in fact but it must be false to the knowledge or to the belief of the informant and it is not sufficient that the accused had reasons to believe it to be false; whereas, under section 211 it is sufficient if the accused makes his complaint without any just grounds and when he acts without due care or caution. Appeal against the judgment of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, dated the 15th October 1923.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the appellant a clerk in the Commissioner's Office, Karachi, has been convicted by the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, under section 182 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200.

X v. EMPEROR.

On the 26th of April 1922 the appellant with five other persons sent a petition to the District Superintendent of Police, Karachi, inter alia stating that "there is a house bearing No. 427 tenanted by Mr. Y a Jew. He has two grown up daughters who are apparently immoral women and carry on the profession of prostitution." Kadirbux Sub-Inspector who was deputed to investigate into the complaint reported after a certain perfunctory inquiry that the allegations contained in the petition were true, and the City Police Inspector forwarded the same to the City Magistrate, Karachi, for necessary action.

In answer to a notice issued by the City Magistrate calling upon the appellant to file a formal information before him enabling him to take action under section 41 of the District Police Act, the appellant in his reply dated 24th July 1922 demurred to his doing so on the ground that he was only one of the signatories to the petition and that the Police who had subsequently investigated into the matter should take action and that he and the other signatories should be called as witnesses. The City Magistrate thereupon required the Police to lodge a complaint against Y if the nuisance still continued. This led to a further investigation of the Police which was however entrusted to a different Sub-Inspector by name Muriymal. He reported that the allegations made by the signatories in their petition of the 26th April 1922 were groundless, and that the appellant had filed this petition out of enmity, there being a dispute between one A and one B over a house and that the appellant who was a partisan of A had requested Y to file a prosecution against B which Y had refused to do, thereby making X his enemy. On the 11th of September 1922, the appellant filed another petition before the City Magistrate challenging the report of Muriymal and asked for a magisterial inquiry urging inter alia as follows "To this end I request that in addition to the signatories of the application the gentlemen shown in the attached list might be summoned. If required, I shall on being summoned by the Court, file the information. I might however state further that since the former Sub-Inspector made inquiries into the matter there has been considerable improvement in the condition, the evil complained of having diminished considerably. But the house remains undoubtedly a sort of epidemic into the quarter which might at any time carry infection to a young heart and ruin it for ever. There are already two living examples wherein the victims of this disease are misery to the unhappy families to which they belong and it is the knowledge of this fact alone which prompts me to remain unabashed in my efforts to have the germs of this disease exterminated from the quarter altogether." In the annexed list he mentioned names of nineteen witnesses one of whom was C a clerk in the G.P.O. Karachi (Naushahio). This vehement protest resulted in a magisterial inquiry against Y's daughters in which the appellant was examined as a witness. The learned Magistrate however disbelieved the appellant and his witnesses and found that the allegations contained in the application were false and that the appellant was the prime mover in the complaint. The District Superintendent of Police thereafter sanctioned the prosecution of the appellant under section 182, Indian Penal Code. The charge framed against the appellant is however limited to the statement contained in the petition that "the daughters of Y were apparently leading an immoral life." It has been found by the learned Trying Magistrate on the evidence recorded before him that Y earns Rs. 125 per mensem, that his two daughters work as school mistresses earning Rs. 30 and Rs. 35 respectively and that he supplements his income by keeping fowls and selling eggs. His family which consists of himself, his wife, two daughters and one son, are of respectable Jew family and being Jews, his daughters do not observe pardah. Mr. Lobo has not seriously contested the findings of the lower Court on these points, though he has disputed the finding of the lower Court that the Y girls themselves are respectable girls. For the purposes of this appeal, he has however conceded that it may be that the girls are respectable girls and that the allegation contained in the report of X is false. I have gone through the record carefully and I cannot but come to the conclusion that the Y girls themselves are respectable and not with standings the denial of Mr Lobo on behalf of the appellant the allegation made against them is absolutely false. Mr. Lobo has however rightly pointed out that the learned Additional City Magistrate had not before his mind clearly the distinction between the ingredients constituting an offence under section 182, Indian Penal Code and section 211, Indian Penal Code. One of the grounds urged on behalf of the appellant was that the appellant was under a belief that one C a cousin of his had been spoiled by one of the Y girls. While commenting on the evidence of C the learned Magistrate has observed that "C is a thorough scoundrel and it is just possible that he tried to cultivate the friendship of the boy (the brother of the girls) in order to be able to go to their house and get acquainted with the girls. It is also possible that he might have, like a rake, boasted of his friendship with the girls from which his relation X jumped to the conclusion that the girls were immoral and called them prostitutes." The learned Magistrate was of opinion that the only point for him to consider was whether the appellant made the allegation complained of in good faith, that is, with due care and attention. Section 182 of the Indian Penal Code which deals with giving information to a public servant as opposed to lodging a complaint in Court requires that the information given by the accused should not only be false in fact but it must be false to the knowledge or to the belief of the informant. It is not sufficient that the accused has reasons to believe it to be false, but he must know or believe it to be false. Section 211, Indian Penal Code, however, on the other hand does not require that the accused should know or believe his complaint to be false. It is sufficient if he makes his complaint without any just grounds and when he acts without due care or caution he comes under this section; under section 182, Indian Penal Code, there must be positive and constructive knowledge on his part in order to sustain the charge. See Emperor v. Ramchandra Yeshwant Adukar (1) and Rayan Kutti v. Emperor (2).

C was not examined as a witness in the magisterial inquiry against Y but it does appear from the application dated 26th April 1922 referred to above that the appellant had in view two boys of whom was in every probability C, whom he had referred to as a witness in the annexed list. There is no doubt, in my mind, that the appellant has been reckless in making unfounded, highly defamatory and false allegations against the two young girls which has resulted in their annoyance. The accused has further attempted to support his reckless allegation in this trial by calling several witnesses whose evidence is not at all convincing and appears to be interested. I am however not satisfied on the record that it has been conclusively proved that the appellant knew or believed the information to be false. It has also not been shown that the appellant had a strong motive to make this allegation knowing or believing it to be false. The refusal of Y to file a prosecution against B on the desire of the accused to secure the house, even if true, would not, in my opinion, be sufficient to induce the accused to make the petition or to insist on a magisterial inquiry. I think on the whole he is entitled to the benefit of doubt, and I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit him.

The fine, if paid, should be refunded to him.

Though there is no provision relating to counter-claims in the Civil Procedure Code, there is nothing to prevent a Judge treating a properly stamped counter-claim as the plaint in a cross-suit and hearing the two together.

The equitable and discretionary relief of specific performance cannot be granted where the transaction is described as a temporary and not as an outright sale.

Second appeal against a decree of the Divisional Court, Myaungmya, in Civil Appeal No. 10 of 1922

Mr. Clark, for the Appellants

Mr. Barnabas, for the Respondent

JUDGMENT.—In this suit the plaintiff seeks to recover possession of two plots of lands, relying on their title. The defendants plead that they were put in possession of the same in exchange for the cancellation of a debt of Rs. 1,850 and for the payment of a further sum of Rs. 50 that it was an outright sale, and that it would be inequitable to eject them. They say that the plaintiff promised to give them a registered deed whenever they wanted it, but put them off from time to time.

They accordingly counter-claimed for specific performance of the alleged agreement. The Trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit and allowed the defendants' counter-claim.

The Appellate Court modified the decree and allowed the plaintiff to recover possession on payment of Rs. 1,900.

The defendants appeal.

The respondent urged that the counter-claim was a form of suit unknown to the Code of Civil Procedure and would not lie.

This is strictly speaking correct, but there is nothing to prevent a Judge treating the counter-claim as the plaint in a cross-suit and hearing the two together if he is so disposed and if the counter-claim is properly stamped. The learned Trial Judge did so, exercise his option, and heard the two suits together and there is nothing to prevent him from adopting this course.

With regard to the appeal, it appeared that the appellants who seek to have their counter-claim allowed and a decree passed for the specific performance of the alleged contract to sell the land outright, had themselves put in evidence extracts from Register No. 1, in which the transaction was described as a temporary and not an outright sale and did not call the Revenue Surveyor to explain how such an entry came to be made.

This alone would prevent us from granting the appellants the equitable and discretionary relief of specific performance of an alleged contract of outright sale.

We confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Under section 125 of the Madras Estates Land Act, under a sale for arrears of rent, the purchaser takes subject to any encumbrance created before the passing of the Act. [p. 722, col 2]

Where under a mortgage of occupancy rights, created before the Madras Estates Land Act, the mortgagee obtains a decree, and subsequently the landlord brings the holding to sale under a rent-decree, but does not put an end to the occupancy rights of the defaulter by any real and legal proceedings under his rent sale, and the occupancy tenancy is still in the holding and possession of the defaulter when the mortgagee executes his decree and obtains possession, his rights under the Court sale cannot be interfered with by the landlord's rights under the rent sale. JUDGMENT.—The facts necessary for the disposal of this appeal are as follows.—One Sellappa Asari was an occupancy tenant in the 1st defendant's estate. On 4th May 1901, he mortgaged the five items of the plaint property. The mortgagee sued to recover his money and obtained a decree for sale of mortgaged property on 4th June 1912. It became final on 9th January 1913 and the property was sold in execution of the decree on 15th November 1915. The plaintiff purchased all the five items on 7th June 1916 from the auction-purchaser and got delivery through Court on 31st January 1917. In the meantime on 22nd March 1913 items Nos. 3 and 4 of the plaint property were sold by the landlord the 1st defendant for the arrears of rent on the holding by Sellappa Asari and the 1st defendant alleges that he bought in these properties for eight annas and got delivery of them on 25th October 1915 and that he sold them again to defendants Nos. 2 to 8. The question at issue was whether the plaintiff's purchase on the footing of the mortgage decree prevails against the 1st defendant's purchase in the rent sale. The lower Appellate Court has held that the plaintiff's title did not prevail against the 1st defendant's rent sale title, and therefore, dismissed the suit and the plaintiff appeals.

I cannot see why the plaintiff was not given at least a decree for items Nos. 1, 2 and 5. The 1st defendant puts forward no claim to items Nos. 1 and 2 nor do any of the other defendants; and as regards item No. 5, although the 1st defendant claims that he bought that also in the rent sale, his sale certificates, Exhibits I and II, show that that was not so.

As regards item No. 3, a garden with an indigo vat and item No. 4 nanja, it is not quite easy to say definitely what field numbers they correspond to, but, so far as I can ascertain from the documents filed in this case, item No. 4 seems to correspond to nanja Nos. 200 and 201, while the garden in item No. 3 appears to be described under Nos. 240 and 244 with an area of 10 acres and 3 cents, and the vat appears under Nos. 240 and 241 with an area of 1 acre and 8 cents.

Under section 125 of the Madras Estates Land Act, under a sale for arrears of rent, the purchaser takes subject to any encumbrance created before the passing of the Act. The encumbrance in this case was created in 1901. Prima facie then the rent sale is subject to it; but the contesting defendants contend that the mortgage was extinguished when the decree was passed and that, as 1st defendant was not a party to the mortgage suit, the decree in it will not bind him. The lower Appellate Court has accepted both these contentions, but it has wholly misunderstood one crucial fact in the case, and that is that the 1st defendant never put an end, under cover of his rent sale, to the occupancy right of the defaulter. The rent sale was on 22nd March 1913. Under Exhibit D(1) dated 15th February 1915 the 1st defendant had issued a patta for Fasti 1324 to the defaulter for Nos. 200 and 201 (1 acre and 8 cents), and 240 (10 acres and 3 cents) i. e., for the whole of items Nos. 3 and 4; so that, for this Fasli the 1st defendant issued pattas to the defaulter for all that he ostensibly bought in under his rent sale. The patta for the previous Fasli 1323 is not filed, but there is no presumption that it will be anything different from the patta for Fasli 1324. Prior to Exhibit D (1) but subsequent to the rent sale, is a notice Exhibit D dated 23rd June 1914 by 1st defendant to the defaulter informing him that arrears are due on the indigo vat and that, unless they were paid up, the holding would be sold. This was the holding already sold for arrears of rent on 22nd March 1913 and alleged to have been bought in. The sale was apparently a sham.

First defendant alleged a sort of delivery through Court on 25th October 1915 of the items sold at rent sale on 22nd March 1913. There is no documentary evidence of this delivery and that it was a sham is clear from the facts that the sale itself appears to have been a sham and that on 2nd May 1916 1st defendant again issued patta for Fasli 1326 to the defaulter for Nos. 240 and 241, area 1 acre and 8 cents, the indigo vat, and followed it up by a similar patta Exhibit D-3 on 25th May 1918 for Fasli 1327. On 28th January 1917 and 30th October 1917 he accepted rent from plaintiff for the indigo vat on behalf of the registered pattadar, Sellappa Asari, i. e., the defaulter (see Exhibits D-4 and D-5). On even date with Exhibit D-3 is Exhibit VI a patta for Fasli 1327 to 2nd defendant for item No. 3 (garden) and No. 4. This is the first issue of a patta to any one else but the defaulter.

There is absolutely no evidence that the occupancy tenancy of the defaulter had ever been terminated by any real and proper legal proceedings on, or before 15th November 1915 the date of the sale in execution of the mortgage-decree. It was in the holding and possession of the defaulter and was his property on the date of that sale. This is the property which has passed to that plaintiff, of which he got delivery on 31st January 1917, and of which 1st defendant never got delivery. First defendant, therefore, could not convey it to any one else. He never enforced his rights under the alleged rent sale and never terminated the defaulter's occupancy right, which in consequence of his inaction, passed to plaintiff, beyond the reach of 1st defendant, long before the date of patta to 2nd defendant. It is impossible, therefore, to see how the plaintiff's right on the footing of the Court sale could possibly be interfered with by the 1st defendant's right under his rent sale. The ruling in Vemanna Venkatachella Naidu v. Ethirajammal (1) relied on by the Subordinate Judge has no application to this case since there no patta was issued after the sale for arrears of rent and the occupancy right of the tenant had obviously been terminated by the rent sale.

I must, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the District Munsif with costs to the plaintiff from defendants Nos. 1 and 2 here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Second Appeal No. 1131 of 1921 follows the decision in this case and the lower Appellate Court's decree must be reversed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Trade mark—Exclusive use of imported article with particular trade mark—Infringement.

An importer who by advertising and pushing the sale of goods under a particular mark secures a wide popularity for the mark in relation to the goods sold by him is entitled to the protection of the Court for that mark in the country of importation even against the producer of the goods. [p. 725, col. 2.]

COWIE & CO v. PATEL BROTHERS.

• Mr. McDonnell, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Leach, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application on behalf of the defendants for the issue of a commission to Scotland to take the evidence of John O Wright, the Managing Director of the Burnbank Foundry Company, Limited, Falkirk, Scotland, and of the other Directors and servants of the same Company, and the circumstances upon which this application is based are as follows —

This is a suit to restrain the defendants from importing iron panels bearing certain designs which the plaintiffs claim to be their trade mark.

The plaintiffs' case, according to the plaint, is that for over 20 years they have adopted the mark of a horse and of a peacock or two peacocks to distinguish their goods, and that they have for the past 20 years and upwards imported into Burma iron panels bearing as their trade-mark the representation of a horse and iron panels bearing the representation of one peacock or two peacocks, and the plaintiffs accordingly claim that they have had the exclusive use of these marks in Burma for more than 20 years, that they are used exclusively by them to denote that the panels bearing either one or the other of the said marks are their own importation, and that the marks have acquired a reputation and are well known among buyers; the plaintiffs claim to be entitled to restrain all other persons from importing or selling in Burma iron panels under such marks or under imitation thereof, and allege that during the month of February they for the first time became aware that the defendants were importing iron panels bearing marks which are an infringement of, and likely to be confused with the plaintiffs' marks. One of the defendants' marks consists of an exact representation of the plaintiffs' horse mark, and another of the defendants' marks is a representation of two peacocks on an iron panel, and the plaintiffs claim that the use by the defendants of these marks on the iron panels is an infringement of the plaintiffs' rights to import and sell iron panels under such trade-marks.

The defendants in their written statement admit having imported the iron panels, with the designs complained of but deny that such representations have been used or understood as an indication that the goods of such designs were the goods of, or imported by, the plaintiffs, and they deny that such representations are trade-marks, and say that if there is any proprietary right in any of such representations which they deny, they believe that such rights are vested in the manufacturers of the goods displaying them, and they say that they have imported (as they lawfully might) cast-iron panels from England, the design of which is one of the stock designs of the manufacturers in England and is similar to the designs on iron panels imported by the plaintiffs, and it is, therefore, upon the latter issue that they desire the evidence to be taken on commission.

In the affidavit of Easoof Mahomed Hoosain Patel, a partner of the defendant firm, it is stated in support of this application that the panels imported by the defendants are manufactured by the Burnbank Foundry Company, Limited, of Falkirk, Scotland, and that the defendants contend that if there are any proprietary rights in the said designs, such rights are vested in the manufacturers, and it is stated that it is essential for the defendant's case that the evidence sought to be taken on commission should be taken.

In opposition to this application the plaintiffs contend that such evidence as is sought to be taken on commission is wholly irrelevant, because, even assuming the statements in the written statement and in the affidavit in support of this application to be correct, it would be no defence to the suit, because an importer of an article can claim a mark even in opposition to its manufacturer, and the plaintiffs claim that they have used this mark in Burma and have acquired a reputation here for the mark by using it for a period longer than any other importer or its manufacturer has. If, it is sought by the defendants to prove that the mark had acquired a reputation here before the use of it. by the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs say that this fact can only be proved by local evidence, and not by the evidence of the manufacturers in Scotland. In support of the plaintiffs' contention, I was referred to some authorities, and the first of them which, in my view, I ought to consider, is Ebrahim Currim v. Essa Abbu Sait (1). The facts and the contentions in that case were that the plaintiff claimed to have been for many years the sole importer into Bombay and Madras of umbrellas bearing certain trade-mark. The defendant had recently commenced importing and selling in Madras umbrellas which the plaintiff contended bore a trade-mark so similar as to be calculated to deceive purchasers so as to induce them to buy the defendant's umbrellas under the belief that they were buying plaintiffs. The defendant denied that the plaintiff had been the sole importer of umbrellas bearing the trade-mark in question, or that he was the owner or entitled to the exclusive use of that trade-mark, or that umbrellas bearing that trade-mark had come to be known as umbrellas imported and sold by the plaintiff alone. It was contended that the trade-mark belonged to and had since 1884, been used by a Glasgow firm which manufactured the umbrellas and supplied them to the defendant through another firm. For the purpose of the case it was assumed that the trade-mark in question had been used by the Glasgow firm before it was used by the plaintiff in India, and that it had never been used by the Glasgow firm in India before the plaintiff so used it. The contention of the defendant was that, inasmuch as the trade-mark had originally belonged to the Glasgow firm, it should not be lawfully used or claimed by the plaintiff notwithstanding that the Glasgow firm had never used it or imported umbrellas bearing it into India. It was held, however, that the defendant's contention was not sound. Mr Justice Shephard in the course of his judgment says "The question I have to determine is whether the allegation made by the defendant that the stag trade-mark used on umbrellas is the trade-mark of McIntosh Ferguson & Company, who carry on business in Glasgow, is relevant by way of defence to this suit. For the purpose of the argument it must be taken that the stag mark was used by the Glasgow firm before it was used by the plaintiff in India and that it was never used by that firm in this country before the plaintiff had begun to use it in his trade, and on this assumption it is contended that since the trade-mark originally belonged to McIntosh and Ferguson it cannot be lawfully used or claimed by the plaintiff notwithstanding that the Scotch firm have never used the mark in India or imported umbrellas bearing it into this country. In my opinion this contention is not sound and the prior use in Scotland would not justify the Scotch firm and the defendant in saying that the plaintiff's user of the trade-mark is illegal or otherwise than an exclusive user." And he concludes his judgment with the following words—"The protection which the law affords to traders using a trade-mark in this country would be seriously diminished if immunity from action were secured to rival traders, who, having brought goods into the market with the same mark, were able to prove that in some other quarter of the globe some other trader had been in the habit of using the mark for a period longer than that alleged by the plaintiff."

The next case is the West End Watch Company v. Berna Watch Company (2), in which in the course of his judgment Sir Basil Scott, C. J., states "The importer, who by advertising and pushing the sale of goods under a particular mark, secures a wide popularity for the mark in relation to the goods sold by him, is entitled to the protection of the Court for that mark in the country of importation even against the producer of the goods." This has been recognised by this Court in the unreported case of Damodar Ruttonsey v. Hormasji Adarji.

and by the Madras High Court in Laverne v. Hooper (3)."

In 13 Calcutta Weekly Notes, at page 82, is the report of an appeal from the Supreme Court of Hongkong to His Majesty in Council, namely, Ullaman & Co. v. Cesar Leuba (4), in which, inter alia, it was held by the Privy Council that an action for breach of trade-mark does not lie at the instance of the manufacturer who supplies articles when another firm carries on the actual business with the articles supplied. Lord Robertson in delivering the judgment of the Court says: "The action is for breach of trade-mark in Hongkong, and the trade-marks founded on originated with persons named Bovet, and were used by them in their business at Hongkong as dealers in watches. That Hongkong business of selling watches to the public belongs now not to the respondents but to a certain Madame Bovet, and the relation in which the respondents stand to Madame Bovet is simply that of manufacturers to a customer. Accordingly, the only watches which they sell at Hongkong they sell to Madame Bovet, and with those sales to her their business in Hongkong begins and ends. It results that the only person who could be deceived, so far as they are concerned, is Madame Bovet, and that it is not their case at all. Their case consists in ignoring the contractual relation (of manufacturers to dealer) by which they are connected with, and are separated from, Madame Bovet, and identifying themselves with the trade which belongs to her and with which, by family as well as by business interest, they are connected." In conclusion he states: "It was in the end courageously maintained for the respondents that they, in their quality of manufacturers, had sufficient interest to sue on the action. No authority supports this contention and it is against principle. It is quite true that the respondents are interested in the success of Madame Bovet's business, but this can never put them in her shoes in vindicating her rights against wrong-doers."

This last mentioned case seems to me to be an authority directly confirmatory of the law as stated in the other two cases already referred to, for it decides that the manufacturers cannot themselves sue when the dealer complains of an infringement abroad of the mark that the dealer has been in the habit of using. This must mean that as against every one including the manufacturers themselves, the dealer abroad has a right to claim the mark used by him in that country and the remedies for its infringement. In my view, therefore, the question of whether the manufacturers in Scotland have or have not used the trade-mark in Scotland or in England or elsewhere than in Burma can have no bearing whatever upon this case. On this part of the defendants' case the only question can be whether the manufacturers themselves used this trade-mark in Burma before the plaintiffs had begun to use it in their trade (an allegation which does not appear to be made by the defendants in their written statement), or whether the defendants themselves have done so. These questions seem to me to be the questions to be settled solely by local evidence. Even in the absence of the before-mentioned decision of the Privy Council in Hongkong case, I should be in complete agreement with the statements as to the law made by Mr. Justice Shephard in Ebrahim Currim v. Essa Abbu Sait (1) and Sir Basil Scott, C. J., in the West End Watch Company v. Berna Watch Company (2). But as it is, there is this decision of the Privy Council which is, of course, binding on this Court and which further strengthens the decisions of the Madras and the Bombay High Courts already referred to. I must accordingly dismiss this application with costs—Advocate's fee two gold mohurs.

Case-law referred to.

There is no difference in principle between a dismissal for incompetency or for negligence or misconduct. There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify a dismissal. Of course there may be misconduct in a servant which will not justify the determination of the contract of service by one of the parties to it against the will of the other. On the other hand, misconduct inconsistent with the fulfilment of the express or implied conditions of service will justify dismissal. Similarly even a single act of negligence may, in some circumstances, justify a dismissal. In both cases the question is one of fact and degree depending on the circumstances of each particular case. Revision against the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amraoti, in Civil Suit No. 1485 of 1923, dated the 31st August 1923.

Mr. R. R. Jaiwant, for the Applicant.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The plaintiff was employed by defendant as a Manager and Engineer for his Ginning and Pressing Factory for a period of one year commencing from 29th October 1922 on a salary of Rs. 801 for the year. He worked for 7 months and got payment for that period. His services were dispensed with with effect from 1st June 1923. Being thus thrown out of employment before the expiry of the one year's period and without any reasonable notice he claims compensation from the defendant for his wrongful dismissal without notice and assesses such compensation at the loss of the remaining five months' salary, which come to Rs. 331-8-6. He also claims Rs. 6-10-0 on account of interest thereon at 2 per cent. per mensem. The suit was instituted on 11th July 1923 that is before the expiry of the one year's period counted from 29th October 1922. The defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was found unfit for the discharge of his duties as Manager and Engineer and that he had, therefore, to be dismissed from service without notice. The Court of Small Causes held on the evidence that plaintiff was not entitled to claim any salary for the period subsequent to 1st June 1923. It came to the conclusion that plaintiff was negligent in the discharge of his duties as Manager and Engineer and that the defendant was perfectly justified in dismissing him from service. In this view of the case the plaintiff's claim was dismissed with costs. He, therefore, comes up in revision to this Court, and urges that the claim ought to have been decreed as the defendant was guilty of breach of the contract of the service and was bound to pay for the full period of one year.

The point for consideration is, is it open to a master, before the expiry of the full term of service and without serving any notice beforehand, to dispense with the services of a skilled servant employed for a particular work, on the ground that he found him unfit for it?

Before me exception is taken to the findings of the lower Court, and it is urged that they as also the evidence on which they are based, are not warranted by the pleadings; the defendant's plea was one of unfitness for the work while the evidence adduced was of neglect of duty and not of unfitness on plaintiff's part. It is argued on the strength of Munthershaw Bizonji v. The New Dhurmsey Spinning and Weaving

PANDURANG V. JAIRAMDAS.

Co. (1) that the proof of neglect of duty must be confined to the specific acts of negligence pleaded, and that proof of negligence ought not to have been allowed to be given to support a general or vague plea of unfitness. It is pointed out that unfitness or incompetency is a disqualification which could not be said to have been brought home to the plaintiff by merely offering to prove negligence, which was never pleaded. The distinction is no doubt very fine, but I think the objection on the ground of improper proof appears to have been taken at the stage of trial. It would, no doubt, have been very desirable for the lower Court to have asked the defendant to amplify his plea of unfitness or incompetency by specifying the instances in which he found him unfit. It is just possible that the unfitness may be due equally to his want of qualifications necessary for the due discharge of his duties as a Manager and Engineer, as to his neglect of such duty or it may be due to both.

Under the English Law, if a servant willfully disobeys, or habitually neglects the lawful commands of his master, is grossly incompetent, absents himself from service, is guilty of gross misconduct, or otherwise acts in a manner incompatible with the due and faithful discharge of his duty, he may be dismissed by the master without notice or compensation. If a servant's wage is payable at fixed periods, the servant is not entitled to payment of any portion of an instalment, which has not become due at the time of dismissal. As regards the objection based on the absence of notice it is sufficient to say that the plaintiff has neither alleged nor proved that any stipulation as to notice existed in the terms of his engagement, nor that there was any custom requiring such notice. In an action of wrongful dismissal it is a sufficient defence if the master can show that a good ground for dismissal did at the time of such dismissal exist, even though the master may have alleged another ground of dismissal, or may have been unaware that such ground of dismissal existed. Jenks' Digest of English Civil Law, paragraphs 473 and 476, and cases cited in Halsbury's Laws of England, Volume XX, paragraphs 185-198, and 214-218. It could be safely laid down that there is no difference in principle between a dismissal for incompetency or for negligence or misconduct. There is no fixed rule of law defining the degree of misconduct which will justify a dismissal. Of course there may be misconduct in a servant which will not justify the determination of the contract of service by one of the parties to it against the will of the other. On the other hand, misconduct inconsistent with the fulfilment of the express or implied conditions of service will justify dismissal. Similarly even a single act of negligence may, in some circumstances, justify a dismissal. In both the question is one of fact and degree depending on the circumstances of each particular case. In Baster v London & County Printing Works (2) it was held that the master was justified in dismissing a servant for his neglectful management of a printing press on one occasion by which serious damage was caused to the machine. What circumstances will put a servant into the position of not being able to perform in a due manner his duties, or of not being able to perform his duty in a faithful manner it is impossible to enumerate. In an action by the acting manager of a Covent Garden Theatre for wrongful dismissal from his situation to which amongst other pleas the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff's conduct was calculated to prejudice the interest of the Theatre Vaughan, J., said "It is a question of fact whether the plaintiff was so conducting himself as that it would have been injurious to the interest of the theatre to have kept him. If he was, I should have no difficulty in saying that it would be good ground for dismissal." Lacy v Osbaldiston (3) quoted in Smith's Law of Master and Servant, 7th Edition at page 79 Pollock, C. B. in Lomas v. Arding (4) said: "Suppose the plaintiff had conducted himself on all occasions in a negligent and lazy spirit, there may be insuperable difficulty in a legal definition of the plaintiff's conduct, and yet the defendant would be justified in discharging him from his service. It would be a question of evidence."

As regards the servant's incompetency the question is similarly one of fact. Where a skilled labourer, artizan or artist is employed there is on his part an implied warranty that he is of skill reasonably competent to the task he undertakes—"Spondes peritiam artis," Harmer v. Cornelius (5).

In the case before us the defendant had engaged plaintiff to manage a Ginning and Pressing Factory, as its Manager and Engineer. Supposing that the skill and competency of plaintiff are tested by the employment and he is found to be utterly incompetent, is the employer bound, nevertheless, to go on employing him to the end of the term for which he is engaged, notwithstanding his incompetency? It seems very unreasonable that an employer should be compelled to go on employing the man who having represented himself to be incompetent turns out to be incompetent. Suppose an Engineer is retained by a Railway Company to drive an Express train for a year and is found to be utterly unskilful or incompetent to drive or regulate the Locomotive, are the Railway Company still bound under pain of an action to entrust the lives of thousands to his dangerous and demonstrated incapacity? Similarly where a clerk is retained for a year to keep a merchant's books, and it turns out that he is ignorant not only of book keeping but of Arithmetic, is the merchant bound to continue him in his employment? Misconduct in a servant is according to every day's experience a justification of a discharge. The failure to afford the requisite skill which had been expressly or impliedly promised is a breach of legal duty and, therefore, misconduct. The rule of the Civil law, "Imperitia adnumeratur" applies. So in Spain v. Arnott (6) Lord Ellenborough, speaking of a servant who had refused to perform his duty says "The master is not bound to keep him on as a burdensome and useless servant to the end of the year." And it appears that there is no material difference between a servant who will not and a servant who cannot perform the duty for which he was hired (Smith's Law of Master and Servant, 7th Edition, page 83).

It will thus be seen that if the master discovers in the course of the employment that his servant is either incompetent and, therefore, cannot perform his duty, or does not or will not perform and thus neglects to discharge his duty, with that degree of skill and tact of management which is ordinarily expected of a servant skilled in the branch for which he is employed, it ought to be a sufficient justification to support a dismissal of the servant without notice even before the end of the term. The Trial Judge who heard the witnesses including the plaintiff and the defendant's agent, has held that the plaintiff was neglectful of his duty, and that there was ample justification for the defendant's master to dismiss him for that reason. This finding is supported by the evidence on record and is a good finding on a question of fact. In Issur Chunder Mookherjee v. Puddo Lochun Goopta (7) it was held that if the master can show that he has a good cause for dismissing his servant, he may dismiss him notwithstanding that the contract or agreement between them is for a fixed period, and that it was not necessary for him to go through the form of suing for the cancellation of the engagement. The defendant has established to the satisfaction of the Trial Judge that he had ample justification for dismissing the plaintiff without notice and before the expiry of the full term. One need only read plaintiff's own deposition to be convinced of his incompetency or neglect of duty, or failure to perform his duty with that degree of skill and tact of management which is to be ordinarily expected of Manager and Engineer of a Ginning and Pressing Factory. Judging the facts of this case in the light of the decided cases I hold that there was enough material before the Trial Court to show that the plaintiff did not discharge his duties as Manager and Engineer as satisfactorily as he ought to have done and that he was rightly dismissed without notice before the expiry of the term of one year. It would not serve any useful purpose for me to enter into any detailed discussion as to how far each of the acts or omissions or failures proved in the case supports the charge of unfitness which covers incompetency, negligence or even misconduct on plaintiff's part. It is sufficient to say that on the evidence before it, it was open to the Trial Court to come to the conclusion to which it did come, and that I do not see any good reason to interfere with the decision which appears to me to be in accordance with law.

The suit was rightly dismissed by the Small Cause Court Judge and consequently I reject this petition of revision with costs. The costs in the Court below will be paid as already ordered.

A forged endorsement of an instrument is a nullity and conveys no title to endorsee. It is as much a nullity as a forged cheque or a forged bond, provided there has been no negligence on the part of the true owner in allowing the instrument to come into the hands of the forger. A holder under a forged endorsement is not a holder in due course [p. 731, col. 2, p. 732, col. 1]

Where a share and insurance broker purchases War Bonds for a customer, but pledges them to secure a personal loan after forging endorsements in his own favour, the true owner cannot be said to be guilty of negligence if he relies upon the statement of the forger to the effect that the instruments are not ready for issue, and takes prompt measures to notify the fraud and recover the instruments when he comes to know of the forgery [p. 732, col. 1]

Possession of War Bonds by a share and insurance broker which come to him in the course of business for handing them over to a customer and which he pledges to a Bank for his personal loan after forging endorsements in his favour, is not such juridical possession as will under section 178, Contract Act, give the Bank any title to the bonds as against the customer. In such a case, the Bank cannot hold the bonds against the true owner, and the Bank by accepting them as security for the advance and by resisting the demand of the true owner, is guilty of conversion. [p. 732, col. 2]

Mr. E. Castellino, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The main point in this suit is as to the effect of a forged endorsement. The facts of the case are connected with the exploits of C. S. Advani who absconded from Karachi on 2nd December 1918. Advani was formerly the Manager of the Central Bank and at the time when the incidents in question arose he had left the Bank and was carrying on the business of a share and insurance broker. In 1918 he was in the course of his business engaged in obtaining subscribers to the 5 per cent War loan repayable in 1918. Some of these facts are controverted but I hold them proved by the evidence and do not propose to set out my reasons for so holding at length.

Plaintiffs are Indian merchants trading in this town and defendant Bank has its principal office here. On 14th August 1918 plaintiffs paid Advani Rs. 2,500 for the purchase of War Bonds. There was a shortage of War bonds here for the number and amount desired by the plaintiffs. The Bank of

KODUMAL KALUMAL V. KARACHI BANK LTD.

Bombay, therefore, had to send to Bombay for them and they were not finally issued to Advani who had made application for them until about 23rd October 1918. The bonds were payable to order and were endorsed over by the Bank of Bombay to plaintiffs. They were two Bonds for Rs. 1,000 each Nos. G 022232 and G 022233 and one for Rs. 500 No. F 008712. It is with the two former we are concerned.

On 23rd October 1918 i.e., at or about the time he received the Bonds from the Bank of Bombay, Advani pledged them with two Banks the two for Rs. 1,000 each with the defendant Bank along with other Bonds of the face value of Rs. 10,000 to cover a loan to himself on them of Rs. 9,000 and the 3rd for Rs. 500 to the Punjab Bank. The two Bonds in suit were transferred to the defendant Bank by an endorsement which plaintiffs alleged to have been forged, viz., "pay to C. S. Advani, Kodumal Kalumal" and by Advani's own endorsement in favour of the defendant Bank. The Bond for 500 was handed over to the Punjab Bank without endorsement and on Advani's insolvency and disappearance from Karachi was after some correspondence, handed by that Bank to the Official Receiver of Advani's estate without demur. On 2nd December 1918 Advani absconded. On 29th January 1919 plaintiffs after inquiries elsewhere intimated the defendant Bank that Advani had no authority to pledge the two Bonds in suit with the Bank and claimed their return. No trace of Advani has been obtained and there is evidence of frauds practised by him on other clients of his and his disappearance from Karachi when criminal warrants were out against him lends further strong colour to the allegation that he has absconded to escape criminal liability for his actions.

Before dealing with the legal aspect of the case I deem it necessary to decide one point that has been raised by the defendant Bank in this case. The defendants say that plaintiffs authorised Advani to pledge these Bonds in suit. I have not the slightest doubt in deciding that point in favour of the plaintiffs. That Advani had no authority to pledge the Bonds is clear from the fact that Advani has absconded which he would be unlikely to do if he had authority from the plaintiffs to effect this pledge and by the oral and documentary evidence produced by plaintiffs showing that they did not authorise the pledge and that from a pecuniary point of view there was no reason why they should then desire to raise money. They have produced their cash book and Bank pass books showing they had large cash balances in September and October 1918. They also swear they had in addition Rs. 10,000 worth of War Bonds which they did not pledge to raise money. I believe plaintiffs' evidence on this point and I further believe the endorsements on the two War Bonds in favour of Advani to be forged. The plaintiffs' specimen Bank signature shows they write their name "Kodoomal Kaloomal" (Exhibit 10) whilst the endorsement spells the name "Kodumal Kaloomal". Moreover, if plaintiffs wrote or signed the endorsement in Advani's favour on the two Bonds in suit why did they not also do so with regard to the 3rd Bond for Rs. 500? Moreover two the only member of plaintiff's firm who can sign in English is Puraram who only received a power-of-attorney from the plaintiffs' firm on 16th August 1918 (Exhibit 19). I think it is unnecessary to discuss the evidence on this point further. I have no doubt and I, therefore, hold that the endorsements on the two War Bonds in suit in favour of Advani were forged by him.

Under the circumstances, it becomes necessary to consider the legal position. These Bonds are transferable by endorsement being payable to order. I have held the endorsements to be forged. Now a forged endorsement is a nullity and conveys no title to the endorsee. In my opinion, it is as much a nullity as a forged cheque or a forged hundi provided there has been no negligence on the part of the true owner in allowing the instrument to come into the hands of the forger. I am prepared to follow the reasoning adopted in the decisions in Banku Behari Sikdar v.

KODUMAL KALUMAL v. KARACHI BANK LTD.

Secretary of State for India in Council (1), Jai Narain v. Mahbub Bakhsh (2) and Hunsraj Purmanand v. Ruitonji Malji (3), in preference to the "obiter dicta" of Stephen, J., in Chandra Kali Dabee v. E. P. Chapman (4). A holder under such a forged endorsement is not a holder in due course. The defendant Bank, therefore, can acquire no title under the forged endorsement.

Nor do I consider that there was any negligence on the plaintiffs' part nor any estoppel nor any adoption by them of the endorsements. I believe plaintiffs when they say Advani put them off from time to time by saying the Bonds were not ready for issue and I think they were not negligent in relying on such statements and that when they discovered the truth they took prompt measures to notify the fraud and recover the Bonds. I hold this proved on the oral evidence and the correspondence which I do not think is necessary to discuss at length. Apparently, the Official Receiver has recognised plaintiffs' claim to the Bond for Rs 500 because he has handed it over to plaintiffs without demur and although there is no endorsement at all on that Bond his action and that of the Punjab Bank shows that neither of them supported any claim to that Bond based on the assertion of a right under any lien which the Punjab Bank might possess from the pledge of an unendorsed Bond payable to order as security for an advance.

Now a Bank takes a risk in accepting as security for an advance a negotiable security payable to order because it may always be met with a claim by the true owner that the endorsement is forged. If it could be pleaded against the owner that "malgre" the forged endorsement the transaction between the forger and the Bank gave the latter an equitable lien on the security, the answer to that, to my mind, would be that Advani was entrusted with the War Bonds in this case for a specific purpose and not as a mercantile agent for sale. I do not think he had the juridical possession required by section 178 of the Contract Act as to which there is a long current of authority ending with the case of Nandlal Thakersey v. The Bank of Bombay (5) in the Bombay High Court.

In my opinion, the Bank by dealing with these War Bonds in the way they have done and purporting to accept them as security for an advance to Advani and resisting the plaintiffs' demand to them are guilty of conversion of the Bonds.

I answer the issues:—

(1) Yes

(2) Yes

(3) Negative

(4) In the plaintiffs

(5) They were forged endorsements and Advani was the forger. They are a nullity and convey no title to the Bank.

(6) Advani purported to pledge the Bonds by forged endorsements for an advance to himself. He had no such possession as would under section 178, Contract Act, give the Bank any title to the Bonds as against the plaintiffs. The Bank took the Bonds without notice, that the endorsements were forged.

(7) See my answer to issue (6).

(8) Bank cannot hold the Bonds against the plaintiffs and are guilty of conversion.

No. 1—OPPOSITE PARTY*Charitable and Religious Trusts Act (XIV of 1920), ss 3, 5—Temple trust—Administration application by worshipper—Some only of trustees made parties—Order, whether binding on remaining trustees*

In an application by a worshipper, under section 3 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, in respect of the administration of a temple trust, which is managed by the vote of the majority of the trustees, all the trustees must be made parties, and where some only of the trustees are made parties, an order passed on the application is not binding on the remaining trustees.

Petition, under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order, dated the 5th September 1922 of the District Court of Trichinopoly, in O. P. No. 12 of 1922.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and N. A. Krishna Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. T. V. Ramanada Iyer, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision petition under sections 115, Civil Procedure Code and 107 of the Government of India Act, against an order passed by the District Judge of Trichinopoly on an application made by one worshipper in a temple called Gunaseelam in the Trichinopoly District under the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act XIV of 1920. The application was made under section 3 of the Act to direct the trustees of the temple to furnish the petitioner through the Court with particulars of the value and condition of the jewels, vessels, and other articles belonging to the deity, to direct the accounts of the temple for the last three years to be examined and audited, to order the respondents to produce all documents relating to the temple and its properties and to appoint a Commissioner to take the keys and prepare an inventory of all the jewels, vessels and other articles, belonging to the deity. To this application there were only three respondents added, and it was stated in the petition that the respondents were the chief archakas of the temple. It would appear, however, that there are 21 archakas of this temple who are all in the position of trustees of the temple and that the temple is managed by the vote of the majority of this body of 21. The learned District Judge before sending notice appointed a Commissioner and directed an inventory of the articles to be taken and had an inventory so taken. The accounts have also been produced in Court without any objection on the part of the three respondents, but they have not been examined or audited yet. The District Judge also passed an order directing regular accounts to be kept of all the income and expenditure connected with the temple and ordered the money Rs. 4 to be paid by the parties performing marriages in this temple in respect of each marriage, to be entered in a special register after obtaining the signature of the persons paying in such register and he also ordered the donations and gifts that might be made to the deity by the worshippers and pilgrims to be so entered. He also directed that the archaka in charge for the time being should account for and be responsible for the safe custody and preservation of the existing properties belonging to the deity. He further directed the accounts kept by the respondents to be filed every year in Court on the first Monday in January of the succeeding year and stated that the Court would appoint an auditor to audit the accounts if it was thought necessary to do so, the remuneration being paid out of the trust funds. These orders are said to have been passed by the consent of the three respondents who were made parties to this petition but the order goes very much further than to bind these respondents, for it purports to bind all the archakas in the temple. The great defect in the order is that unfortunately the other archakas have not been made parties and their objections have not been heard. As already stated above the management of the temple is by the vote of the majority of the 21 archakas, and in such a case it is absolutely necessary under section 5 (1), for the petitioner to have made all the 21 archakas respondents to his petition and for the Court to have served a copy of the petition together with notice of the date fixed for the hearing of the petition on each of these 21 archakas or trustees.

As this was omitted to be done, I am constrained to set aside the order, as three of the trustees cannot be made to do certain acts which they themselves would be unable to do being only a small minority of the 21 trustees in the temple. The order, therefore, of the District Judge, dated the 5th of September 1922, in Original Petition No. 12 of 1922 is set aside and the case sent back to him for a fresh disposal according to law, after giving notice to all the necessary parties. The costs of this revision petition and of the application in the lower Court will be dealt with by the District Judge in passing final orders.

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Appeal No. 42 of 1923, dated the 14th July 1923.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Appellants.

Sir B. K. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Rai Sahib Sunderlal had obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure on the basis of a mortgage, on 5th January 1915. He assigned it for consideration to Donaji and his son Bhimrao, and one Gambhirrao, the share of Donaji and Bhimrao being 8 annas and that of Gambhirrao being 8 annas. The assignees got the decree made final in their favour on 14th April 1920. Thereafter Gambhirrao assigned his interest to Bhimrao by an assignment dated 23rd November 1920. On the strength of the assignment Bhimrao applied for execution of the decree in his own name as the sole decree-holder. Gambhirrao opposed the application on several grounds the merits of which I need not at present discuss. The First Court held Bhimrao to be solely entitled to execute the decree and ordered the name of Gambhirrao to be expunged from the decree. Against this order passed by the Subordinate Judge on 6th April 1923, an appeal was preferred to the Court of the District Judge. But the appeal was dismissed upon a preliminary objection being raised that it was not maintainable. The District Judge has also provisionally given his decision on the merits. Gambhirrao had, therefore, filed the present second appeal, but he having died during the pendency of the appeal his widows were brought on the record as his legal representatives.

A preliminary objection is taken by the respondent before me that even assuming that the order, dated 6th April 1923, is erroneous on the merits, it being an order between co-decree-holders, was not appealable under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the decision by the District Judge to the effect that it was not appealable is correct, and cannot be questioned in second appeal.

RADHABAI V. BHIMRAO.

The question, which I have, therefore, to decide, is whether the District Judge's order, holding that no appeal lay against the order of the Subordinate Judge, is correct or not. The lower Appellate Court relied upon the ruling reported as Gyamonee v. Radha Roman (1), which fully supports the view taken by it.

On behalf of the appellants it is, however, contended on the strength of the ruling in Lakshmi Ammah v. Ponnassa Menon (2), that the appeal is maintainable, as such an order is one relating to the execution of the decree within the meaning of old section 244, Civil Procedure Code, which corresponds to section 47 of the new Civil Procedure Code.

On examining the case in Lakshmi Ammah v. Ponnassa Menon (2), I find that that case was distinguished from two other earlier cases, Gooroo Doss Roy v. Ram Rungrnee Dossia (3), and Odhyoa Pershad v. Mohadeo Dutt Bhandaree (4), on the ground that the question, which arose in those two cases, was not one between the decree-holder on one side and the judgment-debtor on the other, but merely between two joint decree-holders. In Lakshmi Ammah v. Ponnassa Menon (2), the question had thus arisen between one of the decree-holders and the judgment-debtor and not between two joint decree-holders as in this case. That case is, therefore, no authority for holding that an appeal is maintainable against an order passed by an Executing Court as between two joint decree-holders.

The Bombay High Court in Ratanlal v. Bai Gulab (5) also held the same view. One Bai Gulab had entrusted certain jewellery of hers to one Utamram, who was trading in partnership with one Ratanlal. Utamram was charged by her with criminal breach of trust in respect of that jewellery and the Police seized the jewellery from the accused's partner Ratanlal and produced it before the Magistrate. The Magistrate discharged Utamram and passed an order directing the jewellery to be handed over to the complainant: Bai Gulab. The High Court set aside the order and directed the restoration of the jewellery to Ratanlal from whom it was taken. Thereupon Bai Gulab filed suit and asked for an injunction restraining Utamram and Ratanlal from taking away the property from the Magistrate's Court. The Subordinate Judge decreed Bai Gulab's claim. The Nazir, who was, in the meantime, appointed as the Receiver of the property, handed it over to Bai Gulab in execution of the decree. The High Court reversed the decree and dismissed Bai Gulab's suit against defendants Utamram and Ratanlal. It was thus the decree of the High Court which was certainly a joint decree in favour of Utamram and Ratanlal, which Ratanlal alone applied to execute. The application was resisted by Utamram. So the question was between two joint decree-holders. The Subordinate Judge rejected the application holding that Ratanlal alone was not entitled to execute the decree of the High Court and referred them to a separate suit to determine their respective rights. Against this decision Ratanlal appealed to the High Court. The High Court held no appeal lay against an order under section 231 of the Code of the Civil Procedure, refusing to allow one of the several joint decree-holders to execute the decree.

Old section 231 of the Code of the Civil Procedure corresponds to O. XI, r. 15 of the new Civil Procedure Code.

The present case is a case of a transferee of an interest of one of two joint decree-holders, seeking to execute the decree and as such it falls under O. XXI, r. 16, Civil Procedure Code. The Executing Court decided to allow one of the joint decree-holders to execute the decree on the ground that there is a valid assignment by Gambhirrao to Bhimrao. Assuming that the assignment is open to the objections levelled against it on Gambhirrao's behalf, the position would be that both Bhimrao and Gambhirrao would be entitled to execute the decree jointly, but that only one of them has been allowed to execute it ignoring the other; any decision one way or the other as between Bhimrao and Gambhirrao as to Bhimrao's sole right to execute the decree would be a decision between two decree-holders. There is thus no difference in principle between the Bombay case and the present case. I, therefore, hold on the analogy of the Weekly Reporter cases and the Bombay case, that no appeal lay against the order of the Subordinate Judge under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The word 'parties' as used in section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplates that the parties are ranged on opposite sides and not as co-decree-holders on one side only. The District Judge was right in dismissing the appeal made to his Court as unmaintainable. In this view of the case I see no necessity to deal with the merits of the order dated 6th April 1923.

This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs. Costs in the Courts below will be paid as already ordered.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for sale and on its dismissal the plaintiff has appealed. The mortgagee is the plaintiff Abdul Hasan. The defendants are one mortgagor the representatives-in-interest of two deceased mortgagors and two other defendants Nos 10 and 11 who are subsequent mortgagees. One plea raised by the subsequent mortgagees was that the registration was a fraud on the registration law and, therefore, invalid. This plea was accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge who held the document to be invalid for want of registration. We do not agree with this finding of the lower Court. The property, a grove situated within the jurisdiction of the Sub-Registrar of Budaun, did exist, and mortgagor and mortgagee had reason to believe that it belonged to one of the mortgagors, Baqar Husain. There was no collusion between the mortgagor and the mortgagee and a fictitious property was not entered with a view to obtain registration in a registration office where it would not otherwise have been possible. In Pahladi Lal v. Musammatt Larauti (1) a Bench of this Court considered the Privy Council judgment reported as Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhury v. Haridas Debti (2). As in that case, the facts here are that the parties intended to deal with the property, that is, the grove situated in Ujhani; so, the condition of the mortgagor's real title does not affect the question of registration.

The appeal, however, must fail on the point of limitation. This plea was not taken in the first Court but it is one which may be taken by the defendants at any stage of the litigation. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant submitted that we should not permit this plea to be taken in appeal. We, however, see no reason to disallow it. Obviously the legal advisers of the defendants made a mistake in not raising it in the first Court, and there is no bar to the defendants raising it.

here. Of course, the question of costs will be considered when we come to deal with it.

The document was executed on 30th October 1905. The translation of the document given at page 42 is fairly correct. The relevant portion may be quoted—

"We agree to pay the aforesaid amount in nine years, with interest at 12 annas per cent. per month. We shall pay the amount of interest annually. Should we fail to pay the interest annually, the unpaid amount of interest shall be added to the principal and the total shall carry interest at the aforesaid rate. This stipulation shall continue till the payment of the entire amount due under this bond. The mortgagee shall, in case of default, be competent to recover from us the amount due to him within the period stipulated."

It is admitted that interest was never paid, so the amount of the bond became recoverable on the 30th October 1906, and the last day of limitation was the 30th October 1918. The suit was instituted on 14th September 1920 and was, therefore, time-barred. It was argued by the appellant's learned Counsel that the "default" in the last sentence quoted above, meant not only default of payment of interest but also default of adding that interest as compound interest to the principal sum. As pointed out by one of us during arguments, this was not a matter within the control of the mortgagor. The interest, according to the stipulation, would be added automatically and run at the compound rate on non-payment. The default obviously meant the default of payment of interest and that default was made on 30th October 1906. The matter, in our opinion, is covered by the Full Bench ruling in Shib Dayal v. Meharban (3). The suit when instituted was, therefore, time-barred.

We dismiss the appeal, but having regard to the circumstances of the case, direct that parties shall bear their own costs here.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Anantapur, in Appeal Suit No. 40 of 1920 preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Penukonda, in Original Suit No. 497 of 1918.

Messrs. B. Sitarum Rao and K. Srinivasa Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. Sammaya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are the appellants. The facts of the case are clearly stated in paragraphs 6, 7 and 8 of the District Munsif's judgment. The suit properties belonged to Pullanna and, after his death, his three sons Pedda Chowdappa, Chinna Chowdappa and Ranganna became entitled to them. The plaintiffs may be described as the decree-holder-purchasers who purchased the properties in execution of a money-decree in Original Suit No. 661 of 1899 obtained against Pullanna and his children. The decree was passed on the 27th of March 1900 and the sale was held on the 17th of January 1913. On two hypothecations executed by Ranganna and Pedda Chowdappa of their shares in the properties, suits, Original Suits Nos. 719 and 720 of 1911 were instituted by the mortgagees. Preliminary decrees for sale were passed on the 5th of September 1911 and final decrees in 1915. The decree-holder's representatives, the present defendants Nos. 1 to 3, applied for the sale of these properties. They were sold on the 26th of August 1915 and purchased by the first defendant. The plaintiffs in the present suit were not parties to the execution proceedings in the two suits. It may here be stated that under a sale-deed, Exhibit I, executed on the 1st of July 1911, the share of Chinna Chowdappa, the other brother, had also come into the possession of the family of defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

The question for consideration in this case is whether, on the facts stated above, the plaintiffs, or the appellants (defendants Nos. 1 to 3), are entitled to the possession of the shares of Pedda Chowdappa, Chinna Chowdappa and Ranganna in the plaint lands. The lower Courts held that the appellant's right to possession of these properties had become extinct in consequence of the adverse order that was passed by the Courts against them on their claim petition, Exhibit E. The facts relating to this claim petition are as follows:— In execution of the decree in Original Suit No. 661 of 1899 the sale, as already stated, was held on the 17th of January 1913 when the properties were purchased by the present plaintiffs. On the 16th of January 1913 the father of the first and second defendants and undivided brother of the third defendant preferred a claim to these attached properties under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code. Exhibit E is the copy of the claim petition. This claim petition covered the rights of all the three brothers. In that petition they stated their claim to these properties under the mortgage-decrees and the sale by Chinna Chowdappa and prayed that their claim may be allowed and said that "if it is found to be impossible to inquire into the claim now, the contents of the petition may be intimated to the intending bidders." On this petition the following order dated the 16th of January 1913 was passed "The petition is presented too late. The claim will be notified. Petition dismissed." The auction sale was held on the 17th of January 1913.

The question for consideration is, what is the effect of this order passed on Exhibit E as regards the right of the appellants to these properties? Two arguments have been put forward by the learned Vakil for the appellants:— (1) that the order on the petition has been wrongly construed by the lower Court inasmuch as it really did not adjudicate anything about the claim of the appellants, still, as there was a preliminary decree in their favour passed on the 5th of September 1911 which became final in 1915, the Court sale is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens at least as regards the two shares of Pedda Chowdappa and Ranganna, the share of Chinna Chowdappa having been conveyed under Exhibit I. The answer to both these arguments, to my mind, depends upon the effect that is to be given to the order that was passed on the claim petition, Exhibit E. It has been held in Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vadrevu Ranganaya Kamma (1) that "an order upon a claim petition which expresses no final judgment on the right put forward but simply directs the sale after notifying the claim, is an order against the claimant and he is bound to institute a suit under Art. 11 of the Limitation Act" per Sheshagiri Aiyar, J., at p. 997.* The decision in Ayya Pattar v. Attupurath Manakkal (2), Lakshmi Ammal v. Kadavasan Chettiar (3) and Parambil Saharabi (4) 48 Ind. Cas. 270, 41 M. 985, 35 M. L. J. 335, 24 M. L. T. 197, (1918) M. W. N. 599, 8 L. W. 202 (F. NARUMAL V. JAGATMAL.

v. Ali (4) do not really help the appellants. In Ayya Pattar v. Attupurath Manakkal (2) the claimants' prayer was that the objections might be recorded and the Court passed an order to that effect. This certainly cannot be considered to be an order negating the rights of the claimants. In Lakshmi Ammal v. Kadiresan Chettiar (3) it was found that the claim could not be investigated by the Court because the District Munsif had no authority to dispose of it and it became unnecessary to investigate the claim when the sale was stopped. Therefore, it was held that the order did not negative the right set up by the claimants. In the order passed upon the claim petition in Parambil Saharabi v. Ali (4) also there was no adjudication against the claimants. In the present case it cannot be said that the order did not negative the rights of the claimants. The petition is expressly stated to be dismissed. Applying the decision in Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vadrevu Ranganaya Kamma (1), I am of opinion that the order passed on the claim petition in this case is an order negating the rights of the claimants; [see also Lakshman Chettiar v. Parasivan Pillai (5)]. It is admitted that no suit had been laid as yet to set aside this order dated the 16th of January 1913. In this case the defendants had lost their rights long before the passing of the final decree on account of their failure to get the claim order set aside. That being so, it is not now open to the appellants to set up their claim to the properties. It was held in Peda Yarkayya v. Kanumari Venkata Krishnaraju (6) that an order on a claim petition adverse to the defendant not having been set aside, he could not take advantage of a suit filed by the plaintiff to re-agitate the question of his title, and that the fact that both the plaintiff and the written statement in the subsequent suit were within one year from the date of the order did not affect the question.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. XLV, r. 13—Certificate for appeal to Privy Council, application for stay of execution—Inherent jurisdiction, exercise of.
The High Court has inherent power under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, in appropriate circumstances, to stay execution on receipt of an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, pending the passing of orders on the application. [p. 741, col. 2].

Dame Janba v. Sale Mahomed Jafferbhoy, 19 B. 10, 10 Ind. Dec. (N's) 7, relied on.

Bibi Sona v. Mir Abdul Husein Khan, 10 Ind. Cas. 845, 6 S. L. R. 86, doubted.

This inherent power should, however, be sparingly exercised in view of the provisions of O. XLV, r. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code and the onus is on the applicant to establish good grounds for staying execution. [ibid].

Application by the appellants under O. XXXIX, r. 2, O. XLI, r. 6 and section 151, Civil Procedure Code, for stay of execution of a decree pending the grant of a certificate for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

NARUMAL V. JAGATMAL.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under O. XXXIX, r. 2, O. XLI r. 6 and section 151.

The plaintiff obtained a decree against certain members of a Hindu family and wanted in execution to attach and sell property of the family in which the applicants who were other members of the family were interested.

Applicants thereupon filed a suit in Larkana praying for a declaration that their interest was not liable in execution.

The suit was dismissed. The applicants appealed and their appeal was also dismissed. As the matter involved more than Rs. 10,000, applicants have applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

They desire execution to be stayed by injunction or otherwise.

It is contended by Mr. Tolasing and by Mr. Srikishendas Lulla who appear for the respondents, that this Court has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction or to stay execution. They urge that O. XXXIX, r. 2 applied to suits. As the applicants' appeal has been dismissed by the Appellate Court and there is now only a petition for leave to appeal, they contend there is no suit. Similarly they contend that O. XLI relates to appeals from original decrees and that O. XLI, r. 6 is otherwise inapplicable since it cannot be said that an appeal is pending before leave to appeal has been granted. Our attention has been drawn to O. XLV, r. 13 and the commentary of Mr. Mulla on the effect of the omission of the words "admitting the appeal" after the word "Court." It has, however, been held by an Appellate Bench of this Court that an application under O. XLV, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, cannot be entertained by the Court before the grant of the requisite certificate see Bibi Sona v. Mir Abdul Husein Khan (1). In a case under section 608 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, the High Court of Bombay had held that the words "admitting the appeal" had no reference to the time when the Court had to give direction but were descriptive of the Court, and that they imposed no limitation as to time upon the exercise by the Court of its powers. It, therefore, held that where a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a decree of the High Court had been presented, the High Court might grant a stay of execution of the decree although the appeal had not yet been admitted, or a certificate granted: Dame Janbai v. Sale Mahomed Jafferbhoy (2). Pratt, J.C., however, in Bibi Sona v. Mir Abdul Husein Khan (1) while agreeing with the view that the words "admitting the appeal" were merely descriptive of the Court, said he preferred the construction of the Calcutta High Court in Bibi Jarao Kumari v. Gopi Chand Bothra (3). He appears, however, to have steered a middle course between the two rulings for in Bibi Jarao Kumari v. Gopi Chand Bothra (3) it was held that a Court has no power to stay execution, even when a certificate has been granted, and that it can only do so when the appeal has been admitted. Crouch, A. J. C., felt some difficulty in regarding a decree as "appealed from" within the meaning of O. XLV, r. 13 (2) (c) merely because a certificate for leave to appeal had been granted pointing out that in O. XLV, r. 7 after the grant of a certificate, the decree is still referred to as "complained of" not "appealed from". But in spite of this fact he felt confident that the Legislature intended to treat decrees as "appealed from" as soon as a certificate had been granted. In my humble opinion the wording of O. XLV, r. 13 clearly shows that the Court has power to stay execution after grant of a certificate. Power has not been specifically conferred on the Court under O. XLV, r. 13 to stay execution prior to that stage; but since the words "appealed from" are not to be strictly construed any more than the words "admitting the appeal" in section 608 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, there appears to me considerable force in the view held by the Bombay High Court in Dame Janbai v. Sale Mahomed Jafferbhoy (2) that the Court has power to stay even before the grant of a certificate.

(2) 19 B. 10, 10 Ind. Dec. (N. L.) 7.

(3) 5 C. W. N. 562.

NARUMAL & JAGATMAL.

This point does not, however, appear to me of great importance for it seems to me clear that the High Court has inherent jurisdiction under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, to stay execution after receipt of a petition for leave to appeal. It was assumed by both parties in Nand Kishore Singh v. Ram Gopal Sahil (4) that the Court has inherent power to stay execution of its decree when an appeal or an application for leave to appeal in the Privy Council is pending. Mookerjee, J., went further and held that even when leave to appeal had been refused, even when the parties were not before the Court, the High Court had inherent power to stay execution of its decree, where the judgment-debtor had applied to the High Court for special leave to appeal and before special leave to appeal had been granted.

Mookerjee, J., there regarded O. XLV, r. 5 (2), which expressly recognizes the principle that an Original Court has power for a time to stay execution of its decree in view of a possible appeal, as affording a useful guidance in the determination of the question how the inherent power of the Court should be exercised in a matter of this description; and he referred to Brij Coomaree v. Ramrick Dass (5) as conclusively showing that the Court has inherent power to stay proceedings pursuant to its own order in view of an intended appeal. He pointed out that if the contention of the decree-holders was to prevail the gravest injustice done to litigants. The views which he advocated did not entirely commend themselves to his colleague Holmwood, J., who considered that in the case before them the use of the inherent power would be an abuse of the powers of the Court, though he conceded that the Court has inherent powers to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice. One of the difficulties felt by Holmwood, J., was that the parties were not before the Court, and another was that the matter had become res judicata. These difficulties do not apply to a case where a party has applied for leave to appeal under O. XLV, r. 2. On the contrary since O. XLV, r. 13, expressly empowers a Court to stay execution after the grant of certificate the ends of justice might often be defeated unless the Court has inherent powers to leave matters in statu quo until the Court passed orders under O. XLV, r. 13. It was conceded in the argument before us that considerable time must elapse between an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council and the grant of a certificate. Apart from the laws delays and the congestion of Courts, paper-books have to be prepared and the matters are frequently traversed from one Bench to another. The use of the inherent power of the Court to stay execution may, therefore, be often necessary for the ends of justice. This would not be an evasion of O. XLV, r. 13. Even if that Order is strictly construed but would, in certain circumstances, be necessary in order to give effect to the provisions of that Order. For the protection granted under O. XLV, r. 13 would be meaningless if the decree-holder before the Court had time to stay execution under that Order, had full power to sell the property the subject-matter of the decree complained of, and the Court had no power to restrain him from so doing.

For the reasons above mentioned, I am of opinion whether Bibi Sona v. Mir Abdul Husein Khan (1) was rightly or wrongly decided, the Court has inherent power under section 151, Civil Procedure Code, in appropriate circumstances, to stay execution on receipt of an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council pending the passing of orders on the application.

The wording of O. XLV, r. 13 appears to me, however, to indicate that the inherent powers of the Court to stay execution of its decree should be sparingly used. The onus is clearly laid on the applicant to establish good grounds for staying execution even when a certificate has been granted. The case of an applicant who has not yet obtained a certificate is on a lower footing and under ordinary circumstances an application to the Court to use its inherent powers should be refused. In the present case both the Original Court and the Appellate Court decided against the applicant and it appears to me that he has failed to establish that it is necessary in order that the ends of justice should not be defeated, that the inherent powers of the Court should be exercised, I am of opinion, therefore, that this application must be rejected with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 6, cl. (g)—Notice to creditors suspending payment of debts—Act of insolvency

A notice by a debtor to his creditors that he had suspended payment of debts is a sufficient act of insolvency so as to justify a petition under section 6 clause (g) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Appeal under section 75, Provincial Insolvency Act, V of 1920, against an order of the District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 8th December 1923.

Mr. H. K. Dhaon, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bishambhar Nath Khanna, for Respondent

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The creditors of one Udai Chand applied under sections 9 and 13, sub-section (2), of the Provincial Insolvency Act for an order of adjudication against Udai Chand. The appellant, another creditor, objected to such an order being made. The learned District Judge of Lucknow has rejected the application of the appellant and made the order of adjudication. In support of the appeal two points were urged:—(1) That the act of insolvency occurred more than three months before the presentation of the petition and consequently it was barred under section 9, sub-section (1), clause (c) of the Act, and (2) that the debt of the applicants is not a liquidated sum within the meaning of clause (b) of the same sub-section.

The first argument would be sound if the position were grounded merely on the fact that the debtor had absented himself from his dwelling house or the usual place of business, vide section 6, clause (d) (ii) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, but it is not so. The learned Judge has found and there is evidence in support of the finding that the act of insolvency consists of the fact of the debtor giving notice to his creditors that he had suspended payment of his debts. This will be a sufficient act of insolvency to justify a petition as given in clause (g) of section 6. It is admitted that this act occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition. The first argument, therefore, falls to the ground.

As regards the second argument the facts are as follows.—The debtor was given certain jewellery by the applicants for being sold on condition, that he would be entitled to a certain commission on the sale proceeds. The debtor neither returned the jewellery nor the price thereof. He has been convicted in a criminal prosecution. I have no doubt, in my mind that at the inception of the transaction between the creditor and debtor there was no liquidated sum payable by the debtor to the creditor. It was open to the debtor to return the jewellery, and the creditor could not refuse to take the delivery nor could insist on claiming merely the price of it. On the other hand, if the debtor did not deliver back the jewellery the creditor would be entitled to recover the price of it in damages. The measure of it will depend on many uncertain and fluctuating incidents. But whatever might have been the nature of the transaction at its beginning there is no doubt, in my mind, that long before the petition under consideration was presented the debtor had acknowledged his liability for an ascertained sum as due to the creditors. This is amply proved by Exhibit 2. The second argument, therefore, also fails.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

A payment out of Court towards a decree does not give a fresh start to limitation under Art. 182 (5) of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. It is not the payment but the application to certify it which constitutes a step-in-aid of execution.

Jotindra Kumar Das v. Gagan Chandra Pal, 45 Ind. Cas. 903, 46 O. 22, not followed.

Where the decree-holder when applying for execution wishes to rely upon section 20 of the Limitation Act, the fact he has not certified the payment until making his application is by itself no obstacle.

No. 237 of 1921 District Court) preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif, Talipramba, dated the 10th March 1921 in E. P. No. 55 of 1921, in O. S. No. 301 of 1915.

Mr. O. T. Govinda Nambiar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Siva Rama Menon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Tellicherry in Appeal Suit No. 300 of 1921 in E. P. No. 55 of 1921.

The decree-holder relied on certain payments made within three years of the date of the prior application in order to save limitation. The lower Appellate Court has found that the payment is true and that finding is not traversed.

It also finds that the payment cannot save limitation and this is the point for determination.

The decree is dated 1915. There was an arrest in 1917. On or about 25th January 1918 Rs. 100 (Rupees one hundred only) was paid towards the decree debt, i.e., on 10th Makaram 1893. On 17th January 1921 the decree-holder applied for execution in E. P. No. 55 of 1921 and the Munsif took this as a petition for certifying the payment of January 1918 and found that this payment saved limitation.

There are two ways in which a decree-holder may save limitation. He may prove a payment which satisfies the requirements of section 20 of the Indian Limitation Act or he may prove a step-in-aid of execution within three years of his application as laid down in Art. 182, clause (5). If the decree-holder when applying for execution wishes to rely upon section 20, the fact that he has not certified the payment, until making his application is no obstacle, cf. Rajam Aiyar v. Anantharatnam Aiyar (1). In the present case, there would be no objection to applying section 20 if its requirements were fulfilled, but as pointed out by the lower Appellate Court, they are not fulfilled and again this finding is not traversed. But the appellant relies upon Art. 182 and contends that the payment, certified in 1921, ranks as steps-in-aid on the date of payment, i.e. January 1918. In support of this contention he relies upon Jotindra Kumar Das v. Gagan Chandra Pal (2). The facts of that case are very similar to those of the present case. The decree was obtained on 9th May 1913. On 10th June and 20th November in 1914 payments were made which did not fulfil the requirements of section 20. On 6th June 1917 the decree-holder applied to have these payments certified. On 9th June 1917 he applied for execution pleading that the payments of 1914 were steps-in-aid of execution and so saved the bar of limitation. It was argued (page 23* of the Report) that the application of 6th June was a step-in-aid of execution, and, therefore, the application of 9th June could not be time-barred. The Court held, following Lakhi Narain Ganguli v. Felamani Dasi (3), that the payments afforded a fresh starting point within the meaning of Art. 182, clause (5). But all that Lakhi Narain Ganguli v. Felamani Dasi (3) lays down is that a payment may save the bar under section 20. It had apparently never been held before, by any Court that such payment ranks as a step-in-aid, and it is difficult to understand how a payment out of Court can be considered a step-in-aid. The step-in-aid would be the petition for certifying such payments. This point is rightly apprehended in Rustomji's Commentary on the Indian Limitation Act, Edition 3, page 773.

"It is not, of course, the mere payment but the application to certify the payment which gives a fresh starting point of limitation under Art. 182, clause (5). The head-notes of Jotindra Kumar Das v. Gagan Chandra Pal (2), in so far as they assume that a mere payment (without an application) would suffice for purposes of clause 5, Article 182, are not correct."

Accordingly the payment of January 1918 cannot save the bar of limitation either under section 20 or under Art. 182, clause (5) of the Indian Limitation and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

In a suit for recovery of rent at an enhanced rate, the value of the subject-matter of the suit is not the value of the holding but the value of the plaintiff's claim to recover the enhanced rent [p. 745, col. 2].

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the plaintiff for a certificate that this is a fit case for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The matter came before my learned brother Mr. Justice Richardson and myself on the 3rd December 1923, and it was then decided that the appeal did involve a substantial question of law, and this Court remanded the case under O. XLV, r. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure for enquiry and report as to the value, and the form of the order was as follows:—"For the purpose of an enquiry and report as to the value of the occupancy holding the subject-matter of the suit on the basis that the rent is liable to be enhanced at the instance of the plaintiff," and the lower Court was "requested to direct its enquiry as to the value of the occupancy holding both at the time of the institution of the suit and at the date of the judgment of the High Court.

The learned Officiating Subordinate Judge has submitted his report by which he finds that the value of the occupancy holding exceeds Rs 10,000.

The learned Vakil for the respondent has taken two objections to the report. The first was that the learned Subordinate Judge did not direct a local enquiry. In my judgment there is no substance in that point. The question whether there should be a local enquiry was one for the discretion of the learned Subordinate Judge, and it seems to me that the reasons which the learned Subordinate Judge gave for not directing a local enquiry were substantial and sufficient.

The second point upon which the learned Vakil relied was that the principle, on which the valuation of the subject-matter of the suit and of the appeal had been made, was not correct. His argument was that the subject-matter of the suit and of the appeal was not the occupancy holding or in other words that the value of the occupancy holding did not represent the value of the subject-matter of the suit and of the appeal.

The suit was brought for the recovery of rent at an enhanced rate under section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as well as for additional rent under section 52 of that Act against the defendant, who was a tenant. The learned Vakil drew our attention to the case of Abid Husain Khan v. Ahmad Husain (1) which was decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the 6th of March 1923, to which our attention was not drawn at the time of the previous hearing, and having heard the learned Vakil and after considering the judgment to which he referred, I have come to the conclusion that the holding was not the subject-matter of the suit and of the appeal. In my judgment the subject-matter of the suit and of the appeal was the plaintiff's claim to recover the enhanced rent and the additional rent under section 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That the claim amounted to a sum of Rs 192 and the suit related to arrears of rent. That being so even if twenty years purchase be taken as a reasonable period for capitalization it is admitted by the learned Vakil that the value of the subject-matter of the suit and of the appeal on that basis cannot come up to Rs. 10,000 which is the amount mentioned in section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The learned Vakil for the applicant however argued that the case comes within the second paragraph of section 110 and submitted that the decree of this Court, from which he desired to appeal, involved directly or indirectly a claim or question to or respecting property of like amount, that is, Rs. 10,000. In my judgment the facts of this case do not bring it within the terms of that paragraph of the section.

Finally the learned Vakil argued that this Court should apply the provisions of clause (c) of section 109 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It cannot be said that this suit raises a matter of great public importance nor do I think that it raises a matter of great private importance. It has been pointed out by my learned brother during the course of the argument that section 111 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, on which the decision of the High Court was based, provides that if an order has been made under section 101 directing the preparation of the Record of Rights a Civil Court shall not entertain any application made under section 158 or any suit or application for the alteration of the rent until three months after the final publication of the Record of Rights. So that the judgment of the High Court does not finally decide the matter between the parties and the effect of it is that the entertainment of the suit is merely postponed until after the final publication of the Record of Rights.

Finally the learned Vakil argued that this case involved a matter which could not be measured in money by reason of the fact that the plaintiff was making a claim that the rent was liable to be enhanced. In a sense that liability for enhancement may not be capable of being measured by a particular sum of money, but it is to be noted that the suit does include a claim for enhancement and if the suit succeeds and the rent is enhanced it will follow that by reason of section 37 of the Bengal Tenancy Act another enhancement will not take place within a space of 15 years.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the subject-matter in dispute of the suit and of the appeal is not Rs. 10,000 in value and, therefore, the case does not comply with the requirement of section 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Consequently this application must be refused with costs 5 gold mohurs, but having regard to the grounds on which we have decided this application, we direct that each party do bear his own costs of the enquiry in the lower Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XX, r. 2, O. XXI, r. 0—Certification of payment out of Court —Decree not drawn up, effect of.

Order XX, r. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code lays down that the decree shall bear the date, the day on which the judgment was pronounced. Therefore, the date of the decree may be held to be not the date on which the decree is reduced to writing and signed by the Court but the date on which the Court delivers its judgment and expresses what the decree is [p 747, col 1]

When a person has a judgment of the Court in his favour, it may be said that he then obtains his decree and that the decree when subsequently drawn up relates back to that time [ibid]

An application for certifying payment of a decree and satisfaction out of Court is maintainable even though the decree is not formally drawn up. [ibid]

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court, 24-Perganas, dated the 12th of August 1922.

Babu Abinash Chandra Ghose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the opposite party Giribala Dasi and arises out of an application made under O. XXI, r. 2 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure for certifying payment of a decree and alleged satisfaction out of Court.

The learned Subordinate Judge found on the evidence that the alleged payment of Rs. 730 in satisfaction had been proved and directed satisfaction of the decree to be recorded accordingly. Against that order the present appeal has been filed, and the grounds on which it has been assailed are firstly, that the final decree not having been drawn up at the date when the application was made, the application was not maintainable, and secondly, that the Court below ought to have held on the evidence that the receipt (Exhibit I) was not a genuine document.

In connection with the first point it is necessary to refer to O. XXI, r. 2 (1) and (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, which read as follows:—"2 (1) Where any money payable under a decree of any kind is paid out of Court, or the decree is otherwise adjusted in whole or in part to the satisfaction of the decree-holder, the decree-holder shall certify such payment or adjustment to the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree, and the Court shall record the same accordingly."

"(2) The judgment-debtor also may inform the Court of such payment or adjustment, and apply to the Court to issue a notice to the decree-holder to show cause, on a day to be fixed by the Court, why such payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified; and if, after service of such notice, the decree-holder fails to show cause why the payment or adjustment should not be recorded as certified, the Court shall record the same accordingly."

The application for certification of the payment in question was based upon these provisions and was made on the 6th January 1922. It appears however that though judgment in the suit in question had been delivered on the 28th June 1921, the final decree was not drawn up until the 5th February 1923, i.e., subsequent to the date of the application. It has been argued, therefore, on behalf of the appellant that, as no decree was in existence at the date when the application was made, the application was not maintainable under O. XXI, r. 2. In support of this view reference has been made to the definition of "Decree" in section 2 of the Civil Procedure Code and in particular to the words "formal expression" occurring therein, the argument being that, unless and until the decree had been formally drawn up, it cannot be regarded as having come into existence. There is no doubt some force in this contention. On the other hand it is laid down in O. XX, r. 7, that "the decree shall bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced", and the date of the decree may, therefore, be held to be not the date on which the decree is reduced to writing and signed by the Court, but the date on which the Court delivers its judgment and expresses what the decree is. In other words when a person has the judgment of the Court in his favour it may be said that he then obtains his decree, and that the decree, when subsequently drawn up, relates back to that time. Looked at from this point of view it follows that at the date when the application was made the decree was in existence, and, that being so, no question could arise as to application being maintainable. The point is not altogether free from difficulty, but we prefer on the whole not to place too narrow a construction upon the wording of the rule. We may also point out incidentally that this contention upon which so much stress has been laid in this Court, was not raised at all in the Court below.

With regard to the second point urged on behalf of the appellant the learned Subordinate Judge has found as a fact without hesitation that the payment in question was made, and upon a consideration of the evidence, we are certainly not prepared to hold that that conclusion is wrong. On the contrary the evidence appears to leave no room for doubt regarding the genuineness of the receipt.

In the result, therefore, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

Appeal against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 13th November 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Fatehpur, dated the 8th April 1922

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath, for the Appellant
Messrs M. H. Qidwai, Ali Zahur and F. R. Qidwai, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—Three appeals have been filed against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki. They all arise out of the same transaction. The same facts are common to all and all will be disposed of in this order.

On the 17th August, 1904, one Mulhe executed a mortgage deed in favour of Raghunandan. The consideration was Rs. 400 and the mortgage was usufructuary with possession. It is not disputed that the mortgagee actually only obtained possession of half the property. Mulhe died in 1906 leaving a widow Musammât Birji.

On the 9th May, 1917, Raghunandan filed a suit for sale on foot of his mortgage claiming that Rs. 1,000 was due under it. The suit was brought against Musammât Birji who did not contest it or even file a written statement. On the 19th of June, 1917, a compromise was filed in which the widow admitted the whole amount of the claim to be due and a decree was passed for Rs. 1,000 with Rs. 126-12 on account of costs. Future interest was allowed as stipulated in the compromise at 12 per cent. per annum till realization.

On the 13th of September, 1920, Basawan, the appellant in two of these appeals, instituted a suit for possession of the property on the allegation that he was the next reversioner to the estate of the deceased Mulhe and that as such he was entitled to pay off the mortgage debt and save the property from being lost by sale. He also impugned the decree which had been obtained against the widow on the ground that it was collusive and fraudulent and intended to defeat his rights as reversioner. He was, therefore, not legally bound by it. The suit was brought against Raghunandan and Musammât Birji. During the pendency of the suit the property which had been brought to sale by Raghunandan in execution of his decree was sold on the 20th of May 1921 to Natha who was thereupon joined as a defendant.

Various defences were set up by the three defendants. The learned Munsif held that the plaintiff Basawan was the nearest reversioner. On the issue whether the decree had been obtained by collusion he recorded no clear finding, but he decided that Raghunandan had been entitled only to Rs. 782 and not to Rs. 1,000 which had been admitted in the compromise. This amounts to a finding that the decree had in part been obtained by collusion. He granted a decree to the plaintiff for redemption on payment of Rs. 782.

Three appeals were filed against this decision by Basawan, Raghunandan and Natha in the Court of the Subordinate Judge who has held that the decree obtained by Raghunandan against the widow was not collusive and that it is legally binding on Basawan. The other findings of the Munsif were upheld, but in view of the finding that the plaintiff was bound by the decree he dismissed his suit altogether. He further decided that the auction purchaser was protected as he had bought the property in good faith and accordingly decreed the appeal of Natha but dismissed the other two appeals. As has already been mentioned three appeals have been filed from this order; two by Basawan (a).

against the order dismissing his appeal, and (b) against the order decreasing Natha's appeal, while the third is on behalf of Raghunandan. With regard to this last appeal it is contended on behalf of Basawan that it must be at once dismissed. As the suit against Raghunandan has been dismissed in toto Raghunandan has no cause of action left for an appeal. This contention appears to be sound.

On behalf of Basawan four pleas have been taken in arguing the appeal —

(1) That the decree obtained by Raghunandan against Musammad Birji on the basis of a compromise was obtained by fraud and collusion.

(2) That in any case the decree is not legally binding on the reversioner because it was not fairly obtained after contest.

(3) That as the nearest reversioner to the estate of Mulhe, Basawan, is entitled to recover the property on payment of such an amount as is found to be due.

(4) That the auction-purchaser cannot set up any rights against Basawan because he was a purchaser pendente lite and in these circumstances no question of good or bad faith arises.

With regard to the first plea it is pointed out that the consideration for the mortgage was Rs. 400 only and the mortgage was usufructuary with possession. There is no condition in it for the payment of interest.

There are two clauses in the deed on which the Courts below seem to have founded their opinion that Raghunandan was entitled to interest. The first paragraph clearly deals only with the question of mutation. The mortgagor undertook to have the name of the mortgagee entered at his own expense. If he failed to do this the mortgagee could get it done and at the time of redemption recover the expenses from the mortgagor with interest at 12 per cent. per annum. The second clause is towards the end of the document and provides that if as the result of any litigation any portion or all of the property mortgaged should pass out of the possession of the mortgagee then the mortgagor would compensate him from other property moveable and immoveable. If he failed to do this the mortgagee would be entitled to file a suit and to recover the whole of the mortgage money with costs and damages by sale of the mortgaged property, making up the deficiency from any other property belonging to the mortgagor. This clause clearly authorised the mortgagee Raghunandan to bring such a suit as he did bring; but it is contended that he should have done so at once instead of waiting, as he did, for nearly 13 years. Reference is made to Bhawani Pershad Singh v. Saheb Din Lal (1) in which it was held that where a usufructuary mortgagee does not take possession of the mortgaged property and thereby loses the profits which he would otherwise have obtained he cannot subsequently claim interest in lieu of those profits.

In that case, however, there was no provision for the payment of interest in the event of the mortgagee failing to get possession. The learned Advocate for Basawan contends, however, that the delay in filing a suit was sufficient to debar the mortgagee from any right to interest. He acquiesced in his deprivation of possession for 13 years and it must be presumed from his conduct that he was content to accept half the property as sufficient security for his mortgage. A ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported as Partab Bahadur Singh v. Gajadhar Bakhsh Singh (2) and another of the Allahabad High Court reported as Khuda Bakhsh v. Ahm-un-nissa (3) in which that ruling was followed are referred to. Those, however, were both suits for redemption brought by mortgagors whereas in the present instance the suit was brought by the mortgagee in whose deed there was a distinct covenant authorising him to make the claim which he made. I do not consider that the mortgagee can be held to have acquiesced in the diminution of his security merely because he delayed for some years in bringing his suit.

The learned Advocate for Basawan has indicated various details in the plaint and compromise and also in the decree which lead to the inference that there was collusion between Raghunandan and the widow; and though it is admitted that Raghunandan had been in possession of half the mortgaged property yet he claimed interest on the whole of the mortgage money from the date of execution of the deed till the date of the suit. A mere perusal of the plaint would have shown that this claim was an exaggerated one, yet in the compromise the full amount claimed was admitted to be due and future interest was also allowed at the abnormal rate of 12 per cent. per annum. Further though the suit was not contested yet costs were allowed on the contested scale.

It has recently been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramsumaran Prasad v. Shyam Kumari (4) that a compromise entered into by a Hindu widow bonafide for the benefit of the estate and not for her own personal advantage binds the reversioners as much as a decree against her obtained after litigation. But it cannot seriously be argued that such a compromise as the one which we are now considering was for the benefit of the estate, admitting, as it did, a claim for an amount far in excess of what was due and which could never have been supported had the case come to trial. Raghunandan undoubtedly had a good case on his mortgage but he would not have obtained a decree for so large a sum had the widow not colluded with him and refrained from contesting the suit.

The right of the appellant Basawan to institute this case had been questioned. The Allahabad High Court in Ram Chander v. Kallu (5) has held that the reversionary heirs of the deceased husband of a Hindu widow are not persons who within the meaning of section 91 of the Transfer of Property Act have such an interest in the mortgaged property as would entitle them during the lifetime of the widow to redeem a mortgage made by the husband. In this Court, however, the opposite view has been taken in Gumani Singh v. Chakker Singh (6). The soundness of the former decision has been doubted in Basant Singh v. Ram Lal Singh (7) but the question was not directly before the Bench on that occasion. I would, therefore, prefer to follow the previous Bench decision in Gumani Singh v. Chakker Singh (6) and hold that Basawan could bring the present suit.

The auction purchaser Natha bought the property while this litigation was pending. The price which he paid for it indicates that he was aware of the risk attached to such a transaction and as the purchaser pendenti lite he cannot claim to have acted in good faith. A purchase made of property actually in litigation, though for valuable consideration and without any express or implied notice in point of fact, affects the purchaser in the same manner as if he had such notice: Sohan Lal v. Jote Singh (8). I consider that the view taken by the learned Munsif was the correct one, and I accordingly allow the appeals of Basawan, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and restore the order and decree of the First Court. The appellant Basawan will have his costs in all Courts. The appeal of Raghunandan is dismissed with costs.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 158 OF 1922.

July 28, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jackson.

RAJAGOPALA PADAYACHI—

PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

VARADARAJA PADAYACHI—

DEFENDANT No. 1—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Partition between family members—One member agreeing to take annuity instead of his share—Stipulation to resume share if annuity not paid—Penalty—Question of law—Second appeal.

If by an agreement of partition one of the several members of a family agrees to receive an annuity in lieu of his proper share, but reserves the right to resume his share on default of payment of annuity, the stipulation regarding resumption of share is not penal within the meaning of section 74 of the Contract Act and can be enforced [p. 751, col. 2].

The question whether a stipulation is one by way of penalty is one of law and can be raised in second appeal [ibid].

If under a stipulation the contracting parties are merely remitted to their original position there can be no question of penalty, neither does the mere withdrawal of a privilege constitute a penalty [p. 752, col. 1].

Parupaleti Achayamma v. Pabbamudi Papamma, 2 Ind. Cas. 850, Kulada Prasad Chowdhury v. Rama Nand Patnaik, 61 Ind. Cas. 923, 48 O. 1036, 33 O. L. J. 414, 25 O. W. N. 776, Davis v. Thomas, (1831) 1 Rus. & M. 506, Tamlyn 416, 9 L. J. (O.S.) 232, 39 E. R. 195, 32 R. R. 257, relied on.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cuddalore, in A. S. No. 79 of 1921 (A. S. No. 51 of 1921, District Court) preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Mannargudi, in O. S. No. 249 of 1920.

Mr. T. L. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Narasimhachariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cuddalore in Appeal Suit No. 79 of 1921 (O. S. No. 249 of 1920, District Munsif's Court, Mannargudi).

The appellant was one of three brothers and at the time of partition it was agreed that instead of taking his share of the land, he should receive an annuity in moieties from his two brothers, and if either defaulted, he should resume that portion of his share which had gone to the defaulter. In schedule D of the partition deed, Exhibit C, the two halves which make up his share are shown as severally added to the shares of each of the other brothers. The respondent made default and appellant sued for arrears of annuity, and for the resumption of his half share from the defaulter. The Original Court decreed his suit, but the Subordinate Judge on appeal while decreeing the arrears, relieved respondent against the resumption of the half share holding that it was by way of penalty. Hence this appeal. It is contended on behalf of respondent that when once the lower Courts have found that a stipulation is by way of penalty, it is a decision on a question of fact which cannot be traversed on second appeal. The question is whether the stipulation can legally be said to be within the purview of section 74, Indian Contract Act, and the frequency with which this point has been raised on second appeal is in itself a guarantee that it is a question of law. However, it has always been conceded that there is no absolute rule of law which determines the matter, but each case has to be considered according to its particular circumstances. The exact wording and frame of Exhibit C are, therefore, important. The appellant refrained from taking his share of the land because as set forth in the document he was a bachelor. Besides the land, there were certain debts and outstandings which were divided between the two other brothers, and each agreed to give the appellant Rs. 100 who also got a manat and right of way. Then there is the arrangement mentioned above in regard to the annuity and resumption of schedule D lands in default of its payment. It was argued that because respondent and his brother got appellant's share of the land, they relieved appellant of the full burden of family debt, but I find no warrant for any such assumption in the document. Apparently it was reckoned that on a balance the debts and outstandings were worth Rs. 200 and that amount was paid in cash to the appellant. If his brothers lost by taking over these transactions

presumably there would have been no cash payment. I think it must be taken that the document does what it sets forth to do and makes a fair division between the three brothers. The lands are equally divided in schedules A, B, D and the D schedule share is equitably commuted to an annuity because so long as he got an annuity the appellant did not want the land. The question then for determination is whether the provision that appellant resumes his share of the land on default of payment is by way of penalty. In most cases in which this question arises there is a primary contract, and then a secondary contract by which the promisor binds himself to give something over and above his original liability to the promisee if he should commit laches in regard to the primary contract. Under section 74 a Court must consider what reasonable amount of damages on account of such laches is due to the promisee and find accordingly. See Wallis, C. J., in Avathanu Muthukrishner v Sankaralingam Pillai (1). See also Sundara Ayyar, J. at page 265*. The Court will carry out the primary contract but not necessarily the subsidiary contract to come into operation if the primary contract is broken. In the present case what is the subsidiary contract? The appellant is not to receive anything extra by way of damages, and the respondent is not to be mulcted on account of his failure to pay the annuity. The arrangement as regards the annuity having broken down, the appellant is to resume his normal position as third member of the divided family enjoying a third share of the property. The contrary view can only be maintained on the assumption that the partition was unfair, and the arrangement that he was to be paid an annuity gave the appellant less than he would have got if he took the land; an assumption for which there is no warrant. If the contracting parties are merely remitted to their original position, there can be no question of penalty. Cf. Pasupaleti Achayemma v. Pabhamidi Papayamma (2) and even assuming that appellant gave more than he need, when he entered into this arrangement, the mere withdrawal of a privilege is no penalty. Cf. Davis v. Thomas (3). This view has prevailed where a lower rate of interest was allowed as a matter of grace if payment was punctual. Kulada Prasad Chowdhury v. Rama Nand Patnark (4).

In the case cited by the learned Subordinate Judge Phayammalachi v. Sevu Rajali (5), there was relief against forfeiture. I do not think that the present case can be described as forfeiture. A return to the status quo at the time when agreement was entered into does not vest the property in the respondent. So he cannot be said to forfeit what at that time was not his. Nor do I think anything is to be gained by way of analogy by describing respondent as a transferee of property with a contingent interest or as a tenant. What the Court has to enforce is an agreement of partition. The brother does not say "you shall hold my land at such and such a rent; but my share shall be satisfied in such and such a way." We should, as Napier, J. observes in Krishna Shetti v. Gilbert Pinto (6), be very careful in applying statutory provisions that are not in pari materia. I do not find the stipulation that appellant shall resume the land in schedule D on default of payment of his annuity to be penal and, therefore, I restore the decree of the Original Court. This appeal is allowed with costs in this and the lower Appellate Court and as provided in the original decree.

EMPEROR v. GHULAM HUSSAIN.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 1220 OF 1923.

February 26, 1924.

Present:—Sir Shadi Lal, Kt., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice LeRouge.

GHULAM HUSSAIN—ACCUSED—

RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 4, 190—Report of Police Officer, meaning of—Allegation of non-cognizable case by Police Officer also Public Prosecutor whether "complaint"—Court, whether can take cognizance

The words "report of a Police Officer" as used in the Criminal Procedure Code mean the report of a Police Officer in cases in which he is authorized to investigate by the Code.

Therefore a written allegation of a non-cognizable case made by a Police Officer who is also a Public Prosecutor with a view to the Court's taking action is not the report of a Police Officer, but is a "complaint" as defined in section 4 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the Court is competent to take action thereon.

The Criminal Procedure Code does not prohibit a Police Officer from presenting a complaint to the Magistrate in a case non-cognizable by the Police.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, with enhanced powers under section 30, Criminal Procedure Code, Simla, dated the 27th August 1923.

Lala Jai Lal, R. B., Government Advocate, for the Appellant.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Lala Jagan Nath Bhandari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the Crown against the acquittal of the respondent of an offence under section 509, Indian Penal Code. The Magistrate came to no finding on the merits but acquitted the respondent on the ground that the proceedings of the Court were void by reason of the absence of a proper complaint.

The machinery of the Court was set in motion on what purported to be a complaint signed by the Court-Inspector as ex-officio Public Prosecutor. The facts are that the circumstances of the case were stated by a Miss Cooper and the Chief Officer of Telegraphs to the Additional District Magistrate who directed the Court below to try the case.

Now, section 190 of the Code is, and is intended to be, very wide. It empowers a Magistrate to take cognizance of an offence in almost every conceivable set of circumstances. He may take cognizance

(1) Upon receipt of a complaint;

(2) Upon a Police report;

(3) Upon information received from any person other than a Police Officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion.

It was clearly the intention of the Legislature that the machinery of the Courts should be set in motion without any difficulty and the only restriction appears to be that the Magistrate should not act upon information received from a Police Officer unless that Police Officer is empowered by the Code to submit a report of the facts, but it does not prohibit a Police Officer from presenting a complaint to the Magistrate even in a case non-cognizable by the Police. Section 4 of the Code defines "complaint" as being any allegation made orally or in writing to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action but does not include the report of a Police Officer. Now, "the report of a Police Officer" has a peculiar meaning throughout the Code. It means the report of a Police Officer in cases which he is authorized to investigate by the Code. If a statement of facts made to a Magistrate is not a Police Officer's report, and for the respondent it is admitted that the document in this case is not a Police report, then there seems to be no ground for holding it to be other than a complaint. It is an allegation in writing not the report of a Police Officer addressed to a Magistrate with a view to his taking action. The signatory of the document is, it is true, an Officer of the Police but he is also a Public Prosecutor. The report of a Police Officer is excluded from the definition of "complaint" and this is probably due to the fact that certain offences can be prosecuted only on receipt of a complaint by a Magistrate.

In the case before us there was before the Court a written allegation made with a view to the Court's taking action and that document was signed by an Officer of the Police who was also a Public Prosecutor. As the facts recited established only a non-cognizable case no Police report could have been made in connection with those facts. In our opinion there was a complaint before the Magistrate and he should have decided the case on the merits.

We accept the appeal, set aside the order of acquittal and direct the Magistrate to proceed with the case on the merits.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 139, cl. (1), (5)—Appeal competent—Revision—High Court, whether can interfere on its own motion.

When an appeal lies against any criminal proceedings but no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision can be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed, having regard to section 439 (5) of the Criminal Procedure Code, and if proceedings by way of revision are instituted by such a party, the High Court cannot interfere even on its own motion under clause (1) of that section.

Jumo v. Crown, 28 Ind. Cas. 108, 8 S. L. R. 229; 16 Cr. L. J. 252, followed but doubted.

Application to revise an order of First Class Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tando Mahomed Khan, dated the 12th November 1923.

Mr. Motiram L. Lalvani, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinstone, Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are shortly as follows:—The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, it would seem, called upon a certain Nuran to give security for good behaviour under section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Nuran appealed to the District Magistrate who confirmed the lower Court's order. Nuran then produced sureties before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tando and the learned Magistrate rejected them for reasons which I shall refer to later.

Nuran did not lodge any appeal against the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order as he might have done to the Sessions Judge. He has, however, come in revision to this Court. We are of opinion, that the reasons given by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate for rejecting the sureties are not proper ones. It would almost be impossible for any one to put forward a surety which would pass successfully his scrutiny. If the witnesses know the sureties then according to the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate they are his friends and they are joined together by the common bond of offering protection to Badmashes. If, on the other hand, the witnesses say that they do not know Nuran, they are rejected as being unworthy of belief. No less than six witnesses came forward in this case amongst whom one was a retired Mukhtarkar. We think that on his evidence and on that of the other witnesses called to prove the value of the sureties, the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate should not have rejected them. The difficulty, however, which stands in our way is the section 439, sub-clause (5) of the Criminal Procedure Code. It lays down that where an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision shall be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed. Now here an appeal lay and it was not brought. It would seem, therefore, under section 439, sub-clause (5) that we are precluded from helping the applicant. Section 439, clause (1) has been brought to our notice. Under that section the High Court in the case of any proceedings the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for order or which otherwise comes to its notice the High Court may in its discretion exercise any of the powers conferred on the Court of Appeal. The question arises whether, precluded as we are by section 439, sub-clause (5) we yet have a discretion vested in us by section 439, sub-clause (1). If this were a res integra I should incline to the opinion that the High Court under section 439, sub-clause (1) should on its own motion interfere wherein injustice appears to have been done even in spite of the bar in its way from sub-clause (5). But the matter is not a res integra. A decision on this point was pronounced Per Curiam in the case of Jumo v Emperor (1). The learned Judges observed: "No doubt this Court can interfere on its own motion in cases where a person affected is debarred from moving it under section 439, sub-clause (5) but in this case the Court has not acted of its own motion in calling for the proceedings under section 435 but at the instance of the applicant and it would be a pure quibble to say that in spite of the provisions of section 439, sub-clause (5) of the Code, the Court could do what applicant wants of its own motion. This would be a mere evasion of the Statute which the Court cannot permit".

It may at some future date be desirable for a Full Bench of this Court to consider whether the learned Judges in the case of Jumo v. Crown (1) did not go rather beyond the necessity of the case before them in making these observations and whether the Court has not full liberty to act under section 439, sub-clause (1) in spite of sub-clause (5). But until the Full Bench does consider the reasoning in Jumo v. Crown (1) and set it aside we are bound by that ruling. There is thus no other course open to us but to dismiss this application for revision. At the same time, we would express the hope that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate will consider our remarks and deal with any further application for sureties which may be presented before him agreeably to what we have said.

P. B. A. & Application dismissed.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 435, 439, 497, 498, 561-A—Case pending before Sub-Divisional Magistrate—Order of bail by Sessions Judge—High Court, whether can interfere—“Any proceedings” in s. 439, scope of—Passage prejudicial to fair trial of case—Power of High Court to expunge.

A High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain an application under section 497 (5) or section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code against an order granting bail, passed by a Sessions Judge in a case pending before a Subordinate Magistrate. The powers of the High Court under section 497 (5) of the Code are restricted to the cases of persons released by the Trial Magistrate, and those under section 498 enable the High Court to release an accused on bail but not to order the arrest and commission to custody of persons already released on bail by the Sessions Judge. [p 757, cols 1 & 2]

But proceedings in which it is or has been determined whether bail from the accused person should be taken or not fall within the definition of “any proceedings” under section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the High Court has powers under that section to interfere and thus to control the propriety as well as the regularity of orders in such proceedings. [p 758, col 1]

Manikam Mudali v Queen, 6 M 63, 6 Ind Jur. 573, 2 Weir 409, 2 Ind Dao (N S) 322, King-Emperor v Badri Prasad, 5 A L J 419, A W N. (1903) 195, 8 Cr L J 49, Queen v Thimma Reddy, 10 M L J 411 and Fauz Muhammad v Emperor, 20 Ind Cas 209; 9 N L R 81, 14 Cr L J 385, referred to.

At any rate, the High Court can interfere with an order granting bail passed by a Sessions Judge under its inherent powers under section 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code [p. 758, col 2.]

The High Court has powers under section 561-A of the Criminal Procedure Code to order the expunging of passages in the order of a Sessions Judge granting bail if such passages are likely to prejudice the Magistrate in the impartial trial of the case. [p. 759, col. 2.]

LOCAL GOVERNMENT v GULAM JILANI.

ORDER.—One Ramkuwar, a young woman of 20, and her husband, Gopala, are alleged by the prosecution to have been wrongfully confined by one Gulam Jilani with the help of his confederates, with a view to effect recovery of a debt said to be due to him from Gopala, by compelling Gopala to bring in his wife with him, in order that they both should transfer to him certain fields in the name of the wife, in satisfaction of the said debt by executing a deed in his favour. After bringing the husband and the wife under their clutches by keeping them confined, the accused are said to have taken them from place to place and kept them in secret wrongful confinement with a view to attain the object of extorting a document from them. It is also the case of the prosecution that while they were in such secret confinement they were made to execute a certain document and after that was done, the accused managed to finally separate the wife from the husband thus compelling the former to remain behind in the wrongful custody of Gulam Jilani and his associates until she was traced at a house in Pipalgaon Raja. During her stay with Gulam Jilani and others, Ramkuwar is said to have been raped.

A prosecution was accordingly started in the Court of Mr. K. R. Joshi, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Khamgaon, against Gulam Jilani and six others, two out of whom are absconding, under sections 365, 366, 376, 386, 346, 347 and 109 of the Indian Penal Code. While Gulam Jilani and his four other associates were being thus tried together before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in Criminal Case No. 13 of 1924 an application under section 497 of the Criminal Procedure Code was made to the Magistrate on behalf of the accused for their release on bail. The Trying Magistrate refused to grant bail for reasons stated in his order dated 25th March 1924.

An independent application was made to the Sessions Judge, Akola, (Mr K. B. Misra), on behalf of all the five accused on 3rd May 1924 under section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The Sessions Judge after considering the evidence which had till then gone on the record, passed the order dated 9th May 1924 granting the bail with heavy sureties. He expressed his views on the evidence rather strongly and observed: "The facts disclosed . . . (1) an offence under section 347, Indian Penal Code, which being bailable there should be no objection to the grant of bail." It is against this order dated 9th April 1924 passed by the Sessions Judge that Criminal Revision No. 99-B of 1924 is filed on behalf of the Local Government purporting to be one under section 497, sub-section (5) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

While passing the aforesaid order dated 9th May 1924 the Sessions Judge noticed an irregularity in the trial of the Criminal Case No. 13 of 1924 which consisted in trying the offence under section 376, Indian Penal Code, of which Gulam Jilani was accused, in the same case, and pointed out the advisability of trying it separately: "if the prosecution or the Magistrate so wish". Accordingly the trial was split up and a separate case started under sections 376 coupled with some other sections against Gulam Jilani alone on 17th May 1924 (Criminal Case No. 67 of 1924). While Gulam Jilani was thus on his separate trial for the offence under section 376 an application was made on his behalf for being released on bail under section 497, sub-section (1), Criminal Procedure Code, as this was not covered by the order passed on 9th May 1924. This application was rejected by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for reasons stated in the order dated 21st May 1924. Consequently on 4th June 1924, an application under section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code was made to the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge, Akola: The Additional Sessions Judge (Mr. Deshpande) by his order dated 9th June 1924 ordered bail to be taken from Gulam Jilani. It is against this order that Criminal Revision No. 98-B of 1924 has been similarly filed on behalf of the Local Government.

A Rule Nisi was issued in each of the aforesaid cases to the opposite party to show cause why the bail bonds should not be cancelled and also for personal appearance before this Court. The non-applicants accordingly appeared and showed cause why the Rule should not be made absolute and this order will govern the decision of both the cases.

On behalf of the accused a preliminary objection is taken to the jurisdiction of this Court to entertain a revision against the order granting bail passed by a Sessions Judge under section 498 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and it is further urged that section 497, sub-section (5) under which the applications for revision are professedly made, has no application and does not confer jurisdiction on this Court as that section applies to the case of a person released by the Trial Magistrate under that section. In this case the Trial Magistrate had refused to grant bail as his orders dated 25th April 1924 and 21st May 1924 show. Consequently section 497, sub-section (5) has no application to the present case. As regards the power of this Court under section 498 it is argued that that section in terms enables the High Court just as it does the Court of Session to direct that "in any case" any person may be admitted to bail, whether there be an appeal on conviction or not, but that it does not confer on the High Court a similar jurisdiction as the one conferred by section 497 sub-section (5) to cause any person who has been released under section 498, by the Sessions Judge to be arrested and commit him to custody. The Counsel for the accused further submits that the jurisdiction of the High Court and the Sessions Judge is concurrent in the matter of admitting accused persons to bail, and that as ample discretion is given to the one as to the other, and that this Court cannot, therefore, substitute its own discretion for that of the Sessions Judge.

There is much force in this argument addressed in support of the preliminary objection, and I am inclined to the view that the applications for revision as laid under section 497, sub-section (5) are not maintainable. I am further of opinion that they are not maintainable under section 498 as it stands; but at the same time I am of opinion that this does not and cannot mean that the High Court has no power to interfere with orders made in proceedings for bail when such proceedings are proved to be illegal. The proceedings in which it is or has to be determined whether bail from the accused person should be taken or not fall within the definition of judicial proceedings and the High Court has power to interfere with the order made in such proceedings: Manikam Mudali v. Queen (1). Even though the High Court's power of interference is thus limited, the Allahabad High Court in a case of King-Emperor v. Badri Prasad (2) pointed out that where a Sessions Judge after considering the evidence thinks that there are no reasonable grounds for believing the accused to be guilty of the offence of which he is accused, and release him on bail, the High Court will not go behind this finding and cancel the order of the Judge releasing the accused on bail. Of course this case was committed to the Sessions and the order was passed by the Sessions Judge in the course of the Sessions trial. But this does not make any difference in principle. A similar view was also taken in Queen v. Thimma Reddi (3). The admission of an accused to bail is a matter within the discretion of the Judge before whom it comes. The discretion of the Trying Magistrate if exercised in favour of releasing the accused on bail is expressly made, under section 497 (5), Criminal Procedure Code, subject to revision by the High Court. While the discretion of the Sessions Judge has not been similarly made subject to such revisional jurisdiction by the High Court by any express provision to that effect in that or other sections in the Chapter on Bails. But this does not mean that the Sessions Judge is at liberty to exercise the discretion vested in him under law arbitrarily and not in conformity with sound judicial principles.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT v. GULAM JILANI.

The Court of every Sessions Judge in Central Provinces and Berar is subject to the general revisional as also appellate jurisdiction of this High Court which is the highest Court of Appeal or Revision for the Provinces, and it is not, therefore, correct to say that, even if it appears in any particular case the record of which has been called for by it under section 439 read with section 435, Criminal Procedure Code, or it comes to the notice of the High Court, that the Sessions Judge has not exercised his discretion with proper care, the High Court should be powerless in the matter of interference. The words "any proceeding" in section 439, Criminal Procedure Code appear to me to be sufficiently general to give to the High Court ample power to control the propriety as well as the regularity of a finding, sentence or order of any inferior Criminal Court, should it appear to it fit to do so. No hard and fast limitations can, therefore, be placed on the powers of superintendence and correction which the High Court can exercise over the proceedings of the Courts subordinate to it. In my opinion the words "any proceeding" would apply even to the proceedings for bail taken before a Sessions Judge under section 498, Criminal Procedure Code. In the case of Faiz Muhammad v. Emperor (4) this Court laid down that under section 439 read with section 435 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, the High Court has power to revise an order of proceeding which though legal, is, in its opinion, sufficiently improper to justify its interference. I have, therefore, no doubt that the powers of this Court are sufficiently wide.

It is, however, argued that the essence of the Code of Criminal Procedure is to be exhaustive, and where no express power to interfere with an order of a Court of Session granting bail under section 498, Criminal Procedure Code, is conferred on the High Court by any of the other sections, such power ought not to be exercised, because by such interference the liberty of the accused who are let off on bail is likely to be jeopardised. On the other hand it is urged on behalf of the Crown that to deny such authority to the High Court might in some cases result in great injustice to the prosecution. I think that if any authority be lacking under any of the other sections of the Code, section 561 A added by the new Amendment Act XVIII of 1923 supplies it. That section gives statutory recognition to the inherent powers of the High Court—a principle which is already well-recognized. For all these reasons I hold that the preliminary objection fails and that I can in the exercise of my general revisional jurisdiction entertain the petitions for revision though not under the particular section under which they are laid.

I now proceed to discuss the merits of the orders dated 9th May 1924 and 9th June 1924, passed by the Sessions and the Additional Sessions Judge on the bail applications respectively made to them. The Sessions Judge while dealing with the evidence before him in connection with a side issue of granting or refusing bail has to a certain extent not been very careful or guarded in the use of certain expressions. Exception is, therefore, taken on behalf of the Crown to certain passages in the order where he has even gone to the length of holding that "the facts disclosed to his mind an offence under section 347, Indian Penal Code" which was bailable offence, and another when he expressed his opinion in the following terms "Looking to the stories as told by Gopala and his wife in their plain narrative void of all exaggerations there was no intent at secret confinement with any object, but it was after all a case of wrongful confinement in an aggravated form for the purpose of extorting from the person confined, any property or valuable security, falling under section 347, Indian Penal Code, which is a bailable offence". The underlined words are likely to be misconstrued by each party. The prosecution says the story appeared to the Sessions Judge to be a plain narrative which was devoid of all exaggerations, while it is capable of bearing the interpretation that what was meant by the Sessions Judge was that if the stories are stripped of all the exaggeration they would show that. In a still another passage in his order he observes: "The Magistrate has rightly characterised the story of the woman to be a thrilling story, but it is at the same time a story which bears close and careful scrutiny. I have no desire to prejudice the mind of the Magistrate. In granting bail or otherwise, I have to consider what offence, bailable or non-bailable, appears to have committed and also to the method adopted in the trial calculated to prejudice the accused or otherwise." In this passage the expressions "bears close and careful scrutiny" are relied on, on behalf of the Crown, as indicating that the evidence is strong enough to stand scrutiny and still the bail is allowed. What the Sessions Judge meant was "requires close and careful scrutiny." No doubt the Sessions Judge has qualified his opinion by saying "he has no desire to prejudice the mind of the Magistrate", still I cannot help remarking that the Sessions Judge could well have refrained from expressing such pronounced views on the evidence. His attempt at refuting some of the arguments used by the Magistrate in refusing the bail, leads me to think that he was approaching the question as if he was sitting in judgment over the order of the Magistrate by way of appeal or revision. This was not, however, really the case. The application to his Court was an independent application and it had to be and could have been disposed of on its own merits and without reference to the grounds stated by the Trying Magistrate. What is needed in such cases is a broad and not nice and critical examination of the evidence. Ordinarily, evidence for the prosecution ought to be taken at the face value unless it is obviously incredible.

The Counsel for the Crown justly remarks and in fact he had made it a ground for special grievance against the order under consideration that observations such as these in an order for bail are likely to influence the further trial of the case and also the mind of the Trying Magistrate. There is room for thinking that such remarks or observations coming from the Sessions Judge are likely to be misconstrued by Subordinate Courts and might in some instances even shape the ultimate decision by such Magistrate. Really speaking section 498, Criminal Procedure Code, makes no distinction between bailable and non-bailable offences in connection with the discretion which the Sessions Judge may have an occasion to exercise in any particular case. In this particular case the Sessions Judge may well have refrained from expressing his views whether the facts disclosed a bailable or a non-bailable offence. I, therefore, think that those remarks some of which are equivocal or ambiguous and, therefore, likely to be misconstrued were not quite necessary in the particular circumstances of this case. Acting under the power recognized by section 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code, I, therefore, direct that the objectionable matter which is likely to be misunderstood as meaning that the Sessions Judge has prejudged the case, be treated as expunged from his order dated 9th May 1924.

In the order of the Additional Sessions Judge dated 9th June 1924 there are more or less similar observations which I need not reproduce here at length which are also objectionable and are likely to be similarly misconstrued by the Trying Magistrate, while appreciating or weighing the evidence and the probabilities of the case. These observations are to be mostly found in paragraph 3 of his order. Acting under section 561-A, Criminal Procedure Code, I direct that the order dated 9th June 1924 should be read as if all such objectionable matter which is likely to create an expression in the mind of the Trying Magistrate that the Additional Sessions Judge has prejudged the case, is expunged therefrom.

Looking to the nature of the offences which the accused are alleged to have committed, and taking into consideration the advisability of giving to the prosecution a fair opportunity of adducing evidence of a really incriminating nature, untrammelled by the dread which the accused, if let off on bail, might inspire on the minds of the prosecution witnesses, the Trying Magistrate in his discretion thought fit to refuse the bail. On the other hand the Sessions Judge and the Additional Sessions Judge have after taking into consideration those circumstances, and the possible inconvenience which may be caused to the accused by their detention while under trial, in their discretion thought fit to hold that the balance of justice was more on the side of the accused than of the Crown and allowed the bails. The question which I have thus to consider is whether this discretion has been improperly exercised by the Sessions Judge, or the Additional Sessions Judge, or, in the words of Stanyon, A. J. O., in Fazl Muhammad v. Emperor (4) whether the order or proceeding for granting bail "though legal is sufficiently improper to justify 'my' interference."

Taking all the circumstances into consideration and particularly the right of an accused to demand that the charges against him should be tried without any unreasonable delay, I think that the discretion cannot in the circumstances of the cases before me, be said to have been improperly or arbitrarily exercised so as to call for my interference. In these cases very large number of witnesses 33 in one and 17 in another are proposed to be examined by the prosecution. This must necessarily entail enormous delay in the trial and disposal of the cases, and it may not, therefore, be proper to detain the accused in custody indefinitely by cancelling the bail-bonds already taken from them. In the case of Narendra Lal Khan v. Emperor (5) the High Court of Calcutta granted bail on the ground of unreasonable delay. Adopting the principle of that case I think I am justified in refusing to cancel the bail-bonds in the cases before me.

The applications are, therefore, rejected and the Rule Nisi issued in each case is hereby discharged.

Certain persons were charged before a Magistrate of the First Class under sections 424 and 505, Part II, of the Penal Code and acquitted. Subsequently the complainant made several applications to him to frame a charge against the accused under section 395, Penal Code, and commit the accused to the Court of Session. The Magistrate put the applications on record but declined to entertain them. The complainant, thereupon, moved the District Magistrate who, acting under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, framed a charge against the accused and committed them to take their trial before the Court of Session. On its being contended, on revision, that the order of the District Magistrate was illegal on the ground that the accused had been acquitted and not discharged.

Held, that the order of the Magistrate was in substance an order discharging the accused, in respect of an alleged offence under section 395, Penal Code, and that the District Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order sought to be revised. [p 761, col 2]

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are shortly as follows:—

There was a dispute between one Bhurasing, a zemindar of Matli, regarding the ownership of the produce of Survey No 15, Deh Bhambhai, Taluka Matli and certain Khanu. Both parties claimed to be owners of this Survey Number. As the result of this dispute Melhusing the brother of Bhurasing, the zemindar, filed a complaint under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code in the Court of the mukhtarkar and First Class Magistrate of Guni against Khanu and others. In those proceedings the Magistrate attached the produce of this Survey Number through the mukhtarkar of Matli and ordered that a watchman should be appointed to look after the produce. Agreeably to those directions the mukhtarkar of Matli ordered Bahadurkhan Tapedar to comply with them and the Tapedar put a seal on the produce and appointed a watchman by the name of Khamiso to look after it.

On the night of the 31st of December 1922, so it has been alleged by the prosecution, Khanu, Khamiso, Imambux, Daryakhan and a certain Mahomed Khan, who has since absconded, came on the scene with hatchets and removed the produce from the possession of the watchman Khamiso. He remonstrated with them, but they overawed him by threatening to kill him with hatchets which they carried. Khamiso the watchman afterwards made a report of what had happened to the Tapedar and the Police challaned Khanu, Khamiso, Imambux and Daryakhan under section 424 and section 506 Part II of the Indian Penal Code before the First Class Magistrate of Tando Mahomed Khan (Mr. Hassanali). That gentleman enquired into the case and on the 18th of September 1923 acquitted all the accused of the offences with which they had been charged. An application was subsequently made by the Tapedar Bahadurkhan to the learned District Magistrate, urging that the accused Khanu and the three accused persons Khamiso, Imambux and Daryakhan should have been committed to the Court of Session on a charge framed under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code. The learned District Magistrate, Mr. Taunton, on the 24th of November 1923 came to the conclusion that there was a prima facie case of an offence under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code and committed them to take their trial before the Court of Session. Against the learned District Magistrate's order of committal Khanu and the three other persons committed have made an application in revision to this Court. The application was admitted only for the examination of the legal question whether the learned District Magistrate in view of the acquittal order of the First Class Magistrate was empowered by law to commit the accused to take their trial before the Sessions Court of an offence committed under section 395 of the Indian Penal Code.

We have had the benefit of an able legal argument by the learned Pleader on behalf of the accused. Nevertheless, we are of the opinion that the order of the learned District Magistrate was within his competence to pass. We do not wish to examine it on the merits, as the application was not admitted on the merits. We shall only examine the law point involved.

The question for our decision is simply this, whether the District Magistrate had under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code power to commit the accused before the Court of Session.

In this connection it must be borne in mind that no less than three applications, all of which the learned Magistrate has put on record, were made to the Magistrate to commit the case to the Court of Session. He declined to do so and in declining to do so he really discharged the accused, although he passed no formal written order to that effect. This case, as it seems to us, is on all fours with the Full Bench case of Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma (1).

The following passage from the judg-

(1) 24 M. 136, 2 Weir 544

ment of the Full Bench is highly pertinent:—

"If section 209 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to be construed as meaning that there can be no 'discharge' under that section in respect of an offence exclusively triable by a Court of Session in cases where it appears to the Magistrate that the accused should be tried before himself or some other Magistrate in respect of offences not so exclusively triable, there would be a deadlock, since there is no provision in the Code, other than that contained in section 209, for dealing with a case where the Magistrate is of opinion that there is no evidence of an alleged offence which is triable exclusively by a Court of Session but considers that the accused should be tried before himself, or some other Magistrate, in respect of alleged offences which are not so exclusively triable. From the terms of the Magistrate's order it is clear that he adjudicated upon the question whether there was any evidence against the accused in respect of the major offence. The Magistrate came to the conclusion that there was not, and he declined to charge him with the major offence. It seems to us that this is a 'discharge' within the meaning of section 209. We think that the Sessions Judge had jurisdiction to make the order under section 436."

The case of Emperor v. Ayyan (2) was brought to our notice. But that case must be widely distinguished. There the learned Magistrate tried a person for giving false evidence in a judicial proceeding. The Sessions Judge subsequently held that as this false statement had been made in connection with a charge of murder the accused could only have been tried by the Court of Session. He held that the trial and conviction by the First Class Magistrate were void and set aside the convictions. Their Lordships very properly held that even though the facts disclosed a graver offence, yet the Magistrate was perfectly competent to try and convict the prisoner for a lesser offence which the facts disclosed. The proceedings, therefore, were not void.

That question does not arise here. The question before us is not whether the acquittal of the accused was void but whether the Magistrate did or did not discharge the accused of an offence under section 395.

The learned Pleader for the applicants next relied upon the case of Abdul Hakim v. Bazaruk Ali (3). That decision, too, can be distinguished from the present one. There the Magistrate never considered whether the accused had or had not committed a graver offence. As the learned Judge, Richardson, J., observed, the Magistrate's mind was never directed to that issue and it was not enquired into. Here three applications were made to the learned Magistrate of the First Class to commit the accused to take their trial in the Court of Session. As the learned District Magistrate has observed, it is thus clear that this issue was present to the First Class Magistrate's mind, when he was disposing of the case.

A somewhat similar case is reported as In re, Sessions Judge Coimbatore (4). But there the graver offence was not mentioned in the Police charge sheet and the graver offence was not pressed by the prosecution. Nor was the Magistrate asked to frame a charge against the accused in respect of it. Their Lordships, therefore, held that the case was not covered by Krishna Reddi v. Subbamma (1). The last case brought to our notice is that of Gulli Bhagat v. Narain Singh (5). That case so far as we can understand it, has no bearing on the present question. All that the Judges laid down there was that the High Court would not interfere in revision at the instance of a private party with an order of acquittal passed under section 494. It contains, however, a passage which we might well quote in our present judgment. "Where a discretion has been exercised by a Court of competent jurisdiction which is not on the face of it arbitrary, the practice of the High Court is that as a revisional Court it will neither enquire into the reasons nor interfere."

In the present case before us a competent District Magistrate has, after recording grounds which show that he had carefully studied the case, passed an order directing committal of the applicants to take their trial before the Sessions Court of an offence said to have been committed by them under section 395. We as a revisional Court do not propose either further to enquire into the reasons or to interfere with the judgment.

The application is dismissed.

Letters Patent, (Cal) 1805, cl. 41—Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council—Judgment, order or sentence passed by High Court in criminal appeal—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sec. I, Art. 181.

The High Court has no power to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from its judgment, order or sentence pronounced in a Criminal appeal, nor is a person aggrieved by such judgment, order or sentence entitled to invite the High Court to give him leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, either under clause 41 of the Letters Patent or under any other provision of the law [p. 765, col. 2].

Quære—Whether the period applicable to an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the judgment, order or sentence passed by the High Court in a criminal appeal is not three years under Art. 181, Sec. I, Limitation Act. [p. 766, col. 1.]

Application from the decision of Sanderson, C. J., and Richardson, J., dated the 31st May 1923, published as 82 Ind. Cas. 545.

JUDGMENT.

Mookerjee, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the sentence passed by this Court in a criminal appeal.

The petitioner Billinghamst was tried by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, for offences punishable under section 120-B read with section 420, Indian Penal Code, and under section 420, Indian Penal Code. The accused was arrested on the 1st September 1919, the trial began on the 7th June 1921; the hearing was finished on the 22nd August 1922, and the judgment was delivered on the 28th November 1922. The petitioner was found guilty on each of the two charges and was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year. The petitioner thereupon preferred an appeal to this Court. The appeal was heard by Sanderson, C. J., and Richardson J., their judgment was pronounced on the 31st May 1923. The decision of the Magistrate as to the first charge was upheld, while the conviction under the second charge was set aside, and the sentence was reduced from one year to nine calendar months. Billinghamst v. Emperor (1). The prisoner has now applied to this Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the judgment and sentence pronounced by this Court in the appeal on the 31st May 1923. The petition, which has been forwarded by the Superintendent of the Alipore Central Jail with a conveying letter dated the 29th September 1923, does not specify under what provision of the law this Court is invited to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Clauses 39-42 of the Letters Patent deal with appeals to the Privy Council. Clauses 39 and 40 deal with matters other than those of criminal jurisdiction. Clause 41 deals with appeals from criminal cases and is in the following terms.

(1) 82 Ind. Cas. 445, 27 C. W. N. 821, (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 18.

"41. And We do further ordain that, from any judgment, order, or sentence of the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, made in the exercise of original criminal jurisdiction, or in any criminal case, where any point or points of law have been reserved for the opinion of the said High Court in manner hereinbefore provided, by any Court which has exercised original jurisdiction, it shall be lawful for the person aggrieved by such judgment, order, or sentence to appeal to Us, Our heirs or successors, in Council, provided the said High Court shall declare that the case is a fit one for such appeal, and under such conditions as the said High Court may establish or require, subject always to such rules and orders as We may, with the advice of our Privy Council, hereafter make in that behalf."

This clause is of no assistance to the petitioner. The judgment and sentence assailed by him were not made in the exercise of original criminal jurisdiction. Nor can it be maintained that the judgment and sentence were made in a criminal case where any point of law had been reserved for the opinion of the High Court, in manner provided in the Letters Patent, by any Court which had exercised original jurisdiction. The substance of the matter is that the judgment and sentence were pronounced in exercise of the power conferred by clause 27 of the Letters Patent, which is in the following terms.

"27. And We do further ordain, that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall be a Court of Appeal from the Criminal Courts of the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, and from all other Courts subject to its superintendence, and shall exercise appellate jurisdiction in such cases as are subject to appeal to the said High Court by virtue of any law now in force."

This clause has to be read with section 411 of the Criminal Procedure Code which provides that "any person convicted on a trial held by a Presidency Magistrate may appeal to the High Court if the Magistrate has sentenced him to imprisonment for a term exceeding six months or to fine exceeding two hundred rupees." Section 430 then provides that judgments and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal shall be final, except in the cases provided for in section 417 (Appeal on behalf of Government from an original or appellate order of acquittal) and Chapter XXXII (which includes section 432-442 and treats of reference and revision). There is, consequently, no escape from the position that the petitioner is not entitled to invite this Court to grant him leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the appellate judgment of this Court, either under clause 41 of the Letters Patent or under any other provision of the law. The view we take is supported by four decisions of this Court.

In Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (2) an application for leave to His Majesty in Council was made in respect of an order of this Court which confirmed an order of the Court below under section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In the matter of Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (3), leave was refused, and Rampini, C.J., observed that the case did not fall within the scope of clause 41 of the Letters Patent. A similar view was adopted in the case of Ataur Singh v. Emperor (4). In a reference under section 374 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and a connected appeal, Stephen, J., held that the sentence of death passed upon the appellants should be confirmed. D. Chatterjee, J., on the other hand, held that the appellants should be acquitted. The case was then referred under section 429 to Carnduff, J., who agreed with Stephen, J., that the guilt of the appellants had been established but held that the sentence should be one of transportation of life. The prisoners thereupon applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The application was refused. Jenkins, C. J., observed: "We reject the application, not because we express any opinion on the merits, but because our only power to grant leave is under clause 41 of the Letters Patent, and the present case does not come within that clause." A similar course was adopted in Thakur Madho Singh v. Emperor (Unreported) where an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was presented against an order made in a Criminal Reference. Greaves and Walmsley, JJ., observed: "We must reject the application as it does not come within clause 41 of the Letters Patent which is the only clause which gives the Court power to entertain appeals in criminal matters" (Privy Council No. 3 of 1916 in Criminal Reference No. 24 of 1915, unreported, decided on 19th January 1916). To the same effect is the decision in Joges Chandra Sarkar v. Legal Remembrancer of Bengal (Unreported) where an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was made on behalf of the accused who had been acquitted by the Sessions Judge of Tipperah on appeal from a conviction by the Deputy Magistrate of Chandpur but were on the 5th September 1919 convicted and sentenced to imprisonment by this Court as the result of an appeal preferred by the Government. The application was refused by Shamsul Huda and Rankin, JJ. (Privy Council No. 41 of 1919 in Government Criminal Application No. 1 of 1919, unreported, decided on 30th September 1919).

Reference may in this connection be made to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Reg. v. Reay (5). Lt. Reay, a European born British subject, was convicted by a Magistrate at Ahmedabad under section 31 of the Bombay District Police Act, of driving in that city at night without sufficient lights and was fined one rupee. The District Magistrate of Ahmedabad entertained doubts as to the legality of the conviction and referred the case for the orders of the High Court. Gibbs and Sargent, JJ., pronounced elaborate judgments and held that the Bombay District Police Act was ultra vires in so far as it conferred criminal jurisdiction upon Magistrates, beyond the limits of the Presidency Town, over, British-born subjects. The consequence was that the conviction was annulled and the fine levied was restored to the accused: Reg. v. Reay (6). The Government Prosecutor thereupon applied for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council from the order of acquittal, and the question of the power of the High Court to grant leave was fully argued by the Advocate-General (Scoble) before Westropp, C. J., Gibbs and Melvill, JJ. The Full Bench rejected the petition. Sir Michael Westropp, C. J., observed that the decision which was impeached had not been made in the exercise of original criminal jurisdiction nor in a criminal case where a point of law had been reserved within the meaning of clause 41 which seemed to refer to clauses 25 and 26. The Chief Justice conceded that the question as to the scope of the powers of the Bombay Legislature, involved in the case, was of considerable importance, and one which it was desirable should be brought before the Tribunal of final resort. But he added that in a case so circumstanced as the one then before the Court, the Court, however willing, had no power to grant leave under clause 41 the Letters Patent.

We are of opinion that the application now before us has been misconceived, that this Court has no power to grant leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the judgment and sentence pronounced in the appeal preferred by the petitioner. In saying this, we must not be understood as in any wise throwing doubt upon that judgment, in fact we have not formed any opinion upon the merits of the case and we say nothing as to the probable result, if an application should be made directly to His Majesty in Council for leave to appeal.

We may add finally that we are not unmindful that the application has been presented to this Court after the lapse of more than ninety days from the date of the judgment and sentence. The period of ninety days prescribed by Art. 179 of the Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act is restricted by its terms to an application for leave to appeal, made by a person desiring to appeal to His Majesty in Council under the Code of Civil Procedure. We need not express a final opinion upon the question, whether, in such circumstances, the period applicable to the present application may not be that prescribed by Art. 181, which ordains that all applications for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in the Schedule, may be made within three years from the date when the right to apply accrues. In any event, for reasons, already stated, the application must be refused and it is ordered accordingly.

—Expression of opinion by District Magistrate in favour of accused—Transfer of case

A complaint was lodged against A and certain other persons on a charge of murder in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of a District. Within a few days of the alleged occurrence, the District Magistrate in a public speech addressed to the Sub-Divisional Officer and other officials referred to the high services of A and the baselessness of the charges made against him.

Held, that the speech amounted to a decided opinion about the charges in question and was likely to create a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the complainant that he will not have a fair and impartial trial and that it was expedient for the ends of justice that the case be transferred to another district. [p. 767, col. 1.]

Application under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, for transfer of a case instituted on a charge of murder under section 302, Indian Penal Code.

Mr. Moti Lal, for the Applicant

ORDER.—This is an application under section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code made by one Rup Narain Bakkal for the transfer of the hearing of a complaint, which he had made in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Tarabganj, Gonda District. The grounds for the application are as follows:—

The brother of the applicant was found dead in his bed in the verandah of his house with a bullet wound in his head in the early morning of October 21st, 1923. A report was made at the Thana the same morning, and the Police made an enquiry and had several statements recorded under section 164 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but did not prosecute any one, and dropped the case. Subsequently on the 8th March 1924, the present applicant filed a complaint in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer against Abdul Hamid Khan, and two others.

On the 1st November 1923, the Deputy Commissioner of Gonda in the course of a speech addressed to this Sub-Divisional Officer and various other officials and non-officials, including one of the persons named in the applicants' complaint, said as follows.—“Main ek arse se Khan Sahab Subedar Abdul Hamid se khub waqif hun unki jangi khidmat ka bhi mujhko aitraf hai aur jo be bunyad ulamat Khan Sahab par lagae ja rahi hain main unka hargiz bawar nahin kar sakta. Wakla ka pesha hai ki woh logon ko larakar apna pet palen.”

It is represented, that this is an expression of opinion which is likely to influence the mind of the Sub-Divisional Officer, to the prejudice of the applicant and, in favour of one of the persons against whom he has made his complaint.

The words do not give any expression of opinion in regard to the subject-matter of this complaint, but it must be admitted that they do express a decided opinion not only in regard to the character of the individual concerned—which might be done without prejudice—but also in regard to charges made against him, and to the baselessness of these charges. As these words were spoken within a few days of the incident which gave rise to the complaint, and as they were addressed, among others, to the Sub-Divisional Officer in whose Court the complaint was filed, these words are, in my opinion, calculated to create in the mind of the applicant a reasonable apprehension that he may not have a fair and impartial hearing. I would not go so far as to say that clause (a) of sub-section (1) of section 526, Criminal Procedure Code will apply to the case, but a wide discretion is given to the Court under clause (e) of that sub-section, and in the circumstances of this case, in which it appears that the applicant's brother has been murdered, it is, in my opinion, expedient for the ends of justice that he should be satisfied and that his complaint should be heard before a Tribunal which he can have no grounds for regarding as biased.

I, therefore, direct that the complaint referred to be transferred for enquiry from the Court in which it has been filed to that of the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow, who may direct the enquiry to be conducted by any competent Magistrate subordinate to him.

G. H. Complaint transferred.

s. 539B—Inspection note, record of—Provision whether mandatory..

It is obligatory on a Magistrate under the second clause of section 539B of the Criminal Procedure Code to make his inspection a part of the record.

This provision is mandatory and the failure to comply with this express direction of law is an illegality and not an irregularity which can be cured.

Mr Gregory (Counsel), (with him Babu Suresh Chandra Talukdar), for the Petitioner.

Babu Raman Mohan Chatterjee, for the Complainant.

Mr Remfry (Counsel), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule must be made absolute on the second of the two grounds, on which it was granted, namely, that the Trial Magistrate did not comply with the provisions of section 539B. It appears that the Trying Magistrate inspected the place under the provisions of that section and also that he drew up a diagram and made an inspection note thereon. But he omitted to comply with the provisions of the second clause of this section and the note did not form part of the record of the case. This provision in the section is, in our opinion, mandatory and the failure to comply with this express direction of law was an illegality and not an irregularity which could be cured if we hold that there was no prejudice to the accused.

We accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner and direct that the accused be re-tried according to law. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

(1) (b) and (c), 439—Order of commitment, whether can be quashed in revision

Under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Court has jurisdiction to exercise the powers of an Appellate Court conferred by section 423 (1) (c) and a fortiori to reverse or alter an order of commitment passed by a Sessions Judge under section 423 (1) (b), Criminal Procedure Code.

Application for revision under sections 435 and 439, Criminal Procedure Code, from an order of the Sessions Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 23rd April 1924.

Mr. Namatullah, for the Applicants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants Ram Samujh and Badri have applied in revision from an order passed by the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad for their commitment to the Court of Session for trial under section 395, Indian Penal Code. This order was passed by the learned Judge under section 423 (b) where the Sessions Court has power in appeal from conviction to reverse the finding and sentence and order the commitment of the accused persons for trial. I take the present application to be one in which this Court can exercise powers under section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. These powers consist of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by section 423 among others. Under section 423 (1) (c) on an appeal from any order the Appellate Court can alter or reverse the order. I, therefore, take it that this Court has jurisdiction in revision to reverse or alter an order of commitment passed by a Sessions Judge under section 423 (1) (b) of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The complaint was one of dacoity but the Magistrate who tried the case did not think that a charge of dacoity was made out. He has, therefore, jurisdiction to discharge the accused persons of the offence of dacoity. He has not specifically said so in his judgment but that is what he intended to do. His action, therefore, cannot be considered to be illegal. I have gone through the record and see no hope of proof that more than four persons joined in committing the offence alleged by the complainant woman. Even the learned Judge of the lower Court when giving the gist of the offence writes the following words in the judgment: "If there was any house trespass committed by the applicants that night it was not done on the sly, but the story of the prosecution is that the doors of Dargahi's house were forced open and four men rushed into the house without any attempt at concealment and used violence to Musammatt Raghuraji and others in order to compel them to deliver up the property." Practically the offence whatever it was is alleged against four persons and a vague statement is made that several others stood outside. The judgment of the Magistrate is not happily worded but it is apparent that he did not believe, and in my opinion rightly, that more than four persons took part in committing the offence. As pointed out by the Deputy Magistrate in another connection, if there had been 10 or 12 men taking part in committing the offence the result of the violence would have been far more serious than slight injury being done to one of the prosecution witnesses. No Court is likely to believe that more than four persons took part in the offence. The applicants were, therefore, rightly discharged of an offence of dacoity.

I quash the order of commitment passed by the learned Sessions Judge and remit the record to him for trial of the appeal filed in his Court according to law.

PLAINTIFFS

versus

TRIBHUBAN HIRACHAND & Co.—

DEFENDANTS.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s 9 (b)—Arbitration agreement—Alternative methods of arbitration—Choice given to one party—Failure to follow chosen method—Other party, whether can fall on alternative method—Procedures

Parties to a suit had entered into a contract whereby the plaintiffs had sold and defendants had bought a quantity of sugar. The contract contained, among others, an arbitration clause in the following words:—"Any disputes to be settled by arbitrations under the rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, or, at the option of the sellers by the arbitration of two European sugar importers of Calcutta, one to be appointed by the sellers and one by the buyers." Disputes arose and the plaintiff, elected to have the arbitration of two European importers and declined to go to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. They did not, however nominate an arbitrator whereupon the matter having been referred to the arbitration of the Chamber by the defendants, an ex parte award was made. The plaintiffs appealed.

Held, that the plaintiffs sellers having elected to go to the arbitration of two European importers it was not open to the defendants buyers to have the dispute arbitrated upon by the Tribunal in question, and in the case of failure of the plaintiffs to appoint an Arbitrator within the time fixed, in the absence of a different intention expressed in the submission, the procedure laid down in section 9, sub-section (b) of the Arbitration Act should have been followed. [p 771, col 1.]

Mr. S. N. Banerjee (with him Mr. S. C. Bose), for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. L. P. E. Pugh (with him Mr. S. Ghose), for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to set aside an award of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce made on the 19th January 1922.

The parties on the 14th April 1920, entered into a contract whereby the plaintiffs sold and the defendants bought white Java sugar.

The contract contains, among others, an arbitration clause in the following terms:—

"Any disputes to be settled by arbitration under the rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, or, at the option of the sellers by the arbitration of two European sugar importers of Calcutta, one to be appointed by the sellers and one by the buyers, with powers to appoint a European merchant as Umpire. The decision of the Chamber, Arbitrators or Umpire shall be final and binding on both parties either of whom may make the same a rule or order of Court. If the buyers shall fail to join in such arbitrations or to appoint an Arbitrator within three days after being required to do so, the arbitration may, at the option of sellers, proceed ex parte and the award thereon shall be binding on the buyers, and the sellers may make the same a rule or order of Court."

Disputes arose and form the subject of correspondence but no letter is relevant earlier than that of the 6th September 1921, from the Registrar of the Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce to the plaintiffs and the Solicitors for the defendants. That letter stated that the defendants had applied for arbitration and requested the parties to send their statements of the case to the Registrar. The plaintiffs' Solicitors on the 29th September, wrote to the Registrar, saying—

"Our clients as sellers, have, under the above contract, option of claiming arbitration either of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce or of two European sugar importers of Calcutta. They elect to have the arbitration of two European sugar importers and they decline to go to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce."

On the 4th October 1921, Messrs. Khaitan & Co., Solicitors for the defendants, wrote two letters, one to the Registrar, which it is not necessary to read, as it merely informs the Registrar of the contents of the other, and another to the plaintiffs. That letter, after making allegations which may or may not be justified, concludes—

"You should, therefore, nominate an Arbitrator without any further delay. We are, therefore, instructed to call upon you which we hereby do to nominate an Arbitrator within seven days from receipt hereof failing which please note our clients will have the matter decided by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce as provided for in clause 18 of the contract."

The plaintiffs did not nominate an arbitrator and took no further steps in that behalf. The Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce entered upon the reference and in due course made its award, which was against the plaintiffs.

The short point which has been argued is whether or not under clause 18 of the contract, after the plaintiffs had elected to go to the arbitration of two European sugar importers, it was open to the defendants to have the dispute arbitrated upon by the Tribunal in question.

The plaintiffs contend that, having exercised their election, the Tribunal of the Chamber of Commerce had no authority to arbitrate. On the other hand, it has been argued on behalf of the defendant that the election was not properly exercised or that having been exercised but not pursued, the defendants were entitled to have recourse to arbitration by the Tribunal of the Chamber of Commerce.

First, it is to be observed the right of election is given to the sellers. It is submitted that merely writing and saying that they elect to have arbitration by two European sugar importers is not sufficient and that to make a proper election they should have appointed an arbitrator. The latter part of the clause is relied upon for this purpose; it says:—

"If the buyers shall fail to join in such arbitration or to appoint an Arbitrator within three days after being required to do so, the arbitration may, at the option of sellers, proceed ex parte."

Now, there is nothing in this part of the clause about the sellers appointing an Arbitrator. The sellers have the election, but how they shall make the election is not provided for by this clause. I do not consider that for the purpose of such election the sellers have to appoint their Arbitrator, and in my judgment a statement such as they made, following the words of the clause, that they did so elect is sufficient.

That being so, what then is the position when the election has been made and what follows?

Section 9 of the Arbitration Act says what shall be done where a submission provides that the reference shall be to two Arbitrators, and sub-section (b) provides for a case of this kind. It says:—

"If, on such a reference, one party fails to appoint an Arbitrator, for seven clear days after the other party, having appointed his Arbitrator, has served the party making default with a written notice to make the appointment, the party who has appointed an Arbitrator may appoint that Arbitrator to act as sole Arbitrator."

Excluding the latter part of clause 18 of the contract the effect of which I shall consider immediately the position is very clear. When it came to the knowledge of the buyers that the arbitration was to be in the manner stated, the sellers not having already appointed their Arbitrator, what the buyers should have done was to have appointed their Arbitrator and, as they did, given the sellers seven days' notice to appoint their Arbitrator, in default of which the buyers might have proceeded in accordance with the section. If the sellers had not then duly appointed an Arbitrator, the buyers might have appointed their Arbitrator to act as sole Arbitrator.

Default on the part of the sellers in appointing an Arbitrator did not entitle the buyers to revert to arbitration by the Chamber of Commerce as they purported to do, by the letter of the 4th of October. That was not in accordance with the Act nor is it contemplated by the latter part of clause 18 of the contract.

The latter part of this clause deals with conditions which do not arise in this case, viz., where the seller has appointed his Arbitrator, but the buyer has not. In these circumstances it follows the Act but with this difference, that the notice is reduced from seven days to three.

This part of the clause appears to me, if I may say so, to be somewhat indifferently worded, because it does not make provision for default on the part of the seller in making an appointment and it only deals with the case of failure on the part of the buyers to appoint their arbitrator. But if the Act is followed, no difficulty need arise in practice.

GOVIND V. DHEKLU.

In the circumstances of this particular case however the latter part of clause 18 has no application, and its object is limited to the purpose which I have indicated.

The election having been made and there being a procedure laid down by the Arbitration Act, which could and should have been followed in the absence of a different intention expressed in the submission, that is, clause 18 of the contract, it was not open to the defendants to revert to arbitration by the Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

In my judgment, the Bengal Chamber of Commerce had no authority to arbitrate and the award must be set aside, with costs of the suit on scale No. 2.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, rr 58, 62—Objection by mortgagee to attached property—Order in objector's favour—Subsequent proceedings by mortgagee objector—Decree-holder auction-purchaser, whether can circumvent order.

A decree-holder cannot circumvent the order in an objection case under O XXI, r 58, Civil Procedure Code, by himself becoming an auction-purchaser. [p 772, col 1]

When, therefore, an objection under O XXI, r 58, Civil Procedure Code, is allowed and the attached property is sold subject to the objector's mortgage, the decree-holder by becoming an auction-purchaser cannot challenge the mortgage in a subsequent suit by the mortgagee for foreclosure of the mortgage and is bound by the order made in the objection case.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 4th January 1918.

Messrs. M. B. Kinkhede and M. D. Khandekar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. V. Joshi and V. D. Kale, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Dheklū filed the present suit for foreclosure on a mortgage-bond dated the 8th June 1912, Exhibit P-1, executed by Ghudan, the father of defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The mortgaged property consisted of absolute occupancy, occupancy and ordinary fields. Defendant No. 5 had obtained a money-decree on the 23rd November 1911 against Ghudan in Suit No 309 of 1911, and had got the absolute occupancy fields attached in execution. Dheklū filed an objection to the attachment on the 23rd December 1912 on the basis of his mortgage-deed. Defendant No. 5 replied that he knew nothing about the objector's mortgage, that the judgment-debtor was the objector's cousin and that it was doubtful whether the mortgage was genuine. He added that the property might be sold subject to the mortgage, if proved.

On the 7th February 1913 the objection was allowed in the following terms:—

"The objection is partly allowed. Property will be sold subject to the objector's mortgage. The objector to bear his costs."

Form C was then sent to the Collector on the 26th April 1913. The fields were sold, defendant No. 5 himself becoming the purchaser.

In this suit defendant No. 5, who was the only contesting party, denied execution and attestation of the mortgage-deed and pleaded that it was a nominal transaction effected to defeat or delay him. Other pleas were raised which it is not necessary to refer to for the purposes of this appeal.

The First Court found that the mortgage-deed was duly attested and was executed for consideration and not with the object of defeating or delaying defendant No. 5. It also held that in view of the order in the objection case it was not open to defendant No. 5 to dispute the genuineness of the mortgage.

The lower Appellate Court held that the order allowing the mortgagee's claim in the objection case was conclusive and debarred defendant No. 5 from pleading that the mortgage was without consideration or was not properly attested. A new plea taken in that Court that the mortgage was void for want of the written permission of the Collector was also held to be barred by the order in the objection case.

In this Court it is urged that in spite of the order in the objection case it was open to defendant No. 5 to urge the pleas which the lower Appellate Court held that he was debarred from raising.

As regards the plea that the mortgage is void for want of the written permission, of the Collector I hold that it cannot be allowed as it was not raised in the First Court and as there is nothing on the record to show that written permission was not given. It appears from the plaint that the mortgage was taken during the pendency of proceedings before the Collector in Suit No. 434 of 1908; but I am unable to find anything in it from which it may be inferred that the mortgage was without the written permission of the Collector and void. The plaint states that a part of the mortgage-debt was borrowed to pay the decretal amount into the Court and it may be that it was paid under r. 89, O. XXI, First Schedule, Civil Procedure Code or that the Collector had sanctioned the transfer.

The next point urged is that the order in the objection case does not preclude defendant No. 5 from raising the other pleas referred to above. Defendant No. 5 had in that case challenged the genuineness of the mortgage and called for its proof. It seems to me that the objection would not have been allowed if the Court had not been satisfied that the mortgage-deed was executed and duly attested and was for consideration. The decision on these points constituted the order in the objection case and it is now conclusive as between the parties to it. It is, however, urged that defendant No. 5 was a party to the objection case in his position of a decree-holder and as in the present suit he is joined as an auction-purchaser in possession he is not bound as auction-purchaser, by the order in the objection case. In other words it is argued that a decree-holder can circumvent the order in an objection case by himself becoming the auction-purchaser. No authority is cited in support of this proposition. On the contrary Ramu Aiyar v. Palaniappa

Chetty (1), is directly against this contention. See also Narayan Sadoba v. Umbar Adam (2). The case of Lalchand Hiralal Marwari v. Hasto Bai (3), cited by the appellant, appears to be one where there was no objection.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Mr. L. P. Zutshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Stuart, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought in 1918.

MUNNA LAL V. EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Agra by the proprietor of a firm carrying on business at Agra against the East Indian Railway Company on the following allegations:—

(1) that the plaintiff had had consigned to him 101 bales of strawboard from Howrah to Agra City in two waggons, one containing 53 bales weighing 362 maunds 1 seer, and the other containing 48 bales weighing 315 maunds 30 seers by the defendant Company's line.

(2) That the consignment arrived on 28th May 1918 and 1st June 1918.

(3) That the 48 bales were delivered in good condition but that the consignment of 53 bales was carelessly unloaded with the result that damage was done to a certain number of bales.

(4) That the plaintiff having sold 50 bales to a firm in Delhi to be booked to Delhi the 53 bales which had been carelessly unloaded on a forwarding note which was accepted by the Station Master at Agra.

(5) That at first there was a refusal to forward but that on the 19th July 1918, 42 bales weighing 80 maunds 11 seers were actually booked to Delhi.

(6) That when these 42 bales were booked the plaintiff discovered that 11 bales which had been concealed by the remainder of the consignment had become spoilt.

On these allegations the plaintiff claimed damages against the Railway Company. The Railway Company in their written statement suggested that the damage if any had been done before the goods reached Agra. They denied ever having accepted liability in respect of any portion of the consignment after it had reached Agra. Their case was that the plaintiff had taken away 48 bales on their arrival in Agra (there the plaintiff agreed) and that the remaining 53 bales had been offered to them to be booked to Delhi, but that they had refused to accept the offer inasmuch as at that time booking to Delhi was suspended owing to the exigencies of Military Service. The defence continued that the plaintiff in spite of their reply had refused to remove the 53 bales, and had left them on the Railway premises at his own risk, that subsequently 42 bales had been booked by them to Delhi but that no responsibility had been incurred in respect of the 11 bales. The Company claimed wharfage against the plaintiff in respect of the time that the bales had remained on their premises.

The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit. His decree was affirmed by the learned District Judge. The present appeal is filed here.

I find that the Courts below do not appear to have appreciated the exact nature of the dispute, or to have considered, as they should have considered, the evidence before them. The learned Subordinate Judge appeared to consider that when the consignment arrived in Delhi the goods had undergone no damage, and he took the view that it followed that from the date the plaintiff took delivery the goods must have remained on the Railway premises at the owner's risk. He practically decided the case on assumptions without going in any way into the question as to whether the Railway Company had accepted the custody of the goods after delivery in Agra. The learned District Judge took much the same view.

Thus in my opinion was a mistaken view. It is true that the plaintiff might have been better worded, but it is perfectly clear that the points for determination were brought out by the evidence on the record. The first point to be noted is this. The East Indian Railway Company, were the carriers from Howrah to Agra. The plaintiff took some sort of objection originally in respect to an alleged damage done to the goods when they arrived at Agra. He instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court in respect of that damage, but he subsequently withdrew it. The withdrawal in no way affects the real point now in dispute. That suit was certainly ill-advised, and he made a mistake in re-iterating his complaint in respect of damage at the time of delivery at Agra in his plaint in the present suit. It is sufficient to say that on the facts, the goods were apparently delivered in Agra in good condition. The plaintiff's real grievance was this. He wished to consign 53 bales after their arrival in Agra to Delhi. The Company was unable to accede to his wishes for some time, as booking had been stopped between Agra and Delhi for goods in bulk, owing to the exigencies of Military requirements. These 53 bales were undoubtedly left at Agra on the Railway premises. The plaintiff's real case was that they were left in the custody of the Company and that when booking was re-opened owing to the negligence of the Company during the period in which the goods had remained on the Railway premises, considerable damage had been done to the consignment, and it is in respect of this damage that the appeal is pressed. It is somewhat surprising that although there is on the record a mass of proved correspondence between the parties, a perusal of which sheds considerable light upon the dispute, neither the Trial Court nor the lower Appellate Court has referred to any portion of this correspondence. It will be necessary for me to refer to this correspondence in some detail.

Before I arrive at a finding as to what actually happened—a finding which it is open to this Court to arrive at under section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure as the evidence disclosed by these documents has not been in any way considered by the lower Appellate Court, I think it advisable to state my view of the principles which should be applied to this case. In respect of the consignment from Howrah to Agra no difficulty arises. Under the conditions governing that consignment it was for the plaintiff to remove the goods from the Railway premises without unnecessary delay, and if he did not remove those goods from the Railway premises the Railway Company was in no way responsible for their safe custody. This is clear. But this circumstance does not really affect the point in dispute. The plaintiff's case is that a fresh contract arose after delivery was taken by him at Agra whereby the Station Master undertook to retain the 53 bales in Railway custody until booking of goods in bulk to Delhi was re-opened. The case of the Railway Company is that the Station Master accepted no responsibility in the matter, and that the plaintiff in spite of the protests of the Station Master left the goods on the Railway premises. It is further argued that even if the Station Master accepted responsibility, the Railway Company is not bound by his action. My first decision will have to be a decision of fact. Did the Station Master accept responsibility for the custody of the 53 bales after they were delivered in Agra? If he did not accept responsibility there is an end of the matter and this appeal must fail. If he did accept responsibility a further question will arise, as to whether the Railway Company is bound by his action. The learned Counsel for the respondent Company has suggested that there is a rule under which no Railway Company is responsible for the safe custody of goods delivered to them whatever acceptance there may have been by their agent until a Railway receipt has actually been given. He has not produced this rule. But even if such a rule existed it would not have force in any circumstances under the decision of a Full Bench of this Court in Sohanlal Munnalal v East Indian Railway. (1) In the particular circumstances of this case such a rule could have no application, apart from that authority. Ordinarily there would not have been the slightest difficulty in re-booking the goods to Delhi. The plaintiff would have indicated his requirements on a forwarding note, the Railway would have at once accepted the consignment and the Railway's responsibility would have been clear. But a peculiar situation has arisen owing to the fact that booking had been stopped to meet the special circumstances of the Military situation. The Station Master was clearly the agent of the Company. It was open to him to say to the plaintiff either that he would not permit the goods to remain upon the Railway premises, or that he would permit the goods to remain upon the Railway premises at the plaintiff's risk, or that he would accept bailment of the goods. There was nothing to restrict his authority whichever of the three courses he chose to adopt. This is a case where the Station Master was acting both in the course of his employment and within the scope of his authority, and there can be no question as to the law upon the subject. That law is very clearly laid down in section 226 of the Indian Contract Act and it is unnecessary to discuss whether the principles of Dyer v. Munday (2) and Bayley v. The Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway Co. (3) to which reference has been made in Fazl Ilahi v. East Indian Railway Co. (4) are modified by the provisions of sections 227 and 237 of the Indian Contract Act. Here the Station Master clearly had authority to bind the Company by his action. The responsibility of the Railway Company is thus that of a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act. This is clear from the provisions of section 72 of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890).

It now has to be considered what actually happened. It is clear that the 53 bales when taken out of the waggon were placed under cover of the roofed platform and sheeted. This will be seen from Mr. Sandwell's letter of the 18th June 1918. The Trial Court found that the plaintiff did not execute a forwarding note. The lower Appellate Court was apparently under the impression that he did execute a forwarding note. Whether he did or did not do so appears to me unimportant. He probably did. But his letter of the 24th May, 1918, would have the effect of a forwarding note. It contains a clear request to book the goods. The Station Master certainly did not book the goods but he kept them in his custody. On the 27th May 1918 the plaintiff stated that the goods were at Railway risk. The Station Master did not reply that the goods were not at Railway risk in his answer to that letter. He merely requested the plaintiff to await the Traffic Manager's reply. It is true that on the 1st of June 1918, the Station Master suggested that the goods were at plaintiff's risk but the plaintiff denied that suggestion on the 2nd June 1918, and on the 13th June, 1918, the Station Master in his letter to the District Traffic Manager did not suggest that the goods were at plaintiff's risk and left it an open question whether wharfage should be charged. When the Traffic Manager directed the plaintiff to remove the goods the Station Master on the 19th June 1918, forwarded the order to the plaintiff, but on the 21st June 1918, he made the suggestion that he would book the goods in small consignments of 6 maunds each. From the 27th June 1918 the Station Master again referred to the goods as being at the plaintiff's risk but on the 19th July 1918, the Station Master wrote to the plaintiff that rebooking had been opened, offering to book the goods to Delhi at once. It is clear to me on this evidence—and I would arrive at a finding of fact accordingly—that the Station Master never definitely directed the plaintiff to remove the goods, that he never definitely told the plaintiff in unmistakable terms that the goods were being kept on the Railway premises at his own risk, and that he never definitely accepted the goods at Railway risk. But his conduct in retaining the goods in the Railway shed sheeted affords to my mind satisfactory evidence that he accepted the bailment of the goods on behalf of the Railway Company and in the circumstances section 72 of the Railways Act comes into operation and the Railway Company is responsible for their safe custody. There are no qualifying circumstances. I attach no importance to the Railway Company claiming for wharfage as showing an admission on their part that they were responsible for the goods for they appear to have claimed wharfage not on goods for despatch waiting to be consigned, but on an insupportable plea that the goods were available for delivery as soon as they arrived in Agra and were afterwards kept on the Railway premises at the plaintiff's risk. It is however sufficient for the purpose to find, as I do, that the Railway Company were bailees. As bailees they were bound to take such care of the goods as they would have taken of their own goods of a similar nature, and are bound in damages for loss resulting from their negligence.

The question now arises whether there was any damage and whether that damage originated owing to the defendant Company's negligence. There can be no doubt as to the fact of damage and this point can be decided at once as a question of fact under the provisions of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The evidence is ample for the decision of this point. It would be most inadvisable, in my opinion, to drag out this protracted trial by sending the matter back for a finding of fact by the Court below. The Commissioner's report which was made in conjunction with members of the Railway staff has never been challenged; so both the questions of damage and the amount of damage can be determined on that report.

Further a finding under section 103 can be arrived at, as to the cause of damage. The materials here again are ample. There is nothing to show that the goods were damaged when they arrived at Agra or that they were damaged while being unloaded. It is clear on facts that the damage took place while the goods were stored under cover of the roofed platform, and it was due entirely to careless stacking. The goods had clearly been packed in such a manner that if a very heavy weight was superimposed upon them, they were bound to be damaged, and they were apparently so stacked that a heavy weight was superimposed on many with the result that the cases broke and the contents were in some instances irretrievably ruined. I have no hesitation in finding that this damage was caused by careless stacking by the Railway Company and that it was caused after the arrival of the goods in Agra and before the Commissioner made his inspection. Taking this view I would decree the appeal for Rs. 828-8-6 with proportionate costs and future interest at 6 per cent. from the date of institution to the date of realisation. The respondent Company will pay their own costs throughout, the proportionate costs of the plaintiff in the Trial Court and his full costs in the First Appellate Court and in this Court his full costs including fees on the higher scale.

Sulaiman, J.—I agree with the conclusion arrived at by my learned brother.

CIVIL REVISION No. 843 of 1921.

June 12, 1922.

Present:—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy and Mr. Justice Panton.

RAJ CHANDRA DAS—PETITIONER

versus

KALI KANTA DAS AND OTHERS—

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss 89, 92—Sale, setting aside of—Auction-purchaser, if necessary party—Mention of auction-purchaser's name in petition, if sufficient—Notice on parties

There is no provision in the law that the auction-purchaser must be made a party in an application to set aside the sale. It is enough for the purposes of an application under O XXI, r 89, Civil Procedure Code, that the auction-purchaser should be mentioned by name.

Obiter—It is desirable that in an application for setting aside a sale, the Court, without reference to the parties mentioned in the petition, should direct the issue of notice of the application upon the decree-holder, the auction-purchaser and any other party who may appear to have been affected by the sale [p 778, col 2].

Civil revision against an order of the Court of the District Judge, Rangpur.

Mr Atul-Chandra Gupta, for the Petitioner.

Messrs Jatindra Nath Sanyal and Dinesh Chandra Roy, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are as follows:—The petitioner held a mortgage-decree against one Kali Kanta Das. In execution of a rent decree against Kali Kanta the mortgaged property was sold and purchased by the opposite party Kasiruddin Sarkar. On 1st March 1921, within 30 days from the sale, the petitioner made the necessary deposit and filed an application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code. The Munsif passed the following order. "One Raj Chandra Das applies for setting aside the sale on deposit of the decretal amount with compensation. He is to prove the mortgage. Fix 9th March 1921 for hearing. The decree-holder also to bring evidence if he likes." On the 9th March following the order passed was "The applicant does not appear to prove his case and hence the application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code is rejected." The petitioner appealed to the District Judge against the order of the Munsif rejecting his application under O. XXI, r. 89, and the learned District Judge in a considered judgment expressed the opinion that, if on account of a certain bar in law the petitioner's application was not infructuous, he would have remanded the case to the First Court. He observes in one part of his judgment: "I consider, therefore, that the case has been disposed of on a preliminary ground, and that should it otherwise appear desirable to do so, it would be open to me to make the order of remand asked for." He, however, dismissed the petitioner's appeal on the ground that the auction-purchaser was not made a party to the application made under O. XXI, r. 89, and hence that application was incompetent, inasmuch as the auction-purchaser could not be made a party at that stage as more than 30 days had elapsed since the sale. He was pressed by a decision of this Court in Ajruddin Ahmad v. Khudabux Khondkar (1), decided on the 27th January 1919 by Fletcher and Walmsley, J.J., and held that the auction-purchaser was a necessary party in an application like the present one, and as he was not made a party to this application within time, it would serve no useful purpose to remand the case to the Munsif.

The petitioner contends before us first that there is no provision in law enjoining that an auction-purchaser must be made a party. What the law insists upon is that before an order is passed setting aside a sale the auction-purchaser must have notice of the application under O. XXI, r. 92, clause (2). His second ground is that as a matter of fact, he did mention the name of the auction-purchaser and it was for the Court to give him proper notice of the application.

With reference to the first point the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 did not expressly declare that the auction-purchaser must have notice of the application to set aside the sale either under section 310-A or section 311 of that Code or that no order setting aside the sale should be made in his absence. The point, however, came for consideration in several cases under the old Code before this Court and the majority of them held that on general principles an adverse order should not be passed against a party affecting his vested right without notice to him and behind his back. Kripali Singh v. Puroo Rout (2). In order to give effect to this view of the law a proviso has been added to O. XXI, r. 92, of the present Code to the effect "provided that no order shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby." All that the Statute now demands is that no order should be passed setting aside a sale without giving notice to the parties affected by it. The Statute or the case law does not go beyond the rule, namely, that no order should be passed without such notice. There is no provision in the law, nor have we been referred to any case where it has been authoritatively laid down that the auction-purchaser must be made a party in an application to set aside the sale. It is not clear what is meant by the expression "made a party." It seems to have been loosely used in some of the reported cases, but all these cases were decided to substantiate the rule that the auction-purchaser should be afforded an opportunity of being heard before an order was passed setting aside the sale. If by the expression it is understood that the parties to the application should be arrayed in the corresponding categories of plaintiffs and defendants, there is no provision to that effect within the four corners of the Code of Civil Procedure. To hold otherwise would necessitate reading into the proviso to O XXI, r. 92 a mandatory provision which could have, had the Legislature so intended, been expressly mentioned. Reference may usefully be made to the Forms prescribed in the First Schedule, Appendix E to the Code of Civil Procedure. Form 6 which is the form of application for execution of decree has a column in which names of the parties, namely, the plaintiff and the defendant are to be mentioned. All the other forms relating to execution have the word "title" on top of them. By "title" the names of the parties given in the application for execution are clearly indicated as all these applications and notices relate to the execution case. Form No. 36 which is the form of an application under rule 90 (and is applicable to an application under rule 89) has the same superscription. If any other "title" including the name of the auction-purchaser was intended, the heading of the form would have been otherwise.

Coming to the facts of the present case it appears that the petition which the petitioner filed on the 1st March praying for permission to deposit the decretal amount and to have the sale set aside does not contain the name of any party to it save the names of the parties to the execution case. It is headed Naresh Chandra Lahiri, decree-holder v. Kali Kanta Das, judgment-debtor; and mentions the number of the execution case in which the property was sold. The name of the petitioner even does not appear at the top of it. In the body of the petition the applicant mentions the name of the auction-purchaser, the present contesting opposite party as the person who had purchased this property at the auction-sale. In my judgment this is sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law. No doubt the Court was incompetent to pass any order without notice to the auction-purchaser, but notice which the law thus enjoins upon all parties affected by the sale may be issued at the instance of the petitioner or even at the instance of the Court. It is apparent from the order passed by the Court on this petition directing the decree-holder to bring his evidence if he liked that the learned Munsif at that stage thought that the only party affected by the sale was the decree-holder. If it were subsequently discovered that the auction-purchaser had not got notice of the application, it was open to the Court to direct service of notice upon him before passing any order on the application. It appears desirable that in an application for the setting aside of a sale the Court, without reference to the parties mentioned in the petition, should direct issue of notice of the application upon the decree-holder the auction-purchaser and any other party who may appear to have been affected by the sale.

The case on which the learned Judge relies does not lay down the exact proposition that the auction-purchaser must be made a party in the sense in which that expression is used in connection with suits. There the learned Judges were considering the question whether the auction-purchaser was a necessary party to the application. It may be that in that case the auction-purchaser was not even mentioned in the petition. The judgment in the case does not show the real facts and so I am unable to hold that it in any way lays down a view contrary to that which I have expressed above. I have sent for and examined the record of this Court in that case and find that it was an application under O. XXI, r. 90 and that the sale in that case took place on May 5, 1916 and the application to set it aside was made on October 4, 1917. An application was made by the judgment debtor on November 8, 1918, to make one of the auction-purchasers party to the case. These were the peculiar features of that case on which the judgment of this Court is justifiable.

NAYAK VAJESINGJI JORAVARSINGJI V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

The second point raised by the learned Vakil for the petitioner had been virtually answered by my observations with regard to the first point. I am of opinion that it is enough for the purposes of an application under O. XXI, r. 89 that the auction-purchaser is mentioned by name. The present application was filed in time and was in order.

As I have observed the learned Judge was willing to send the case back for hearing on the merits, had he taken the view of the law we have now adopted. It, therefore, remains for us to pass the order which the learned Judge should have made in this case. The order of the Munsif, dated the 9th March 1924, will, therefore, be set aside and the case sent back to him for hearing on the merits. We allow no costs.

APPELLANTS

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Act of State—Acquisition of territory—Municipal Courts—Rights of subjects—Pleadings—Burden of proof—General statements—Potta holder, whether lease-holder—Panch Mahals—Naiks, status of.

When a territory is acquired by a Sovereign State for the first time that is an Act of State. It matters not how the acquisition has been brought about [p 780, col 2].

Secretary of State for India in Council v Bai Rajba, 30 Ind. Cas 303, 42 I. A. 229, 19 C. W. N. 1087, 13 A. L. J. 953, (1915) M. W. N. 563, 29 M. L. J. 242, 18 M. L. T. 179, 2 L. W. 731, 17 Bom. L. R. 730, 39 B. 625, 23 O. L. J. 1 (P. O.), Secretary of State for India v Kamachee Boye Sahaba, 7 M. L. A. 476, 13 Moo. P. O. 22, 7 W. R. (Eng.) 722, 4 W. R. P. O. 42, 1 Suth. P. C. J. 373, 1 Sar. P. C. J. 684, 19 E. R. 388 and Cook v Spragg, (1899) A. C. 572, 68 L. J. P. C. 144, 81 L. T. 231, 15 T. L. R. 515, referred to.

Any inhabitant of the territory can only make good in the Municipal Courts, established by the new Sovereign, such rights as that Sovereign has through his officers, recognised. Such rights as he had under the rule of predecessors avail him nothing. Nay more, even if in a treaty of cession it is stipulated that certain inhabitants should enjoy certain rights, that does not give a title to these inhabitants to enforce these stipulations in the Municipal Courts. The right to enforce remains only with the High Contracting Parties. [p 780, col 2].

If there existed a right, either admitted or that could be established by decree of Court, and that right it was alleged was taken by an "Act of State", it would be necessary for the sovereign so specifically to plead the "Act of State", but if cession is admitted the onus is cast on the person admitting cession to show the acts acknowledging his rights after cession and a plea specifically using the words "Act of State" is not required [p 781, col 1].

In a treaty of cession a mere general statement that existing rights will be upheld cannot prevail against exact determinations made by Government Officers [p 784, col 1].

Any statement in general terms that rights will be respected must necessarily mean as these rights are on investigation determined by the Government Officials. To suppose that by such general statements in a proclamation the Government renounced their right to acknowledge what they thought right and conferred on a Municipal Court the right to adjudicate as upon rights which existed before cession, is a misapprehension of law [ibid].

The mere fact that a document of title held by certain persons is called a potta, and that they executed a kabulyat in similar terms is not conclusive of the question of whether they were mere lease-holders, i.e., farmers of revenue, or were true proprietors paying a jamatundi to the overlord. The term "potta" might quite appropriately be used for the instrument fixing such jamatundi. [p 781, col 2].

The Naiks in Panch Mahals do not possess rights of hereditary proprietorship [p 783, col 1].

Appeals against the judgments, and decrees of the Bombay High Court (Sir Basil Scott, C. J., and Beaman, J.), dated the 17th January 1917, affirming those of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, dated the 24th February 1913.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Dunedin.—In these consolidated appeals the three Naiks of Tanda, Chandwana and Katwada respectively, sue the Indian Government for a declaration that they are proprietors of the whole lands in the talukas belonging to them and that they are not bound to accept a lease of the same in the terms offered to them by the Government in 1907. They admit that they are bound to pay a jamabandi or revenue contribution but contend that there the right of the Government of India ends. Their demand was refused by the District Judge and his judgment was confirmed on appeal by the High Court.

The lands in question are situated in the Panch Mahals and previously to 1860, were in the domain of Scindia of Gwalior. On December 12th of that year Scindia ceded this territory to the British Government by a treaty of which Art. 3 is as follows:—

"The Maharaja transfers to the British Government in full Sovereignty the whole of His Highness' possession in the Panch Mahals and to the south of the river Narbada also Paragna Kumghar on the Betwa river on the following conditions:—

"1st. That for the lands transferred by His Highness, the British Government shall give in exchange lands of equal value calculated on both sides on the present gross revenue.

"3rd. That each Government shall respect the conditions of existing leases until their expiry, and that in order that this may be made clear to all concerned, each Government shall give to its new subjects leases for the same term of years and on the same conditions as those which they at present enjoy.

"4th. That each Government shall give to its new subjects 'sanads' in perpetuity for the rent-free lands—the jageers the perquisites and the hereditary claims (i. e., 'huks' and 'watans') which they enjoy at present under the other Government."

Their Lordships will have occasion presently to enquire into the circumstances of an earlier date, but, for the moment, they pause at this date because what happened in 1860 determines the law of the case. This law was most clearly laid down in the judgment of the Board delivered by Lord Atkinson in the case of Secretary of State for India in Council v. Bai Rajbai (1). Their Lordships do not propose to repeat what was there said. It was no new law that Lord Atkinson laid down. The same had been held in the case of Secretary of State for India v. Kamachee Boye Sahaba (2) and Cook v. Sprigg (3). But a summary of the matter is this.

When a territory is acquired by a Sovereign State for the first time that is an Act of State. It matters not how the acquisition has been brought about. It may be by conquest, it may be by cession following on treaty, it may be by occupation of territory hitherto unoccupied by a recognised ruler. In all cases the result is the same. Any inhabitant of the territory can only make good in the Municipal Courts, established by the new Sovereign, such rights, as that Sovereign has, through his officers, recognised. Such rights as he had under the rule of predecessors avail him nothing. Nay more, even if in a treaty of cession it is stipulated that certain inhabitants should enjoy certain rights, that does not give a title to these inhabitants to enforce these stipulations in the Municipal Courts. The right to enforce remains only with the High Contracting Parties. This is made quite clear by Lord Atkinson at page 238,* when, citing the Pongoland case of Cook v. Sprigg (3) he says: "It was held that the annexation of territory made an Act of State, and that any obligation assumed under the treaty with the ceding State either to the sovereign or the individuals is not one which Municipal Courts are authorised to enforce." Their Lordships have thought it necessary so far to repeat what has been said before because the appellants' Counsel sought to make two points. He said that Act of State had not been pleaded before the Judge of first instance and ought not to be given effect to now.

NAYAK VAJESINGJI JORAVARSINGJI V. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

Their Lordships think that at least the appellants themselves recognised the true situation when, in paragraph 6 of the plaint, they say: "after the advent of the British rule the ancestors of the plaintiffs used to be treated as proprietors of the estates in the same way as the other talukdars in the Panch Mahals." But in truth no plea specifically using the words "Act of State" is required. If there existed a right, either admitted or that could be established by decree of Court, and that right it was alleged was taken by an Act of State, it would be necessary so specifically to plead; but that is not the situation. The moment that cession is admitted the appellants necessarily become petitioners and have the onus cast on them of showing the acts of acknowledgment, which give them the right, they wish to be declared. The other point was that, in virtue of certain general declarations, the appellants became entitled to enforce the treaty. The general declarations will be subsequently examined. If they give a right of themselves well and good; but they can never have the effect of altering the law as above stated; that is to say, of making the appellants, so to speak, a party to the treaty with a right to enforce the conditions of the same in a Municipal Court.

The whole object accordingly of enquiry is to see whether, after cession, the British Government has conferred or acknowledged as existing the proprietary right which the appellants claim. The appellants first sought to prove that under Scindia they were proprietors. The defender retorted that they were merely farmers of revenue. Certain documents were produced out of the Gwalior repositories and controversy was raised as to whether they were genuine or had been tampered with. Their Lordships, for the reasons of law above stated, think it quite unnecessary to consider this question because their view of what was the tenure under Scindia has no bearing on the question. The view of the officials of the Government as to that would influence them to make up their minds as to what title should be given or recognised, but even then, as far as their Lordships are concerned, it is what they did after investigation, not what they thought at investigation, that is matter of moment.

The first touch between the Government of India and these people did indeed precede the cession. In 1850—51, owing to frontier troubles, it was thought expedient that a lease of all this territory should be granted to the Company, who thereupon managed the territory, respecting the rights of the inhabitants as they found them. As a matter of fact the ancestors of the appellants at that time were the holders of pottas for an unexpired term, these pottas having been granted by Scindia and payments were under them made payable to the Company. Their Lordships will at once, in order to show that they have not been swayed by any contrary contention, make the concession that the mere fact that the document of title held by the appellants is called a potta, and that they executed a kabuliyat in similar terms is not conclusive of the question of whether they were mere lease holders, i. e., farmers of revenue, or were true proprietors paying a jamabundi to the overlord. The term potta might quite appropriately be used for the instrument fixing such jamabundi. The terms of the existing pottas expired in 1859; and in February 1860 Captain Buckle, who was in charge for the Government (who had by this time succeeded the Company), granted, on the part of the Government of Scindia, three pottas to the appellants for a period of three years from 1860 to 1863. One of these pottas may be taken as a sample. The jamabundi for each year is fixed at Rs. 5,617-5-3. This was made up of Rs. 5,000 for the "jamabundi revenue," Rs. 217-2-5 for a balance and Rs. 600 a debt due to jamadar Satarkhan. This last was an old debt due by the Naik which the Government was making him pay. Clause 2 provides for the Naik finding security from a banker, a proceeding unnecessary if the land could have been attached, but quite necessary if the lessee was not proprietor but merely a farmer of revenue. Then there is a clause binding the Naik at the termination of the potta to "hand over" the villages to the Government.

In 1860, in December, as already stated, came the cession. Immediately after the cession the Government set itself to enquire what were the estates transferred and what were the tenures of their new subjects. This was necessary, first of all, because as land of equal value elsewhere was to be ceded to Scindia, it was necessary to note the exact value of what had been taken over, and also because undoubtedly the Government wished to give effect to the terms of the treaty above quoted and in particular to the fourth head of the 3rd clause. Accordingly Captain Buckle, who was in charge, was told to make enquiries and furnish exact lists, giving particulars of extent leases, also the names of all jagirdars and their tenures and all charitable and rent-free holdings. Buckle made a report and in this report he enters the appellants as mere lease-holders and not as jagirdars holding proprietary interests. No doubt this was, so to speak, behind the backs of the appellants but it is significant as being the foundation of the action which followed. The pottas which had been granted expired in 1863, consequently they had to be renewed. The Government officers proposed some increase of rent. In the meantime some outsiders made offers to take leases of the three talukas for a rent preposterously higher than anything hitherto received. The Naiks had got wind of this and made representation to the Government in August, 1863. Their prayer is worded "As Government had been taking care of us they will be graciously pleased to grant us a potta to do which they are quite competent."

The Government came to the conclusion that they would not accept the outsiders' offer in view of the long time that the Naiks had had possession and renewed on the same terms. In 1863 the question came up again. There was a long enquiry by the Government as to the precise position of the Naiks.

As an interim arrangement a lease was granted on the old terms to endure till the Survey. This lease also provided for handing back the villages at the expiry of the period. The enquiry dragged on for some years, but in 1876 the Government came to a decision that the Naiks were not entitled to hereditary rights, but might be continued as leaseholders so long as they behaved themselves. This determination was conveyed to the Naiks by letter of 12th June, 1876, which contains the following passage:—

"It appears that under the old rule the pottas (leases) of these villages were also given several times to other people besides these Naiks, and from this it appears that their status may not be of hereditary talukdars; but for about the last fifty years the vahivat (management) has been smoothly carried on by the houses (families) of the three Naiks under their respective pottas and Maherban Propert Sahab and Major Voice Sahab have expressed their opinions that the management under the potta may continue with the Naiks so long as they properly take care of the villages. Hence this question is decided accordingly. The pottas of the three talukas are to be continued till the survey takes place. The Survey Department has taken the trigonometrical Survey of the three talukas and it may be suitable to fix the amounts of the pottas, keeping in view the trigonometrical measurement at the time of the Survey. No hereditary right of the Naiks is admitted in the preparation of the pottas."

In 1881, the Survey having been introduced, the Government came to a resolution as to what leases should be granted. They were to be on a sliding scale calculated on the Survey assessment and allowing the Naiks a 10 per cent. margin. This proposal must have been communicated to the Naiks, though there is no direct evidence to that effect, for in 1883 there is a petition from the Naiks complaining of the proposal as calculated to impoverish them; complaining of the taking away of the forest land, and offering as evidence of right a document granted in Scindia's time. This petition was refused in 1883 and the refusal communicated to the Naiks. In 1887 the question of the forest land arose in an acute form. The Naiks petitioned against the taking of the forest land by the Government. In the petition they really sought to re-open the whole question. Thus, in Article 7 of the petition of 31st October, 1887, they say as follows:—

"7. If our right is considered by the Government as specially that of jaradar mentioned above, it is a great mistake; we have the right of ownership over our village, which is handed down from generations; we had been recovering and we have been recovering the jamabandi tax, vaje (payment in kind), etc., from our villages in any manner we like. Also we gave (land) to others free from any tax; we had been and have been giving as a loyal subject to the late and present Government a certain amount as chauth in lieu of remaining under their protection."

This petition was considered, was not sanctioned, and a reply sent in the negative on 26th April, 1888. Under the Forestry Acts the Naiks could have appealed against this order, but did not do so.

In 1902 the Naiks again sought to raise the whole question by sending a memorial to the Government, in which they went over the whole ground again and claimed to have proprietary rights. This was sent to headquarters, when a report from the Under-Secretary, inter alia, said as follows:—

"4. The question as to the proprietary rights of these Naiks in their villages was fully inquired into and decided in the year 1880, and we are of opinion that no valid reason has now been shown for re-opening it after so long an interval of time. We are also of opinion that as the status of the memorialists is that of mere lease-holders, holding their leases at the pleasure of Government, their claims to the sole proprietary title in the forests within the limits of their villages cannot be admitted."

And the final determination of the Government was conveyed in a resolution of 13th December, 1902:—

"The evidence collected by Mr. Beyts clearly showed that these Naiks never acquired the position of talukdars, but that they were merely lease-holders, and in paragraph 1 of Government Resolution No. 2,783, dated 31st May, 1880 (copy appended), the following orders were passed by this Government."

In 1904 there was a final report from the Government Officials as to the leases, which, as already noticed, had not actually been granted. By this time there had been complaints of what the Naiks had been doing, and some of the officials were anxious that no new leases should be granted to the Naiks, but that the whole villages should be made kasla. The Government, however, determined that the Naiks should have another chance, and the leases were offered, upon which they took the present proceedings.

It is abundantly clear from what has been above set forth that, although the Government Officials took great pains to determine what was the position of the Naiks, they came to the conclusion that their rights were not those of hereditary proprietors. To say that, is, in view of the law as laid down above, to say enough, but their Lordships will notice what has been urged on the other side. It is pointed out that the Naiks have been in the saddle for a long time. This is true, and it is to this fact that they held their position as lease-holders at all. But for long possession the villages would have been made kasla as others had been.

Then it is said that, by the terms of certain proclamations, the Government acknowledged the right. The proclamations in 1852, when there was merely a transference for administration purposes, are neither here nor there. When we come to the cession the proclamation referred to is in these terms:—

"I wish to let you know in time that the laws of the British Empire will be in force from the 1st of May next in the Panch Mahals."

"2. It has hitherto been the practice to reserve civil suits against the lands or houses for arbitration."

NAYAR VAJESINGJI JORAVARSINGJI v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

"3. That can no longer be the case, a suit once filed cannot be withdrawn unless by the consent of the complainant and the law will be enforced.

"4. As a friend of all your ancient houses I wish to warn you before-hand against debt. If you wish to preserve your present position, you should avoid it as the most unfortunate thing which can happen to you."

Then follows a list of names, among which are persons who have had acknowledged to them a real proprietary right, and in this list occurs the names of Katwada, Chandwana and Tanda. There is also, specially in the Naiks' petition, reference made to proclamations made at the time of the Durbar. There are two answers to be made to an argument founded on such documents. The first is that a mere general statement that existing rights would be upheld could never prevail against exact determinations such as have been above set forth. The second is that any statement in general terms that rights will be respected must necessarily mean as these rights are on investigation determined by the Government Officials. To suppose that by such general statements in a proclamation the Government renounced their right to acknowledge what they thought right and conferred on a Municipal Court the right to adjudicate as upon rights which existed before cession, is, in their Lordships' opinion, to misapprehend the law as above set forth. It was also urged that the Government had recognised certain free grants which had been made in the past by the Naiks. This is true. But the Government had directed a special head of inquiry to be made as to free grants. The wish not to disturb persons whose tenure had been, de facto, free was a generous policy. But to infer from this generosity that the Government was admitting that the grants had originally been properly made and that from that admission flowed the further admission that the Naiks were true proprietors is to make a mere inference override a direct statement. One other matter may be noticed. The Naiks' susceptibilities seem to have been aroused by the term "ijaradars" being used as to them, and requested that the term "talukdars" should be used. The Government reply is as follows:—

"In reply to his petition, dated 26th September, 1898, to the address of Government, Naik Ratansing Pratapsing of Tanda in the Dohad Taluka of the Panch-Mahals District, is informed that Government have no objection to his being addressed as 'talukdar' instead of a 'patadar' in official communications, but it should be distinctly understood that this concession will not in any way affect the orders passed by Government in May, 1880, regarding the tenure of the petitioner's holding."

Now, the resolution of 1880 referred to was the foundation of the proposals as to the 10 per cent. margin, which, denying the proprietary rights of the Naiks, was objected to by the petition which was refused in 1883.

For these reasons their Lordships are satisfied that this appeal must be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Their Lordships feel bound to call attention to the state of the record. In the teeth of directions issued from the office no trouble whatsoever had been taken with the arrangement of the record, and it came before their Lordships in quite a disgraceful state of confusion. Had the appellants been successful their Lordships would not have hesitated to disallow in toto the Solicitors' fee for perusing the record.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 7—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 6—Decree obtained by Hindu father and minor sons—Discharge by father—Execution application—Limitation

Where a Hindu father and his minor sons (suing through their father as their next friend and guardian) obtain a decree, section 7 of the Limitation Act applies to an application for execution of the decree, inasmuch as, the father cannot give a discharge without the leave of the Court under O. XXXII, r. 6 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 786, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order, dated the 24th January 1921 of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madurai, in Execution Application No. 48 of 1920, in Original Suit No. 224 of 1911.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer and V. Rajagopala Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Swaminatha Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Coutts-Trotter, C. J.—This case furnishes a signal instance of the mischievous tendency of the Courts in this country to evade, or endeavour to evade, plain statutory mandates, and in no sphere of the law, so far as I have observed, has that tendency been more freely exercised than in that branch of the law we are concerned with in the present case, namely, the Law of Limitation. The way in which this matter stands is as follows.—In October 1913, a decree was obtained in a suit in which the plaintiffs were a father and his three sons, and the three sons were described on the face of the proceedings as suing through their next friend and guardian the first plaintiff (that is, the father). Two months after that decree the father died and it was not until December of the following year 1914 that the eldest of the three sons attained his majority. On the 3rd December 1917, well within three years of the attainment of majority, an execution application was taken out. It is said that that application was barred because time must be taken to have run not from the attainment of majority of the eldest son but from the date of the decree itself, i. e., October 1913. The reason for it is said to be this and it depends upon the construction of two sections of two Statutes, one the learned Judge has referred to, and the other he has not. Before I approach the consideration of the case-law I will look at the sections of the Statutes themselves. The relevant sections of the Limitation Act is section 7. It says this:—"Where one of several persons jointly entitled to institute a suit or make an application for the execution of a decree is under any such disability (that means for our present purpose the minority) and a discharge can be given without the concurrence of such person, time will run against them all; but, where no such discharge can be given, time will not run as against any of them until one of them becomes capable of giving such discharge without the concurrence of the others or until the disability has ceased".

Therefore, a good discharge, which could be given without the concurrence of the others, is necessary before, limitation can be invoked. Now, it is said that the father in this case became entitled to give a good discharge as soon as the decree was passed, and to give a good discharge not only on behalf of himself but on behalf of his minor sons. This Court held in a number of cases culminating in the case of Ganesha Row v. Tuljaram Row (1) that a Hindu father could, as managing member of a family, give a good discharge of a decree debt notwithstanding the fact that he might appear in the suit in the capacity of guardian ad litem or next friend. They based that decision upon the express provisions of Hindu Law, and they said that his position as a father was independent of his position as guardian ad litem or next friend and that no disability which could attach to him can be supposed to attach to him by reasons to which I am coming presently and could in any way affect his position under the general Hindu Law as father. That is the decision of this Court in several cases culminating in Ganesha Row v. Tuljaram Row (1). What their Lordships were dealing there with was an argument based upon a section of the Civil Procedure Code. That section is the present r. 6, in O. XXXII, and it reads as follows—"A next friend or guardian for the suit shall not without the leave of the Court receive any money or other moveable property on behalf of a minor either—(a) by way of compromise before the decree or order, or (b) under a decree or order in favour of the minor". As I said, the basis of the decision in Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (2) was that the father occupied two entirely separate positions that he was clothed with a double personality, and that inhibition of his action in a certain manner in one of those capacities was no inhibition of his doing it under the other, the general powers of a Hindu father. Thereupon Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (2) went to the Privy Council with this pronouncement of the Madras High Court to deal with and to say whether it was right or whether it was erroneous, and the words of the Privy Council are absolutely explicit in their application of the principle laid down by the Madras High Court and which, so far as I can see, is the necessary substratum of the whole of the argument that has been addressed to us. What their Lordships say is this. "They (their Lordships of the Privy Council) consider it to be clear that when he (that is the father) himself is the next friend or guardian of the minor his powers are controlled by the provisions of the law and he cannot do any act in his capacity of father or managing member which he is debarred from doing as a next friend or guardian without leave of the Court. To hold otherwise would be to defeat the object of the enactment." In other words, their Lordships say in the plainest language, the inhibition imposed upon him in one character must be extended to the other suggested character or else the Act becomes a waste paper. It is said that there are decisions of this Court subsequent to that pronouncement of the Judicial Committee which nevertheless go on saying that a father can give a good discharge without the consent of the Court where the decree has been obtained. I am not at all sure that those cases—most of them are very inadequately reported—do purport to go counter to the principle laid down in Ganesha Row v. Tulja Ram Row (2); because it is not quite plain, so far as I can see, that, in these cases, the father was the guardian ad litem of the minors. All I can say is that, if he was the guardian, the Privy Council decision compels me to say that those cases were wrongly decided, if he was not, they merely say that, where the father is not the guardian ad litem he can take the money and give a good discharge, and though I do not disagree with that, I would like to reconsider that position hereafter. I am not saying that if this was what those cases had decided, those cases are incorrect; but I am quite clear about this; that, if in those cases, the father was the guardian ad litem, they are clearly wrongly decided, and decided in the teeth of the express mandate of the Privy Council case. No one, I think, could plausibly contend that a man in such a double position could give a good discharge. He can only give a discharge after obtaining the permission of the Court. It, therefore, follows that at the time when the father died, he had never been in a position to give a good and legal discharge for this debt and that, therefore, the time must be calculated as beginning to run from the date when the respective disabilities cease. Seeing that one of the decree-holders is still a minor there is really no question of limitation arising in the case. The case will go back for further proceedings in execution.

The appellants will have their costs throughout.

by the learned Vakil for the respondents. The first of these is the decision in Duraisami Sastri v Venkatarama Iyer (3). It expressly purports to be based on the decision in Ganesha Row v. Tuljaram Row (1) which was a decision of this Court, on O. XXXII, r. 7. It was reversed afterwards by the Privy Council in Ganesha Row v. Tuljaram Row (2). This was followed by a Single Judge in Ramanadhan Sivayya v. Udatha Atchayya (4). The next case is Palaniandi Pillai v. Papathi Ammal (5). It is true that this was after the decision of the Privy Council but no reference was made in the argument to O. XXXII, r. 6 or to the fact that the decision in Ganesha Row v. Tuljaram Row (1), on which the decision in Duraisami Sastri v. Venkatarama Iyer (3), was based, had been reversed by the Privy Council. This was again followed in Chivikula Venkatasubbiah v. Gollapudi Venkateswarulu (6) and the same remarks apply to this case also. In Rati Ram v. Nadar (7) the decree was obtained by a single decree-holder. There was no minor among the original plaintiffs. The original decree-holder died leaving two sons, one a major and the other a minor. The major son on behalf of himself and, acting as the next friend for his younger brother applied, that they should be made legal representatives in the place of their deceased father. Before the order was made on the application, the applicant died, and on the day the application came on for hearing nobody appeared and the petition was dismissed. The result was they were not made parties, so that it is not a case where we have two decree-holders one of whom is major and the other a minor represented by the major as next friend. Order XXXII, r. 6 cannot apply to the facts of that case. That case is, therefore, correctly decided and cannot, therefore, help us in this case.

Mortgagor, whether can sue for redemption

Government waste land adjacent to a mortgaged holding which is brought under cultivation by the mortgagee and is capable of separate enjoyment and use, is not an accretion to the mortgage land under section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act and, therefore, the mortgagor cannot sue for its redemption.

Appeal against the decree of the Divisional Court, Myaungmya, in Civil Appeal No. 76 of 1920.

Mr. Ba Thein, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued for redemption of a piece of paddy land measuring 20 61 acres. The Sub-Divisional Court gave a decree for redemption of the 9 03 acres originally mortgaged but refused a decree for the remainder, which was adjacent land brought under cultivation by the mortgagees.

On appeal the Divisional Court gave a decree for the balance as an accession coming under the terms of section 63 of the Transfer of Property Act. My own opinion is that section 63 did not contemplate Government waste land adjoining a mortgage holding as coming within the category of accession.

It is admitted that the so-called accession can be enjoyed and utilised separately. In Tha Dun v. The Zan (1), Twomey, J., held that an extension into waste adjoining land was not an accession.

Mr. T. Suryanarayana, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Ramadoss, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is from the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Kistna at Ellore in Appeal Suit No. 210 of 1921 preferred against the decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif of Tanuku, in Original Suit No. 79 of 1919.

One Venkanna died leaving three daughters. They came to an oral agreement by which Latchamma and Atchamma each took three acres of his property and Chellamma 5 acres and odd. Chellamma has died and her share is in the possession of her step-son, first defendant, Latchamma, claiming a right as survivor of Chellamma sues for Chellamma's share (she has sold 1.80 acres which are subject of a connected suit Original Suit No. 78 of 1919). The Subordinate Judge had dismissed the suit and Latchamma appeals.

The question for determination is whether when the three sisters made their agreement they cut off the right of survivorship among themselves. The only evidence of the agreement is the statement of Latchamma as plaintiff's first witness: "We effected a division arranging that this property should be enjoyed according to the desire of each. Since then each of us was enjoying our respective shares of property with full right, that is to say, with the right of alienation by sale, etc." The Munsif who recorded this statement did not address his mind to its significance. He confines himself to the question whether before this agreement Chellamma was bequeathed absolute rights by her father Venkanna.

Contrariwise the learned Subordinate Judge does not decide the question of the Will, but confines himself to the agreement. He finds that the sisters intended to destroy their rights of survivorship, and having regard to the language used by Latchamma, I am not prepared to hold that he is wrong "Full right with the right of alienation by sale, etc.", must, I think, mean that the right of survivorship was destroyed; and Latchamma when she conveyed her share to first defendant's father, seems to have held the same view. The defendant put the point quite clearly in his defence statement, paragraph 5, "it was arranged that each party should enjoy without any right of survivorship." Each case must be interpreted according to the language employed whether written or oral, and not much is to be gained by examining analogous rulings. It is laid down in Gomathi Ammal v. Kuppathayi Ammal (1), that there must be apt language. In that case as the sisters imagined that they had all along an absolute estate it was held that they could not have intended to destroy the right of survivorship. In this case (assuming that Chellamma had no absolute right under Venkanna's Will) the sisters did not imagine that they were dividing an absolute estate. In Alamelu Ammal v. Balu Ammal (2) the sisters made an oral partition purporting to take their respective shares absolutely and it was held that they had relinquished their right of survivorship.

(1) 14 M. L. J. 175.

MC AYOOB V. SOWDAGER.

In Rukmani Ammal v. Narasimha Chariar (3) the phrase is "the only relationship between us is one of friendship not of property". Such a phrase was not used in the present case but it is not an essential formula. I find that the right to survivorship was destroyed by the agreement. No other point was raised on appeal or appears to be valid. The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—Defendant pleaded failure of consideration and misrepresentation.

The allegation was that the pro-note in suit was in part payment of price of room sold and that it transpired that plaintiff had no title and had misled the vendor. The Trial Court held that there was no defence because plaintiff had been able to give defendant possession and they were not entitled to resist payment until plaintiff gave them a conveyance. Section 43 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, provides that a negotiable instrument made for a consideration, which fails, creates no obligation between the parties to the transaction. Fraud vitiates all agreements and there is no reason why this principle should not be extended to promissory notes, which have been given on the faith of fraudulent misrepresentation. The case of Baboo Lal v. Joy Lal (1) is an authority, if any authority is required for a proposition which seems self evident. I set aside the decree of the lower Court and remand the case for trial on its merits, costs to follow final disposal.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Budaun, dated the 21st December, 1920.

Messrs. S. A. Haider and Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. P. Sinha and S. B. Johri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the suit out of which this appeal arises are these. —Har Dayal cultivates one bigha of land on a Rs. 10 rent in Allapur village in Budaun District. In 1920 Ram Din, zemindar of the village, sued Har Dayal for two years' rent and interest in the Court of an Assistant Collector of the Second Class. Ram Din asserted that he was the zamindar of the plot and that the plot was his sir and that Har Dayal was his sub-tenant. Har Dayal denied this. The Assistant Collector, Second Class, found that the land in question was the sir of Ram Din which Har Dayal cultivated as his sub-tenant on a rent of Rs. 10 a year, and decreed the suit accordingly. That decision became final.

The suit out of which this present appeal arises had apparently been filed before the suit for arrears of rent. It was filed on the 29th September 1919. In this, Ram Din and two women called Reoti and Chameli sued Har Dayal in the Court of an Assistant Collector, First Class, for the ejection of Har Dayal from the same plot in respect of which the suit was brought for arrears of rent. Har Dayal set up a plea that he was the zemindar of the plot and that the plot was his khudkasht. It is not true that he was the zemindar. His family had been zemindars in the village, but had lost their proprietary rights long before 1919. On the 30th June 1920 the Assistant Collector, First Class, decided, some two months after the arrears of rent suit had been decided, that the plaintiffs were zemindars, that the land in question was their sir and that Har Dayal was a sub-tenant. Har Dayal again asserting that the land was his khudkasht appealed to the District Judge who allowed his appeal. The District Judge found on the facts that the land in question was not the plaintiffs' sir, that Har Dayal and his predecessors cultivated the land in question for more than 50 consecutive years and that Har Dayal had ex-proprietary rights therein. He, therefore, dismissed the suit.

The present appeal is preferred upon the following grounds:—That no appeal lay to the District Judge; that it was concluded by res judicata, that the land in question was the sir of the appellants, and that Har Dayal was sub-tenant; that the Judge had made out a new case for Har Dayal which he did not set up for himself; and that the Judge could not legally decide the nature of Har Dayal's holding.

In regard to the first point it appears to me that on the authority of the Full Bench decision in Bindeshwari v. Gokul (1), an appeal lay to the District Judge.

In regard to the second point, in the first place, Ram Din alone was plaintiff in the arrears of rent suit, Reoti and Chameli were not parties to that suit. But apart from that point, can it be held that a decision of the Court of an Assistant Collector, Second Class, can operate as res judicata in the Court of an Assistant Collector, First Class, when the Court of the Assistant Collector, Second Class, is not competent to try the subsequent suit in which the plea of res judicata is raised? It appears to me that on the plain wording of section 11 that question must be answered in the negative. An Assistant Collector, Second Class, is not competent to hear suits for ejectment.

It has been pressed on me by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the decision in Shahzade Singh v. Muhammad Mehdi Ali Khan (2) lays down a different view. If it laid down a different view I should of course follow the view laid down, as that decision is the decision of a Bench. But I do not understand that decision to touch the point. What it laid down is this:—That in a Civil Court a question of title decided by a Rent Court would be binding as between the same parties on the principle of res judicata as the decision on the question of title would be considered as the decision of a Civil Court whatever be the jurisdiction of the Rent Court. That is a different proposition. There is nothing in that decision to justify a departure from the actual law that a previous decision only binds in a subsequent suit when the Court which passed the decision was competent to try the subsequent suit. I, therefore, decide that the learned District Judge was not bound, on the principle of res judicata, to hold that the land in question was the sir of the plaintiffs and that the defendants was their sub-tenant. I do not consider that the learned District Judge made out a new case for the defendant. It was his duty to see whether the plaintiffs had made out a case to eject the defendant. He found on facts that they had not made out such a case.

In regard to the last point, it was unnecessary for the learned District Judge to decide for the purposes of the decision of the suit, that the defendant had ex-proprietary rights, and it was not open to the learned District Judge to lay down what rights he did possess as the determination of the class of tenancy is a matter reserved for the Revenue Courts alone.

But in so far as his decision is that the suit for ejectment should be dismissed, it must stand. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

WILLIAM JACKS & CO. V. JOOSAB MAHOMED.

*Knowledge of both parties—Alteration of position—
"Act upon such belief", meaning of.*

Where the true facts are within the knowledge of both parties there is no scope for the application of the doctrine of estoppel [p 792, col. 2].

Honapa v Narsapa, 23 B. 400 at p. 408, 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 270, followed.

The phrase "act upon such belief" in section 115 of the Evidence Act, means that the party to whom the representation was made must have altered his position with reference to the subject-matter of the representation. The mere filing of a suit, which would have been filed even if the representation had not been made, does not amount to such alteration of position [ibid].

Plaintiff demised certain premises to the defendant for manufacturing purposes. On the expiry of the lease he served the latter with one month's notice to quit. Defendant replied by a letter which contained an admission that he was a monthly tenant. In answer to a suit for ejectment filed by the plaintiff, defendant set up a plea that he was entitled to six months' notice under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Held, that the statement contained in the defendant's letter that he was a monthly tenant did not operate as an estoppel, inasmuch as

(a) the facts affecting the tenancy were within the knowledge of both parties; and

(b) plaintiff did not alter his position with reference to the subject-matter of the statement. [ibid]

Mr. Colman with him Mr. Kemp, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, (with him Mr. F. S. Taleyarkhan), for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this suit granted to the defendant a lease of a part of a bungalow and compound in the Nesbit Road, Mazgaon, for the period of one year from 1st April 1918. The lease terminated by efflux of time on the 31st March 1919.

But the defendant held over. There had been a dispute as to alleged encroachments by the defendant and the plaintiffs now aver that they require the premises included in the original lease as well as those encroached upon for their own use and occupation, and gave notice on the 30th December 1922 terminating the tenancy as from 1st February 1923.

It is admitted that the defendant required the premises to the knowledge of the plaintiffs for manufacturing purposes and that he has so used them. The defendant accordingly pleads that he is entitled to six months' notice under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that the notice given on the supposition that the tenancy was monthly is ineffectual to terminate the lease. As against this the plaintiffs contend that the defendant is estopped from setting up a yearly tenancy by his letter in reply to the notice to quit. That letter is Exhibit G, dated 16th January 1923, of which the concluding paragraph is as follows.—

"Your clients' lease with their superior landlord has expired long since and their position is also that of a monthly tenant."

I have no doubt the word "also" means that you are, like me, a monthly tenant. This is an admission by the defendant that he is a monthly tenant but he would be entitled to show that this admission is wrong unless it operates as an estoppel. But I feel clear that there is no estoppel and for the following reasons:—

In the first place the facts affecting the tenancy were within the knowledge of both the parties, and when that is so, there is no scope for the doctrine of estoppel. Honapa v. Narsapa (1).

Again, the plaintiffs, before receipt of the letter, believed the defendant to be a monthly tenant, so that, the belief was not induced by the letter of 16th January 1923. But, I think, it must be conceded that the language of section 115 of the Indian Evidence Act extends to the encouragement of an erroneous belief as in Ramsden v. Dyson (2). But, even so, can it be said that the plaintiffs have acted on such belief in consequence of the letter? I think not. The phrase "act upon such belief" means that the plaintiffs must have altered their position with reference to the subject-matter of the representation. What have the plaintiffs done but the filing of suit? Merely filing the suit does not alter their position. It is only a process of enforcement of the position taken up before the misrepresentation.

Again, even if the filing does fulfil the words of the section—"acts upon such belief."—is it certain that the plaintiffs would not have filed the suit if the letter had not been written? As to this the remarks of Jenkins, C. J., in Narsingdass v. Rahiminbat (3) are very pertinent (page 446):—

"The law of estoppel is defined by section 115 of the Evidence Act, and all the Judge is able to say is that it may well be doubted whether the plaintiff would have acted in the way he did but for the way in which the defendants had acted. That is not sufficient. It must be found as a fact that the plaintiff would not have acted as he did."

So here, I have no doubt that the plaintiffs would have filed this suit even if the defendant had made no reply to the notice to quit.

I accordingly find on the issue, namely, whether the defendant is estopped by his letter of 16th January 1923 from asserting that he is an yearly tenant?—in the negative.

The ordinary rule regarding private auction is that where an auction is held without any reservation, there is an implied condition that the highest bid will be accepted. But that rule does not apply to a sale by a Court Officer under the directions of the Court. [ibid]

In such a case it is acceptance by the Court that constitutes the contract, and the person who asserts that the Court Officer had power to bind the Court by his acceptance of a bid must prove it. The mere absence of a statement in the published conditions of sale that it is subject to the confirmation of Court cannot be treated as implying that the Court had abandoned its power of confirming the sale before it could take effect. Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in I. A. No. 160 of 1923, in O. S. No. 11 of 1922 and petition under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act praying the High Court to revise the said order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in E. A. No. 160 of 1923, in O. S. No. 11 of 1922.

Mr. K. Narasimha Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Bashyam Iyengar, T. V. Muthu Krishna Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram refusing to accept the bid of Rathnasami Pillai, the appellant for taking on lease certain property, the subject-matter of a suit before the Court, and directing a re-sale. What happened was, the Receiver, who had been appointed in the suit, was directed by the Court to sell by public auction the lease of certain lands in suit for a year. The condition of sale were printed and the printed leaflets were circulated. The Receiver held an auction in which the appellant before us, Rathnasami Pillai, was the highest bidder. When the matter was taken to the Sub-Judge for confirmation, he refused to accept Rathnasami Pillai's bid and directed a re-sale. It is against that order that this appeal is filed.

The appellant contends that a completed contract had been entered into with him by the Receiver and that the Court should, therefore, have directed a lease to be executed in his favour in the terms of his bid. At the re-sale ordered the second respondent took the lease at a higher rate. A preliminary objection has been raised to this appeal that no appeal lies. The appeal has been filed under O. XLIII, r. 1, clause (s) as against an order under O. XL, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code. We need not, however, decide this question as we think that on the merits the appellant has no case. The Receiver is an Officer of Court and whatever powers he exercises are delegated powers of the Court which the Court expressly gives him. He has no powers except what the Court grants him. Unless the appellant can show us that in this case the Court has delegated its power of entering into a completed contract with third parties to the Receiver, any action taken by the Receiver cannot be binding upon the Court or upon the properties. All that the appellant is able to show us is that he made the highest bid and that the published conditions of sale did not expressly state that the sale was subject to the confirmation of the Court. The absence of such a statement cannot, in our opinion, be treated as implying that the Court had abandoned its power of confirming the sale before it would take effect. No doubt the ordinary rule regarding private auction is that where an auction is held without any reservation, there is an implied condition that the highest bid will be accepted; but no authority has been cited to show that that rule applies to a sale by a Court Officer under the directions of Court. In Court sales, it is acceptance by the Court that constitutes the contract. See Surendro Keshub Roy v. Doorgasoondery Dossec (1). The person who asserts that the Court Officer had power to bind the Court by his acceptance of a bid must prove it. The appellant has not been able to refer us to any evidence to show that such a power had been granted by the Court in this case. We must, therefore, hold that the Court had ample authority as no contract had been concluded with him and the Court's order directing a re-sale, was within its powers. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs (costs one set).

If the holder of a mortgage-decree remains by arrangement in possession of the mortgaged property and subsequently a Receiver is appointed, who is directed specifically to take charge of all properties of the judgment-debtor, he is entitled to remove the decree-holder and obtain khas possession of the property, especially if its income exceeds the amount with which the decree-holder was debited under his arrangement [p. 795, col. 2].

Appeal from the judgment and decree of the Patna High Court (Das, J. and Adami, J.) dated the 18th November 1920, printed as 61 Ind. Cas. 67, reversing the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 16th June 1919.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Shaw.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, dated the 19th November, 1920. It reversed a judgment and order of the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, dated 16th June 1919. Their Lordships refer to the judgment of the Board [Ramesh- war Singh v. Hitindra Singh (1)] just announced in the case between the same parties, namely, the Maharaja as judgment creditor, and the Receiver of the property and the judgment-debtors.

RAMESHWAR SINGH v. HITENDRA SINGH.

A Receiver was appointed in 1910 as a Receiver upon the entire estate of the judgment-debtors. It is not disputed that this estate included, and still includes, the mortgaged property of Jai Nagar which is in question in this case. Jai Nagar was expressly and by name included in the scheduled properties falling within the order for Receivership. Under transactions, upon which it is not necessary to enter, the appellant possessed the property, under an arrangement that he should be debited with the sum of Rs. 1,600 per annum in respect thereof. The arrangement appears for a period of years to have been not to the disadvantage of the estate. Of late years, however, the rental of the property has exceeded the Rs. 1,600 and, in or about the year 1918-1919, amounted to over Rs. 2,700 per annum.

In these circumstances the Receiver brought his suit before the Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, claiming:—

"1. That the decree-holder may be directed to render an account of all his collections of the said mauza from the date of the decree to the present date.

"2. That the decree-holder may be directed to give up and make over possession of the said mauza to the Receiver with such amount as the decree-holder may be liable to pay to the judgment-debtors with interest at 12 per cent. per annum."

The question of accounts will be afterwards dealt with. The immediate question is whether the appellant "do make over to the Receiver khas possession of the judgment-debtor's share of Mauza Jai Nagore." The case has been carefully considered by the High Court and their Lordships see no reason to differ from these paragraphs of the judgment:—

"The decree which he (i.e., appellant decree-holder) got was the usual mortgage-decree contemplated by O. XXXIV, r. 4, and whatever rights he may have had under the transaction he must be deemed to have given up these rights, once he asked for and obtained a decree for sale in respect of the property in question. That being so, have the judgment-debtors a present right to remove the decree-holder from the possession of the property in question? In my view, they have, because there is a prior order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction appointing a Receiver and asking the Receiver to take charge of all the properties comprised in the mortgage. That order was final between the parties, and it was not open to the learned Subordinate Judge to ignore or disregard that order.

"No doubt there was an arrangement by which the decree-holder remained in possession of the properties and applied the income towards part satisfaction of the debt due to him. Subsequently, a Receiver was appointed who is a person to guard the interest of all the parties concerned, and that Receiver was specifically directed to take charge of all the properties. In my view, there cannot be any doubt whatever that the Receiver ought to be directed to take charge of the property in question, specially as it is suggested by Mr. K. B. Dutt, on behalf of the judgment-debtors, that the property has an income of Rs. 2,711-15-0."

The result will be that the Receiver will in future administer and manage this mauza as part of the estate under his charge. And it may be that, looking inter alia to the prolonged difficulty with the appellant the respondent may in the circumstances exercise his power of sale of this mauza—such a power resting with him in accordance with the judgment just pronounced in the other appeal.

With regard to the accounting, in respect of the returns from the mauza, the learned Counsel for the Receiver stated to the Board on behalf of the Receiver that he was willing that the years prior to the institution of the suit during which the appellant was in possession under an arrangement for an annual debit of Rs. 1,600—those years should not be gone back upon. It was further explained that a statement made by the appellant in his petition of objection of 14th December 1918, was correct:—"4 Although previously orders for the deduction of Rs. 1,600 from the decretal money were passed by this Court in Suit No. 62 of 1911, and No 67 of 1914, it was due to an oversight as the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur was lost sight of. The petitioners cannot take advantage of that mistake and this petitioner, the opposite party (that is to say the present appellant), has no objection to the deduction of Rs. 1,471-3-5. It is, therefore, prayed that the petition filed by the petitioners for an annual deduction of Rs. 1,600 be disallowed and that Rs. 1,471-3-5 only be ordered to be set off annually (against the decretal money)." In their Lordships' view it is proper that this correction should be given effect to.

In the matter of accounting it may be sufficient to satisfy the justice of the case that accounts be ordered upon the footing, first that the Receiver do obtain khas possession of this mauza from the appellant, and in the accounts he be credited by the appellant with Rs. 1,471-3-5 per annum as due for the appellant's possession up to 19th November 1920; being the date of the decree of the High Court. Thereafter the accounts will embrace the entire receipts.

With this variation their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that that decree be affirmed with costs

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 23—Acquisition of land—Compensation, assessment of, mode of—Market value, ascertainment of—Speculative sales, value of

In assessing the amount of compensation to be paid for a piece of land which is being compulsorily acquired, the market value of the land should not be ascertained piecemeal [p 797, cols. 1 & 2]

The correct method is to determine the market value of the land as a whole having regard to the sales in the locality. [p 797, cols. 1 & 2]

The mere fact that a parcel of land is bought by a speculator in land with the object of re-selling it at a profit is no ground for disregarding the sale in compensation cases under the Land Acquisition Act for the purpose of determining the market value of land. The real question is whether the price paid was such as a prudent man would have paid at the time the transaction took place [p 799, cols. 1 & 2]

The expression "market value" means the price which a parcel of land would realise if sold in the market. The test is the test of a sale in the market. The seller must be a willing seller, a forced sale affords no criterion of market value. The purchaser must be a prudent purchaser, that is, one who makes his offer after making necessary inquiries as to the value of the land, an offer made by one who knows nothing of the value of the land in the locality and who makes no inquiries about it, affords no test of market value. The market may be dull or brisk, but whether it is dull or brisk it cannot be excluded from consideration [p 800, col. 1]

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference from the award of the Land Acquisition Officer under the Land Acquisition Act. The property was notified for acquisition for a park scheme on February 9, 1920, and the market value of the property is to be determined as of that date. a whole having regard to the sales in the locality

The property is situated on Cadell Road, Mahim. The area is 5957 square yards. It has a frontage of 380 feet and an average depth of 138 feet. On the north of the property there is a passage about twelve feet wide. Beyond the passage there is a large tank which is Survey No. 1770. On the east there is another huge tank covered by Survey No. 1752. On the south there is a passage also about twelve feet wide. As regards frontage it is to be observed that a portion of it admeasuring about 150 feet abuts on Cadell Road, while the rest being about 230 feet abuts on a remnant of old Parbhadevi Road. Beyond that road there is a triangular piece of land shown in the plan, Exhibit 4, which belongs to the Municipality. This triangle consists of portions of Survey Nos. 1634 and 1635 which were acquired by the Municipality for Cadell Road under a previous Notification. The distance between the southern frontage of the land in reference and Cadell Road is about 75 feet wide.

At the date of the Notification there were three structures on the land in reference. These were valued by the Land Acquisition Officer as materials, and the whole property was valued by him as vacant land. The Land Acquisition Officer awarded compensation for the northern frontage of 150 feet at the rate of Rs. 25 per square yard, and for the southern frontage of 230 feet at the rate of Rs. 18 per square yard. This gives all over a rate of Rs. 21.25 for the whole land. The claimant says that the compensation awarded is inadequate, and he claims Rs. 35 per square yard. On the other hand, the Government expert has sworn that the market value of the land in reference is not more than Rs. 16 per square yard.

As regards the method of valuation adopted by the Land Acquisition Officer, I may say at once that it does not always lead to correct results. I do not propose to follow that method but to determine the market value of the land as Before dealing with the sales I may say that the claimant relied in support of his claim on an offer of Rs. 2,50,000 made to him for his land by one Mr. Baria, a wine merchant, by his letter of January 8, 1920 (Exhibit K), which gives a rate of about Rs. 40 per square yard. It appeared, however, from Mr. Baria's evidence that he made the offer under a misapprehension that the frontage was about 600 feet and that the distance between the southern frontage of the land in reference and Cadell Road was about ten feet. The offer having been made under a mistake of facts, it cannot avail the claimant, and no reference was made to it by Counsel for the claimant in his final address.

Coming now to the sales, the claimant relies on the sale of a plot of land exactly opposite this land at the rate of Rs. 33 per square yard. This plot consists partly of Survey No. 1634 and partly of Survey No. 1635. The history of this plot as disclosed in the evidence is as follows:—

In or about August 1919 three persons named Valimahomad, Jagjiwan and Ohhtotalal entered into a partnership for the purpose of buying Survey No. 1635 for Rs. 41,000, Ohhtotalal resides and carries on business at Pardi. The whole of the purchase-money was to be paid by Ohhtotalal. The share of Valimahomad was eight annas in the rupee, Jagjiwan's share was two annas, and that of Ohhtotalal was six annas. Valimahomad was the first who formed the idea of buying this land. He approached Jagjiwan and the latter introduced him to Ohhtotalal. The agreement for sale was made on August 22, 1919, and the sale was eventually completed the whole of the purchase-money having been paid by Ohhtotalal. It would be seen from the plan, Exhibit No. 4, that what was bought by these three persons was a two legged plot, the legs resting on old Parbhadevi Road. The area was 5669 square yards and the rate worked out to Rs. 7.23 per square yard.

Valimahomad, said in his evidence that he knew when he agreed to buy the land that part of it was required by the Municipality for Cadell Road. In fact the Notification in respect of this part of Cadell Road was published on June 26th 1919, and the original owner of Survey No. 1635 had opened negotiations with the Municipality. These negotiations were continued by Valimahomed after he and his partners purchased the land, and an agreement was eventually made between Valimahomed and the Municipality whereby he transferred to the Municipality a portion of Survey No. 1635, got a transfer from the Municipality of a portion of Survey No. 1634 and another strip of land to the north of this land, and paid Rs. 10,110 to the Municipality which included his contribution towards the cost of making Cadell Road and a proposed forty feet road on the north of the land. The latter road is shown on the plan annexed to the conveyance (Exhibit No. 6) dated 11th March 1921, between the Municipal Corporation and Valimahomed.

The arrangement between Valimahomed and the Municipality was completed in November 1919. By this time the scheme for a park towards the east of Cadell Road was out and notices were issued in August 1919 by the Municipality under section 90 of the Bombay Municipal Act to the claimant and others whose land was acquired for the park (Exhibits Nos. 1, 2 and 3).

As a result of the arrangement with the Municipality, Valimahomed and his partners got a newly constituted plot having a frontage of 275 feet on Cadell Road—which is a 60 feet road—and another frontage about 150 feet on the proposed road to the north with a prospect of a park towards the east on the other side of Cadell Road. The area of the new plot was 3839 square yards. It cost Valimahomed and his partners Rs. 41,000 plus Rs. 10,110 equal to Rs. 51,110, which gives a rate of Rs. 13 25 per square yard.

On February 10, 1920, Valimahomed and his partners agreed to sell the newly constituted plot to Jamnadas Vithaldas and Chhaganlal Kakalbhai at the rate of Rs. 36 per square yard, that is, for Rs. 1,38,204. The agreement for sale is not forthcoming, but it appears from an entry in a book produced by Jagjiwan, which he says was copied from a book kept by Chhotalal, that Rs. 5,000 was paid as earnest on February 10th, 1920. Chhotalal had gone on a pilgrimage, and he was not called.

Jamnadas admitted in his evidence that he purchased the land in the hope of re-selling it at a profit. The profit, however, never came. The land remained in the hands of Jamnadas, and his partner Chhaganlal Kakalbhai dropped out. He then took another partner named Chhaganlal Valji. This new partnership made part-payments towards the purchase-money. They paid Rs. 6,000 in July 1920, Rs. 5,000 in August 1920, and Rs. 5,000 in September 1920, making in all including the earnest Rs. 21,000. It seems that the partnership then came to the end of its resources. No further payments were made until August 1, 1921 when a payment of Rs. 5,000 was made. On that day, Valimahomed executed a conveyance of the land to Jamnadas and his partner. The purchase-money was calculated at Rs. 33 per square yard, instead of the agreed rate Rs. 36. The prices having gone down, Valimahomed gave a concession of Rs. 3 per square yard to the partnership. Calculating at Rs. 33 per square yard, the purchase-money came to Rs. 1,26,687. The balance after deducting Rs. 26,000 was rupees one lac. Jamnadas and his partner were unable to pay that sum, and they executed a mortgage on the same day of the land bought by them from Valimahomed and of another property situated at Pitha Street to Valimahomed to secure rupees one lac with interest at the rate of nine per cent. per annum. The due date of the mortgage expired in February 1923, and interest has been in arrears for the last six months. The Pitha Street property fetches a nett rent of Rs. 250 per month. Jamnadas said that it was worth Rs. 57,000. But whether it was worth Rs. 57,000 or less, the fact, remains that the land which Jamnadas bought at Rs. 33 per square yard was not regarded by Valimahomed as a sufficient security at the date of the conveyance, and Jamnadas and his partner had to mortgage another property belonging to them. There is no doubt that the purchase was made by Jamnadas without proper enquiries. He had not the faintest idea when he bought the land of the great advantages attaching to it, namely, the proposed 40 feet road on the north, and the park on the west. He said that he consulted two or three brokers, but he could not give the name of any one of them. I am inclined to think that he did not consult any broker or any other person. On behalf of Government it was contended that the sale by Valimahomed to Jamnadas was a sham, or, in any event, it was a transaction of such a speculative character that it could not be taken as a basis for determining the market value of the land in reference. I do not think that the transaction was a sham. On the other hand, I am inclined to think that Jamnadas and his partner were the victims partly of ignorance and partly of the tremendous wave of speculation in land which was then passing over Bombay.

This brings me to the next contention on behalf of Government, namely, that the transaction was of a speculative nature and it should, therefore, be ignored. I am inclined to think that the mere fact that a parcel of land is bought by a speculator in land with the object of re-selling it at a profit is no ground for disregarding the sale in compensation cases under the Land Acquisition Act. In the present case, Valimahomed and his partners bought the land with the avowed object of re-selling it at a profit. They succeeded in selling it to Jamnadas and his partner who again bought the land with the sole object of re-selling it at a profit. If a person who buys land not as an investment, but to re-sell it at a profit, is a speculator, both the vendors and purchasers of Jamnadas' land were speculators. But this certainly is no ground for ignoring the transaction altogether. The real question is whether the rate of Rs. 33 represented the fair price of the land in February 1920. It is urged on behalf of Government that it is not, and the reason given is that there was tremendous speculation in land in Bombay in 1919 and in 1920, which resulted in an enormous rise in the price of land, and that the rise being due to speculation, it should be disregarded in its entirety. It was also argued that the expression "market value" in section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act meant intrinsic value.

Now it is a notorious fact, and the fact was deposed to by Mr. Kanga, Surveyor for Government, that a huge wave of speculation in land passed over Bombay in 1919 and in 1920, that it started in the beginning of 1919 that the high water mark was reached in February 1920, that it maintained itself at that level until about August 1920, and that it then began to subside. It was not disputed on behalf of the claimant that the sale to Jamnadas was a sale at the top of the market, but it was urged that the claimant was entitled to the benefit of the rise on the ground that he could have obtained that benefit had he then sold his property in the market. It was also urged that the term "market value" in section 23 did not mean intrinsic value. Such being the contentions on both sides, it becomes necessary to determine whether, in ascertaining the market value of land under the Land Acquisition Act, the element of rise in the price of land occasioned by speculation is to be taken into consideration. It seems to me, on principle, that if an owner of land could sell his land in the market at a given time for Rs. 10 per square yard, it would be inequitable and unjust that because the land is compulsorily acquired under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, he should get less than Rs. 10 per square yard. But if the Statute under which the acquisition is made lays down in clear and unambiguous language that an acquiring body is to pay less than a purchaser in the market, it is the duty of the Court to give effect to it regardless of considerations of what the Court may think to be the equities of the case. Does then the Land Acquisition Act contemplate such a result?

Section 23 of the Land Acquisition Act opens with the following words:—

"In determining the amount of compensation to be awarded for land acquired under this Act, the Court shall take into consideration—first, the market value of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under section 6."

This means that the owner is to be compensated for his land, the measure of compensation being the market value of the land. The expression "market value" means the value which a parcel of land would realise if sold in the market. The test then is the test of a sale in the market. The seller must be a willing seller; a forced sale affords no criterion of market value. The purchaser must be a willing purchaser, and further he must be a prudent purchaser, that is one who makes his offer after making necessary inquiries as to the value of the land; an offer made by one who knows nothing of the value of the land in the locality and who makes no inquiries about it, affords no test of market value. But what I am presently concerned with is the essential feature of market value. It is, as the term imports, the value that could be realised on a sale in the open market. The market may be dull or brisk. It may be as dull as it is to-day. It may be as brisk as it was in 1919 and 1920. But whether it be dull or brisk, it cannot be excluded from consideration; there is nothing in the Land Acquisition Act which requires the Court to do so. On the contrary, the state of the market at the material date is an important factor in determining the market value at that date. You cannot possibly ascertain the market value of a piece of land at a given time if you exclude from consideration the state of the market at that time. It follows then that the high rates prevailing in 1919 and the first half of 1920 cannot be ignored: Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs v.

Charlesworth, Pilling & Co. (1) and Government of Bombay v. Merwanji Munchery (2). The sale, therefore, to Jamnadas cannot be excluded merely because it was a transaction during the boom.

But the question still remains whether the price paid by Jamnadas was such as a prudent person would have paid even during the subsistence of the boom. In determining this question there are two factors to be taken into consideration, namely (1) the circumstances attending the sale, and (2) other sales in the locality during the boom. I have already dealt with the first of these two factors. As regards the second, there are three plots adjoining claimant's land which were sold during the boom. These are the sales relied upon on behalf of Government. Before examining these sales, it is necessary to dispose of one matter which, it was urged on behalf of Government, materially affected the value of the claimant's land. It relates to the triangular strip of land belonging to the Municipality in front of the claimant's land. On behalf of Government it was contended that the existence of that strip was a great drawback to the claimant's land and that it detracted considerably from its value. The Advocate-General suggested in the course of the hearing that it could be used for urinals. The Government expert, however, came forward with a pompous scheme of a lofty building which was to contain grand shops and residential quarters. He admitted, however, that the locality was not yet ripe for a building of that kind and that it was not likely to be so for another five years to come. If so, it is difficult to understand why such a scheme was put forward at all. This triangle, it may be observed, is to be thrown into a park, but even if it were not so, I do not think that the Municipality would have put up the strip of land for sale by public auction, and just for the sake of a few thousand rupees, sold it to an outsider, and maintained in tact the remnant of the old Parbhadevi Road. Rather they would have allowed a set-forward to the claimant and to the owner of the land on the south, though on payment of a fair price. However, that may be, one cannot, in valuing the claimant's land, ignore the fact that the southern frontage of his land is separated from Cadell Road by a remnant of the old Parbhadevi Road and by the Municipal triangle.

I now turn to the sales relied upon on behalf of Government. They are four in number, and the plots are marked I, II, III and IV respectively on the plan, Exhibit No. 4.

Instance No. I is a sale of a plot of land abutting on Cadell Road and admeasuring 800 square yards. It has a frontage of 60 feet on Cadell Road and a depth of 129 feet. The date of the agreement for sale is November 21, 1919. The rate works out to Rs. 14.75 per square yard. This plot along with another to its north belonged to a Hindu. He mortgaged the whole of it, and subsequently sold a portion, being Instance No. I, to the mortgagee. At the date of sale he had a minor son, and the conveyance was signed by him on behalf of himself and his son as his guardian. The purchaser stated in his evidence before the Land Acquisition Officer that the vendor had obtained an order of the Court sanctioning the sale, but no such order is forthcoming, nor is any order recited in the conveyance. The conveyance however, seems to have been prepared by a "bond-writer." Upon these facts it was contended for the claimant, first that the sale having been made by a mortgagor to the mortgagee, it must be treated as a forced sale; and, secondly, that as no order of the Court was obtained, the minor could on attaining majority impeach the sale on the ground that the mortgage debt was contracted for unlawful purposes. I do not think that there is any substance in the first contention. As to the second, there is a possibility, though remote, if no order was obtained of the minor impeaching the sale on attaining majority to the extent of his interest. But the question is not in these cases, whether the title is good or defective.

The real question is whether the vendor sold or the purchaser bought with knowledge of the infirmity of the title, and whether the price was fixed on that footing. There is no evidence of this in the present case. This sale, I think, is a good guide in determining the market value of the land in reference. No doubt the depth is about twice as much as the frontage, but it is 129 feet only, and almost the whole of it may be treated as front land. The plot having been sold at Rs. 14.75 per square yard, the rate awarded by the Land Acquisition Officer for the claimant's land is, I think, quite fair.

Instance No. II is a sale of a plot of land admeasuring 3000 square yards abutting on Cadell Road, in August 1918, at the rate of Rs. 5.25 per square yard. The plot was re-sold in February 1920 at a price which works out to Rs. 14.4 per square yard, that is about thrice the original price. The frontage of this plot is 55 feet only, the depth is 280 feet, and the shape irregular.

The next sale relied upon by Government is Instance No. III. It is a sale of a plot of land admeasuring 4,352 square yards in July 1919 at the rate of Rs. 12 per square yard. It has a frontage of 105 feet of which about 30 feet is on the Cadell Road and the rest on the remnant of old Parbhadevi Road. The depth of the plot is 260 feet. So far as the frontage is concerned, it resembles to a certain extent the southern frontage of the claimant's land. This instance also supports the Land Acquisition Officer's valuation.

The last sale relied upon by Government is Instance No. IV, being the two-legged plot purchased by Valimahomed in August 1919 at the rate of Rs. 7.23 per square yard. It is impossible to treat this sale as a guide in determining the market value of the claimant's land.

I have inspected the locality, the land in reference, and the plots which are the subject-matter of the sales relied upon by the parties to this reference. On comparing Instances Nos. I, II and III with Jamnadas' land, I think that Jamnadas paid such an exorbitant price for the land as no prudent purchaser would have paid even during the boom. On comparing the same instances with the land in reference, I think that the rate awarded by the Collector is quite fair. I, therefore, dismiss the reference with costs.

Special appeal from the decree and judgment in C. R. No. 1901 of 1922 of the Rangoon Small Cause Court.

Mr. Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this suit sued on a promissory-note for Rs. 800. The defence at first was a denial of execution, and the matter was,
by consent, referred to the Expert in handwriting, together with certain admitted signatures of the defendant.
The Expert's opinion was that the promissory-note had been executed by the defendant. Thereupon, without abandoning the plea of non-execution, the defendant raised the defence that all matters in dispute between the parties had been referred to arbitration; that the arbitrators had come to a decision, and that the suit was, therefore, barred.
The learned Judge of the Small Cause
Court held that the suit was barred.

There is no doubt that all matters in dispute between the parties were referred to the arbitration of Mr. N. C. Sen and one Ganesh Das. We can see no reason to doubt that the liability on the promissory-note in suit was included in the submission. It appears to us that the defendant was the plaintiff's agent, managing his business, and the accounts between the parties were very long.

Ganesh Das understood the Nagari character in which the accounts were kept, and according to him, both the parties brought their accounts to him.
He appears to have looked at them, and thereafter, on the 2nd of October, (a Sunday), the parties met the arbitrators at Mr. Sen's house. It was then suggested to the parties that the plaintiff should pay the defendant Rs. 2,000 and that this should be in satisfaction of all claims between them. It is clear from the evidence of both the arbitrators that this was merely a settlement proposed to relieve the arbitrators of the labour in going through the long and complicated accounts and a possibly lengthy hearing.

It would appear that the defendant at first agreed to a settlement on these lines. The parties were told to come back in two days, bring the necessary stamp paper, but they never appeared, and they were finally sent for when the defendant declined to agree to any such settlement, and demanded that the reference should be properly heard.
Thereupon the arbitrators appear to have sent them away and declined to do anything further in the matter.

There can be no question that this was not in any way a performance of their duties as arbitrators. The attempt at settlement failed, and they should, therefore, have gone into the accounts and considered the promissory-note and other matters before arriving at a decision.

To call this suggestion of a settlement an award under the Indian Arbitration Act appears to us to be untenable. An award under the Act must, by section 11, be in writing and signed. Before reducing their award to writing, the arbitrators must no doubt arrive at their decision; but having done so, they are bound to make an award in writing and signing of the award is not a mere formality, *Cotha Krishnaswami Chetty v.
Thatha Seetharam Chetty* (1).

DINANATH SAHI v. MALHIJI BAID.

Under the circumstances we must hold that the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court was wrong in holding that there was an award which barred the present suit.

The defendant has now admitted execution, but there has been no decision on the question of his liability on the promissory-note and the case must be remanded to the Small Cause Court for hearing on the merits.

The decree of the Court below is set aside and the appeal accepted. The plaintiff will get his costs in this Court, and the costs of the original hearing will abide by the result of the suit.

Appeal against an order passed by the Special Sub-Judge, Palamou.

Messrs. Ram Chander Bhaduri and Panchanan Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shambhu Sharan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

ROSS, J.—On the 8th September 1915, the respondents obtained a mortgage-decree against Tekait Kosalnath Sahi. In Sawan 1325 the judgment-debtor died. On the 8th of February 1919, the decree-holders applied for the substitution of the two minor sons of Tekait, namely, Tekait Goannath Sahi and Babu Juru Partapnath Sahi and of his brother, Patait Dinanath Sahi in his place. On the 17th September 1919, Patait Dinanath Sahi, the appellant, filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge an objection petition alleging that he was not liable to satisfy the decree passed against his brother. He denied that the judgment-debtor was the malik and karta of the joint family and gadinashin of the objector's estate and that the gadinashini system was in vogue in his family. He alleged that he was a sharer in the estate and that his share was equal to that of the judgment-debtor; he further stated that he along with his brother supervised and managed the estate as malik and that the deceased judgment-debtor never exercised any right over the objector's estate and that the mortgage did not affect the objector's property.

The Subordinate Judge held that the question raised in the petition of objection could not be gone into in execution proceedings. He further held that the khewat showed that the objector was jointly recorded with the deceased Tekait and that he was a co-parcener of a joint Mitakshara family and, therefore, a legal representative within the meaning of section 2, clause (11) of the Civil Procedure Code. He also held that the substitution of the objector in the place of the deceased judgment-debtor was not bad and that the question whether he was bound by the decree and was an heir of the Tekait was left open and undecided.

In my opinion, this order cannot stand; it is in fact self-contradictory. The Subordinate Judge in the first place refuses to go into the questions raised by the petition of objection on the ground that they cannot be gone into in execution proceedings. He then proceeds to hold on the strength of the khewat that the objector is a co-parcener in a joint Mitakshara family a fact which the objector had denied. This is in reality a decision of one of the objections which the Subordinate Judge had declined to enter into. He then, after making the order for substitution which itself renders the objector liable to satisfy the decree says that the question whether the objector is bound by the decree is left open and undecided. This also seems to be a plain contradiction. It seems to me that as the objector was not a party to the decree, he was entitled to a decision on the points raised in his objection.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal with costs and remand the case to the Subordinate Judge for trial of the objection.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, scope of—Chatram—"Interest in the trust", meaning of—Consent of Advocate-General, whether sufficient—Descendants of founder, whether can maintain suit—Hindu temples, whether open to all Hindus—Muhammadan worshippers at mosque, whether have "direct interest"—Surviving descendant of founder of chatram, whether can appoint manager—Trust property described as private property—Appointment of Manager of such property, validity of.

The consent in writing of the Advocate-General to the institution of a suit will not bring the suit within the meaning of section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code, unless the plaintiffs have an interest in the trust. The object of the section is to prevent people interfering in the administration of charitable trusts merely in the interests of others and without any real interest of their own. [p. 805, col. 2; p. 806, col. 1]

Ram Chandra Iyer v. Parameswaram Unni, 50 Ind Cas 693, 42 M 360 at p. 395, (1919) M. W. N. 370, 36 M L. J. 396, 25 M L. T. 304, 9 L. W. 492, referred to.

The fact that plaintiffs in a suit are descendants though only in the female line, of the founder of a chatram, gives them an interest in the proper administration of the trust sufficient to enable them to maintain the suit although they themselves may never use the chatram [p. 807, col. 1].

Hindu temples are prima facie to be taken to be dedicated for the use of all Hindus, resorting to them [p. 808, col. 2, p. 807, col. 1].

That the bare possibility, however remote, that a Hindu might desire to resort to a particular temple gives him an "interest in the trust" would defeat the object with which the Legislature inserted these words in section 92, Civil Procedure Code [p. 807, col. 1].

The last survivor of the descendants in the male line of the founder of a chatram has a right to appoint a trustee of the charity but if he falsely describes the property to be his own property, an appointment by him of the Manager of such property is invalid [p. 808, col. 2].

JUDGMENT.

Sir John Edge.—These are consolidated appeals by defendants in a suit, No. 1 of 1916, from two decrees, dated the 13th November 1919, of the High Court at Madras, which affirmed with a trifling variation as to some property claimed, a preliminary decree, dated the 15th April 1918, and a final decree, dated the 30th September 1918, of the Subordinate Judge of Kumbakonam.

The suit relates to a chatram, also called a choultry, at Kumbakonam and property alleged to be endowed property of the chatram. The chatram is now known as Kalyanarama Ayyar's chatram. Formerly it was known as Rajappa Ayyar's chatram. Two Brahmins were the plaintiffs. Since the suit was in appeal in the High Court one of the plaintiffs died; his legal representative is now on the record and is one of the respondents.

The plaintiffs on the 13th November 1916 brought this suit and claimed a declaration that the chatram was a public charitable institution having the properties mentioned in Schedule B of the plaint and seven-ninths of the properties mentioned in Schedules C to F as endowments; a declaration that the defendants are not lawfully appointed trustees and are not entitled to any right to the management and administration of the institution or in the properties belonging to it, that the defendants be removed from the office; that fit and proper persons be appointed trustees for the administration of the trust and that the chatram and the properties belonging to it be vested in them; that a scheme for the administration of the trust be settled; and other reliefs. The case of the plaintiffs was that the chatram was a public chatram, which had been founded and dedicated to the public more than 60 years before suit as a charitable institution for the convenience of travellers as a halting place and for the feeding of poor Brahmins resorting to it. The plaintiffs had obtained under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, the consent in writing of the Advocate-General to their institution of the suit.

The defendants denied that the plaintiffs were persons who had an interest in the trust within the meaning of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. They alleged that the chatram was a private chatram, and they denied that it had ever been dedicated to the public, and that it had ever been endowed with any of the properties claimed as endowments. They pleaded that they had been duly appointed trustees, and other matters which are immaterial if they had not been duly appointed as trustees.

The learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit recorded oral and documentary evidence, and he found that the plaintiffs having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate-General were persons who were entitled to institute the suit; that the chatram had been dedicated to the public and had been endowed as alleged in the plaint; that the defendants were not duly appointed trustees, and decided that a scheme for the management of the trust should be framed, and he framed a scheme for the management of the trust. The learned Judges of the High Court on appeal concurred with the findings of the Subordinate Judge except that they found that a small portion of the property claimed as endowment was not endowed property and with that variation as to the endowed property affirmed by their decrees the decrees of the Subordinate Judge, and dismissed the appeals to their Court. From those decrees of the High Court these consolidated appeals have been brought.

Mr. Upjohn, who appeared for the appellants, in his very able and exhaustive argument in support of these consolidated appeals, took and relied upon four points only. They were (1) that the plaintiffs were not persons who had an interest in the charitable trust within the meaning of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, and consequently had no locus standi to institute this suit; (2) that the chatram was not proved to be a public trust; (3) that the Courts below had misconstrued the Will of Swaminatha Ayyar of the 7th November 1881; and (4) that the first defendant had been properly appointed a trustee and there was no ground for removing him from his office as trustee of the charity. Their Lordships will deal with these points in the order in which they were argued by Mr. Upjohn.

Mr. Upjohn's first point was that assuming for the purpose only of his argument that the chatram had been dedicated to the public with a trust created for public purposes of a charitable nature, the suit would not lie if the plaintiffs had not within the meaning of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, an interest in the trust. That is a perfectly sound argument. The consent in writing of the Advocate-General to the institution of the suit by the plaintiffs would not bring the suit within the meaning of section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, unless the plaintiffs had an interest in the trust. Mr. Upjohn contended that the plaintiffs had no interest in the trust within the meaning of section 92. The question is had the plaintiffs an interest in the trust within the meaning of the section? They were descendants in female lines of Rajappa Ayyar and his son Kalyanarama Ayyar, one of whom, probably the former, founded and dedicated to the public the chatram as a charitable institution, and are of the founder's kin. The chatram was at first known as Rajappa Ayyar's chatram and was subsequently known as Kalyanarama Ayyar's chatram.

On the 22nd August 1864, the five sons of Kalyanarama Ayyar executed a partition deed in which the chatram and the lands then belonging to it, from which the income of the chatram was derived, were mentioned. The lands belonging to the chatram were excepted from the partition, but it was agreed that the five brothers should manage the chatram lands according to the order of seniority. It is obvious that the chatram must have been endowed with these lands before the date of that deed of partition. Mr. Upjohn contended that "an interest in the trust" to be within section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, must be some special interest and not merely a sentimental interest, and he referred to the dictum of Lord Eldon, L. C., in In re Master Governor and Trustees of the Bedford Charity (1) in which in a reference to Sir Samuel Romilly's Act (52 Geo 3, c. 101), which authorised persons other than the Law Officers to present petitions to the Court in certain matters of public charities, Lord Eldon said.

"The Act, indeed, authorises 'any two or more persons' to present a petition; but I conceive that those words must be understood to mean persons having an interest," which earlier at page 518 Lord Eldon interpreted as meaning, "a direct interest in the charity."

Mr. Upjohn also referred to the observations of Lord Eldon, L. C., in Ludlow Corporation v. Greenhouse (2). It may be that the dictum of Lord Eldon in the In re Master Governor and Trustees of the Bedford Charity (1) caused those who were responsible for the drafting of section 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1877 (Act X of 1877) to draft that section as giving a right in cases of a breach of a trust created for public charitable purposes to "two or more persons having a direct interest in the trust," and who had obtained the consent of the Advocate-General, to institute a suit under that section. It must, however, have subsequently appeared to the Governor-General of India in Council that the limitation of a "direct" interest was not expedient in India, and it was enacted by section 44 of the Civil Procedure Amendment Act, 1888, which amended the procedure then in force, "That in section 539, for the words 'having a direct interest' the words 'having an interest' shall be substituted."

It may be that Coutts Trotter, J. was correct in stating in Ram Chandra Iyer v. Parameswaram Unni (3) that it was in consequence of the decision in Jan Ali v. Ram Nath Mundal (4) that the change in the law was made, by omitting the word "direct." In that case the High Court at Calcutta had held that the plaintiffs there, two Muhammadans who lived in a village and worshipped regularly at the village mosque, had no direct interest in the mosque. Their Lordships would have considered that Muhammadans who worshipped regularly in the mosque of the village had a direct interest in the trust relating to the mosque. But so that they may not be misunderstood as to the meaning of 'interest' in section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, they think it advisable to say that public "Hindu Temples are prima facie to be taken," as Sir John Wallis, C. J., said in Ram

VAIDYANATHA AYYAR v. SWAMINATHA AYYAR.

Chandra Iyer v. Parameswaram Ummi (3) "to be dedicated for the use of all Hindus resorting to them." They agree with Sir John Wallis that the bare possibility, however remote, that a Hindu might desire to resort to a particular temple gives him an interest in the trust appears to defeat the object with which the Legislature inserted these words in the section. "That object was to prevent people interfering by virtue of the section (section 92) in the administration of charitable trusts merely in the interests of others and without any real interest of their own." In the present case their Lordships are of opinion that the fact that the plaintiffs are descendants although only in female lines of the founder of the chatram gave them an interest in the proper administration of the trust sufficient to enable them to maintain this suit, although they themselves may never find it necessary to use the chatram as a rest house or to obtain food there.

As to the second point argued by Mr. Upjohn it is sufficient to say that there are concurrent findings that the chatram was a public trust, and their Lordships may add they also find that the chatram is a public trust.

As to third point argued by Mr. Upjohn, that the Courts below misconstrued the Will of Swaminatha Ayyar of the 7th November 1881, that contention, if well founded would show that the gift of some of the property to the chatram which each Court has found to belong to the chatram was a void gift within the decision of the Board in Ranchordas Vandravandas v. Parvatibai (5). The testator was one of the five sons of Kalyanarama Ayyar. It is not necessary to set out the translation of the whole of his Will; the contention turns on the meaning of part of the Will.

After referring to the partition of 22nd August 1894 between him and his brothers and some other matters, the testator's Will as translated continues, so far as is material, as follows—

"The arrangement which I make regarding the aforesaid properties is this.—After my decease my properties and my estate shall be managed with all rights by my divided brothers—K. Venkataranga Ayyar and K. Suryanarayana Ayyar as executors. The incomes from the villages and gardens shall be divided into 3 portions and 2 portions thereof shall be given to my wife, and the said house and the Ethradi manai (manai in front of it) be given to her for her occupation; and with the remaining one portion the debts due by me and the debts contracted by me and K. Venkataranga Ayyar on the security of our family properties shall be discharged. After the said two kinds of debts are discharged, the said executors shall with the said one-third portion of the said income make Annadhanam (feed poor people) in our family choultry in Perumbandi now under the management of K. Venkataranga Ayyar. My wife shall take all the aforesaid moveable properties and enjoy them according to her pleasure, and if she dies leaving any moveable properties, they shall be used by the said executors themselves for the said feeding charity. After my wife's decease, 2 out of 3 portions of the income enjoyed by her shall be utilised for the charity and the remaining one out of the 3 shares, and the dwelling house and manai in front, shall be taken by K. Venkataranga Ayyar and K. Suryanarayana Ayyar and their posterity. The other dayadis have no right whatever."

Their Lordships assume the words "the charity" in the translation are the correct rendering of the vernacular which they are informed is in tamil. If those words are the correct rendering of the vernacular they plainly refer to the chatram charity which had immediately before been indicated and the gift was not void for uncertainty. The original Will was before the learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit and who understood tamil. This is what he said as to that part of the Will:—

"14. It is next contended that this gift of a 1/3rd share in the 1/3rd share to a 'Dharmam' was invalid, and the decision in Parthasarathi Pillai v. Thiruvengada

VAIDYANATHA AYYAR v. SWAMINATHA AYYAR.

Pillay (6) was relied upon. A persual of Swaminatha Ayyar's Will indicates to my mind that the "dharmam" he intended to create in respect of the $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in the $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share was the dharmam to which he gave a $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share in the income; and that the gift of $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of a $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share is not void for uncertainty.

15. It was lastly contended that it was not open to this Court to construe the terms of Swaminatha Ayyar's Will in so far as they relate to the charity but it appears to me that it is open to this Court to see what interest the charity has in Swaminatha Ayyar's properties. I, therefore, find that the chatram has a $\frac{7}{9}$ th share in the income from the C to F Schedule properties under Swaminatha Ayyar's Will."

This is what the learned Judges of the High Court said on that subject:—

"As regards $\frac{1}{3}$ rd of the income of the properties given to the wife which the Will directs to be utilised for dharmam on her death, it is argued that the reference there is not to this choultry but to charity generally. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the word 'dharmam' refers to this choultry, and we think he is right in that construction. In that view of the Will the choultry becomes entitled under Exhibit C to $\frac{7}{9}$ th of the income of the properties."

Their Lordships hold that the Will was not misunderstood by either of the Courts.

As to the fourth and last point argued by Mr. Upjohn that the first defendant, Vaidyanatha Ayyar, had been properly appointed a trustee of the châtram and ought not to have been removed, it is necessary to see what the appointment in fact was. His appointment was made by the 10th and 11th paragraphs of the Will of Suri Ayyar, Probate of which was granted on the 17th July, 1915. Suri Ayyar, was the last survivor of the five brothers who were the sons of Kalyanarama Ayyar. The 10th and the 11th paragraphs of the Will as translated, were as follows

"10. The choultry mentioned in paragraph 3 aforesaid and the entire properties attached thereto shall be in the management of the aforementioned R. Vaidyanatha Ayyar. The Brahmin feeding and the Dwadasi Kattalai of the said choultry shall be conducted on a scale not inferior to what is being conducted now.

11. After the abovementioned Vaidyanatha Ayyar, his younger brother the said R. Narayanasami Ayyar and after him, my friend Jayakrishna Chariar residing in melakkaveri achari agharam shall look after the management of the said choultry and of the entire properties attached thereto."

Turning to the 3rd paragraph of the Will it will be seen what were the properties for the management of which Vaidyanatha Ayyar was appointed. That 3rd paragraph is, as translated, as follows:—

"3. Besides the abovesaid properties there are in Kumbakonam Town to the northern side of the Cauveri, my family choultry, the buildings attached thereto, lands, grounds, bandy pettai etc., properties These belong to me and are in my possession and enjoyment."

Suri Ayyar was appointing Vaidyanatha Ayyar manager of properties which he falsely alleged belonged to himself as proprietor, and was not appointing him as a trustee of properties which were already trust properties. Suri Ayyar as the last survivor of the descendants in the male line of the founder of the chatram possibly had a right to appoint a trustee of the charity. See Baidyo Gauranga Sahu v. Suderi Mada (7) But that was not what he was professing to do. He was professing to appoint a manager of property which he falsely alleged to be his own private property and in the opinion of the Subordinate Judge his object was to afford a monthly income for the daughter of his late concubine and her children.

After Mr. Upjohn had concluded his arguments in support of the appeals his junior Counsel addressed the Board on a subject which Mr. Upjohn had not referred to and contended that some small portions of the properties did not belong to the trust, but they had been concurrently dealt with in the decrees of the Trial Judge and the High Court as the properties of the charitable trust; and the attention of their Lordships was not directed to any evidence sufficient to justify the contention.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these consolidated appeals should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The only point argued in this second appeal is that the mortgage in question is an anomalous mortgage, and, therefore, the provisions of section 98 of the Transfer of Property Act apply and reliance is placed upon the case reported as Patte Muhamad v. Davood (1) for the purpose of construing the document as an anomalous mortgage. Reading the suit document as a whole, it is quite clear that the parties intended to create an ordinary possessory mortgage. The only condition added is that should the mortgagor fail to pay the mortgage amount within a certain time the transaction should be treated as a sale. Adding a clause of this kind to an ordinary possessory mortgage would not make it an anomalous mortgage. The clause puts a clog on the equity of redemption. That by itself would not convert an ordinary possessory mortgage or a usufructuary mortgage with an anomalous mortgage. The case as Patte Muhamad v. Davood (1) is distinguishable on the facts. There the words are, if they do not act according to those conditions, they will surrender the house and the deed treating the transaction as a sale. That shows evidently that possession did not pass to the mortgagee but remained with the mortgagor. Here possession was given to the mortgagee. For the respondent reliance is placed upon a recent decision of the Privy Council reported in Muhamad Sher Khan v. Raja Seth Swami Dayal (2). There their Lordships held that the provisions of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act are imperative and that no mortgagor can lose his right to redeem even in the case of an anomalous mortgage. Messrs. A. P. Sen and H. K. Ghose, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Wasim, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises from a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent, for possession of a plot called No. 110/153 in village Alumnagar, Pargana Khairabad, District Sitapur, by pulling down the construction made thereon by the appellant. The respondent is one of the zemindars of the village and the plot in suit falls within his share. The plot used to be occupied by a house owned by one Mahabir. The facts that have either been admitted, or proved to the satisfaction of the Courts below are, that the original house built by Mahabir was swept away by the floods in 1915, that Mahabir is dead, that his widow made some temporary structure on the plot, and that in 1920 she executed a sale-deed in favour of one Bhikari Lal, the present appellant, who has started building a house on the plot without the permission of the respondent. It should be mentioned, that the lower Appellate Court found that the widow of Mahabir, who was defendant No. 1 in the suit, had abandoned the plot before executing the sale-deed, and that what she transferred to Bhikari was a right of occupation of the plot pure and simple.

The respondent claims in his plaint, that Bhikari had by law, and by custom, no right under any circumstances to obtain possession over the land in suit, or to build a house thereon. Bhikari set up the defence that in Alumnagar the owners of houses had a right to transfer them, and that there was no custom to the contrary. Two issues were framed in the First Court on the question of custom. In Issue No. 3 the plaintiff was called on to prove that there was a custom in Alumnagar, under which raiyaats are debarred from transferring their houses, while in Issue No. 4 the defendant was called on to prove that raiyaats have the full right of transferring their houses. Both parties produced evidence on this point, and the suit has been contested principally on the issues of custom. Both the Courts below decided these issues in favour of the plaintiff, and against the defendant.

The grounds of appeal relate almost entirely to the question of custom, and to the evidence produced thereon, though there is a suggestion that the Courts have erred in holding that Mahabir's widow had abandoned the plot in ground No 6.

As this has been regarded as a test case, and a good deal has been said on the question of custom, it is perhaps as well to dispose of these grounds of appeal though in my judgment it is not really necessary for the disposal of the present appeal. The first point that has been urged is that the existence of a custom is a question of fact, and not of law and that the findings of the lower Court are final. There is some conflict of authority on this point. In Muhammad Kamil v. Imtiaz Fatima (1), a Privy Council decision, it was held that the existence of custom is a question of fact, and in two decisions of this Court of 1915, it has been held that this Court is bound by findings of the Court below that certain documents prove a custom. [These are reported in Tilak Ram v. Sata Ram (2) and Basdeo Singh v. Ram Phal Singh (3).] On the other hand, a recent decision reported, as Munna Lal v. Jai Indar Bahadur Singh (4) is to the effect that the question of custom is one of mixed fact and law, and this view has been clearly expressed in Kailas Chandra Dutt v. Padma Kishore Roy (5), where it has been held, that the question whether the facts found in any instance prove the existence of the essential attributes of a custom or usage, is a question of law, which may be discussed in second appeal. The question whether such a state of facts has been proved by the evidence is merely a question of fact. I am following the decision in Munna Lal v. Jai Indar Bahadur Singh (4), therefore, in allowing the question to be argued in second appeal.

The entries in the wajib-ul-arz and in the fard-i-rewaj have been fully set forth in the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge. The value of such entries is a matter that has been the subject of some conflicting decisions. For instance, in a Privy Council ruling reported as Anant Singh v. Durga Singh (6) (an Oudh case) it was held that the evidence of the wajib-ul-arz varies greatly in value, and that in the case there decided it was full of inconsistencies, that it referred to a family custom, which was contrary to the ordinary law, and that it appeared to contain merely the views of interested individuals. The learned Counsel for the appellant relies on this ruling, and points out that in the present case, the entries in the wajib-ul-arz appear to have been merely dictated by the zemandars, while those in the fard-i-rewaj show that only a few tenants recorded their agreement, while in at least one case the tenant denied the custom recorded. On the other hand, it has been held in Praji v. Banju (7) that an entry in one wajib-ul-arz raises a presumption in favour of the custom recorded, and in two Oudh decisions, on which the respondent relies, it has been held (a) that the entries in one wajib-ul-arz are sufficient if un rebutted to prove a custom and (b) that entries in the malikan-e-deh, as stated by the landlord, are, in the absence of fraud or grievous error, binding on the persons affected [Punni v. Chet Ram (8)]. The lower Appellate Court has given weight to these last rulings, although as has been pointed out in arguments they refer to groves.

In my view, the evidence in regard to custom adduced in this case is inconclusive. There was oral evidence to show that the custom as recorded in the wajib-ul-arz, had been departed from in some recent instance. If there had been no evidence of custom at all, however, I think that the plaintiff respondent was bound to succeed. He was the zemindar and the land belonged to him. The plot concerned was in abadi which still retained the characteristics of a village, although it has recently been included in a Municipal area. Mahabir had the status of an agricultural tenant, and his position was that he had been allowed by the zemindar to build a house on the plot in suit. In the absence of proof of some contract or custom to the contrary, he could only be held to have the right to use the house so long as he maintained it, without any right to transfer it. This view has been taken by the Allahabad High Court in Sri Girdharji Maharaj v. Chote Lal (9) and a very similar view was taken in a decision of this Court, recorded in 20 Oudh Law Journal 305 [Sheodāt Prasad v. Suraj Bali (10)]. It was really for the defendant to show the existence of a custom under which he could transfer his house, and not for the plaintiff to prove a custom of forfeiture or escheat if the house were transferred. It was the defendant who first raised the question of custom. The suit has been practically decided by the lower Courts on the entries in the wajib-ul-arz. They held that Mahabir belonged to the record of the three classes of tenants described in the fard-i-rewaj. These tenants are recorded to have a right to transfer the materials of the houses. There is, however, no record of any custom by which a tenant can transfer the site of a house when the materials have disappeared. It is proved that when Mahabir's widow executed the sale-deed in favour of the appellant, even the temporary structure which she had been allowed to erect after the original house had been washed away, was no longer in existence. Even if the wajib-ul-arz and the fard-i-rewaj were to be accepted as sufficient proof of the custom recorded therein which, in my opinion, they cannot be, they would not be sufficient to establish the right of a tenant to transfer a right of occupation of a building site where no house existed, nor has such a custom been proved by the oral evidence. There is, therefore, nothing to interfere with the landlord's right of possession of the land. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot confer jurisdiction on the Court to do what is prohibited by positive law.

The devolution of interest in property in a suit pending the suit can make no difference in the Court-fee to be paid.

In a suit for partition the defendant contended that the Court-fee paid on the plaint was insufficient. The Court decided this issue in favour of the plaintiff and no appeal was made against this order. Meanwhile the defendant died and his sons were brought on the record as his legal representatives and the vendees from the plaintiff of a portion of the property were added as plaintiffs. The suit came on before another Judge who decided that the plaintiff should pay ad valorem fee. The plaintiff applied to the High Court in revision.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This is a suit by a younger brother against his elder brother for partition. The defence was that the property was an impartible raja. An issue was raised as to the sufficiency of the Court-fee. The Subordinate Judge before whom this suit originally came decided this issue in favour of the plaintiff holding that the suit was one for partition only. No appeal was made against this order. In the meantime the elder brother died and his sons were substituted in his place as his representatives. The plaintiff, moreover, sold a portion of the property to other persons who were added as plaintiffs. The suit then came before another Subordinate Judge who took up the question as to the sufficiency of the Court-fee again and decided that the plaintiff was bound to pay an ad valorem Court-fee. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff in the present application that the Court had no power to pass this order. The learned Subordinate Judge has referred to the decision in Chandramani Koer v. Basdeo Narain Singh (1). That was a case where there was an application for review and it is conceded by the learned Counsel on behalf of the petitioner that there is power to review an order of this kind on an application properly made; but in the present case there was no application for review. The learned Counsel for the opposite party relies on section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is true that a reference to that section was made in the decision referred to above although the reference was unnecessary as there had been an application for review of judgment. Order XX, r. 3 lays down that the judgment shall be dated and signed by the Judge in open Court at the time of pronouncing it and, when once signed, shall not afterwards be altered or added to save as provided by section 152 or on review; and "judgment" is defined in section 2 of the Code to mean the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order. Clearly, therefore, this judgment, for it is a judgment, could not be altered save as provided by section 152 or on review. It is clear that section 151 cannot confer jurisdiction on the Court to do what is prohibited by positive law. Section 152 refers merely to clerical or arithmetical errors and it is of no assistance in the present case. In my opinion, therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to alter the order of his predecessor in the way he has done.

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 442; 4 P. L. J. 57.

It was further argued, however, on behalf of the opposite party that inasmuch as there are now added plaintiffs who have taken a transfer of part of the property, the nature of the suit has been altered and the Court is, entitled to consider whether the purchasers plaintiffs are in possession, and if they are not, to demand an ad valorem Court-fee. In my opinion the devolution of interest pending the suit can make no difference in the Court fee to be paid. These plaintiffs come in the interest of their vendor, the original plaintiff, and their position is identical with his.

I would, therefore, allow this application and set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge. The petitioner is entitled to his costs. Hearing fee five gold mohurs.

Mr. Campagnac, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. Cowasjee, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue to recover a sum of Rs. 20,000 on a Fire Insurance Policy. The insured building was partially destroyed and damaged by fire, and a claim was duly made. The defendants repudiated the claim on the 20th September 1922, and this suit was instituted on the 5th April 1923, more than three months after the rejection of the claim. Condition 12 of the Policy sets out inter alia that, if the claim be made and rejected and an action or suit be not commenced within three months after such rejection, all benefit under the Policy shall be forfeited.

The defendant Company, therefore, contend that the suit is not maintainable. The plaintiffs rely on section 28, Indian Contract Act, and urge that the above-mentioned condition in the Policy cannot be enforced.

In The Baroda Spinning and Weaving Company, Ltd. v. The Satyanarayan Marine and Fire Insurance Company Limited (1), it was held that a condition of forfeiture in a Fire Insurance Policy is not within the scope of section 28.

I agree with the decision of the Bench in that case, and accordingly hold that the plaintiffs' suit is not maintainable. It is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Mr. W. R. Puranick, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. C. Dutt, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs are the widow and two daughters of the deceased Sigdar. The defendant is the son of the said Sigdar by a co-widow of the plaintiff No. 1. The plaintiffs claimed 9/16th of Sigdar's estate under the Muhammadan Law. The parties are admittedly Muhammadans, but the defendant pleaded that they are governed by Hindu Law in matters of succession, being converts from Hinduism and that by custom females are excluded from succession.

The first Court, Additional Munsif of Khandwa, awarded the plaintiffs' claim but on appeal the District Judge, Nimar, reversed the decree and dismissed the suit, holding custom proved. The plaintiffs make this second appeal.

That though a High Court cannot in second appeal interfere with findings of fact it can consider whether the facts found are sufficient to support custom, has been frequently held by the High Courts. I need only refer to Durga Charan Mahto v. Raghunath Mahto (1) and the ruling of this Court in Krishna Rao v. Nilkanth (2). That evidence is required to prove a custom opposed to the personal law of the parties, has been frequently laid down by all the High Courts in a series of decisions, of which the latest is Abdul Hussain Khan v. Sona Dero (3). I may refer to the remarks on page 464* as to ignoring the claims of daughters and sisters amongst Muhammadans being insufficient to establish custom. The remarks are quoted from Mirabivi v. Vellayanna (4). It was held by the Madras High Court in Kakarla Abbayya v. Raja Venkata Papayya Rao (5), that a custom cannot be established by a few instances or by instances of recent date. The evidence that has been adduced in the present case falls far short of the establishment of any such custom as is contended for by the defendant. It consists merely of defendant himself, who is D. W. No. 1, and one witness Dillu (D. W. No. 2) who belongs to the same family as the defendant and is equally interested in ignoring the rights of females to any share in the property. The defendant refers to the instance of his father's uncle Anu Patel, to whose property females did not succeed. He states that Anu Patel divided half his property in his lifetime between his sons by one wife, and kept the remaining half for himself and sons by another wife. On Anu's death his property went to his son Mahamad. On Mahamad's death the property went to his mother Johora Bi.

In the first place, that Anu divided his property during his lifetime is not a question of inheritance, and, secondly, it appears that after the death of his son Mahamad his mother Johora Bi, widow of Anu, succeeded, which is against the theory set up by the defendant that females are excluded. From a perusal of the defendant's cross-examination, it will appear that the family is not governed by Hindu Law as he says: "There is no such thing as self-acquired or ancestral property among us" and he admits that they follow Muhammadan law except that sons inherit the property and widows and daughters are entitled to maintenance only. He further admits that if a man dies without a male issue his widow would inherit. He further states that Anu Patel's son Munir had left a widow Amu Bi. When she re-married the property was acquired by Munir's brothers Nawaz and Namdar. This suggests that on the death of her husband Amu Bi succeeded him, but as a matter of fact the allegation that she lost the property on her re-marriage is not proved, for Exhibit D-1 is a sale-deed which shows that she sold it to her brother.

There is some misunderstanding in the mind of the lower Appellate Court as to the statement recorded by the Tahildar in the revenue proceedings. The original has been called for, and from this it will appear that the statement in question was the statement of the present defendant. What happened was that first Abdul Rahim who was the agent of the plaintiffs in that case was examined and then the present defendant was examined. The defendant was again re-called and further examined. No name is put in the deposition, but that it is the defendant's deposition is proved by the fact that he referred to the receipt A which is Exhibit D-10 in the present case. A perusal of the deposition will show that it is the deposition of the defendant. An attempt has been made to explain away his statement that Bashir or Bashir Bi, the present plaintiff No. 1, has a right in the property according to Muhammadan Law, as an abstract statement of what the Muhammadan Law undoubtedly is.

The point, however, is that in the mutation proceedings the defendant did not set up any claim that by custom in his family females were excluded from inheritance. The evidence of the remaining witness (D. W. No. 2) is similarly insufficient to prove custom. He only says that his sisters did not demand any share and so they were not given any. He also makes certain statements regarding the custom of inheritance which is not Hindu Law. As has already been pointed out by the Privy Council, the fact that no demand was made by ladies in a Muhammadan family does not necessarily show that they are excluded from inheritance. The instances given are not sufficient to establish the custom. They are of recent date and they are contradicted by the instances of Johora Bi, and Amu Bi widow of Munir son of Anu Patel.

In these circumstances I have no doubt that the view of the first Court was right and that the lower Appellate Court is wrong. The evidence is totally insufficient to prove custom. The decree of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside and the case remanded for disposal of the other issues. The respondent will bear the costs of this appeal and costs in the lower Courts.

Stated broadly as above the answer, I think, must be in the negative under section 92 of the Evidence Act, but if the promisee himself knew at the time of taking his signature that he signed only as surety, then proviso 1 would operate to let in the evidence. In this case the first appellant admitted that he knew that the respondent was signing only as surety when he took her signature and, in my opinion, the evidence was admissible and as the appellants have waived their claim against the other signatories and it is not contended that the surety consented to such conduct, her liability under the note is discharged and I dismiss the appeals with costs.

The unconscionableness of a bargain is not the first thing to be considered in order to determine whether a case falls within the terms of section 16 of the Contract Act. The first thing to be considered is the relations of the parties and in order to bring the transaction within the section it must be proved that one party was in a position to dominate the will of the other [p 819, col 2].

The burden of proving that the contract was not induced by undue influence then lies on the person who was in a position to dominate the will of the other [ibid].

Urgent need of money on the part of the borrower does not place the lender in a position to dominate his will.

Sundar Koor v. Rai Sham Krishen, 34 I A 9, 34 C 150, 4 A L J 109, 5 C L J 106, 9 Bom L R 304, 11 O W N 249, 17 M L J 43, 2 M L T 75 (P O), followed.

The exaction of excessive and usurious interest does not by itself raise any presumption of undue influence until the question has first been settled as to the lender being in a position to dominate the borrower's will [p 821, col 1].

Abdul Majid v. Kesheroode Chandra Pal, 29 Ind. Cas 843, 42 C 690, 19 C W N 809, overruled.

The question whether a bargain is unconscionable is to be settled by section 16 of the Contract Act and not by reference to the legislation of other countries, e.g., the English Money-lenders Act. It is accompanied with danger to invoke as authority in an Indian case expressions which merely connote the principles which underlie a particular English Statute, and form a guide to its interpretation, [p 818, col 2].

It is not right that where there is ample security, the exaction of excessive and usurious interest in itself raises a presumption of undue influence which it requires very little evidence to substantiate. There is no such presumption until the question has first been settled as to the lender being in a position to dominate the borrower's will [p 821, col 1].

JUDGMENT.

Lord Shaw.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 9th November, 1920, of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, which varied a decree, dated the 25th September, 1917, of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah.

RAGHUNATH PRASAD v. SARJU PRASAD.

The suit is for recovery of the amount of principal and interest due by the appellant to the respondents (the plaintiffs) under a mortgage of date the 27th May, 1910. The Subordinate Judge gave decree in the mortgage suit but only allowed simple interest. The High Court allowed compound interest.

The substantial question raised on the appeal is whether the appellant, in the circumstances proved in the case, fell within the protective provisions of section 2 of the Indian Contract (Amendment) Act, 1899. It may be convenient to set that section out in full:—

"2. Section 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, is hereby repealed, and the following is substituted therefor, namely:—

"16.—(1) A contract is said to be induced by 'undue influence' where the relations subsisting between the parties are such that one of the parties is in a position to dominate the will of the other and uses that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the other.

"(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, a person is deemed to be in a position to dominate the will of another—

(a) where he holds a real or apparent authority over the other, or where he stands in a fiduciary relation to the other; or

(b) where he makes a contract with a person whose mental capacity is temporarily or permanently affected by reason of age, illness, or mental or bodily distress.

"(3) Where a person who is in a position to dominate the will of another, enters into a contract with him, and the transaction appears, on the face of it or on the evidence adduced, to be unconscionable, the burden of proving that such contract was not induced by undue influence shall lie upon the person in a position to dominate the will of the other.

"Nothing in this sub-section shall affect the provisions of section 111 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872."

It is in the view of the Board by that section that the question arising between these parties falls to be settled and not by reference to the legislation of other countries, e.g., the English Money-lenders Act. The Statute to be here construed is the Indian Contract Act as amended. It is accompanied with danger to invoke as authority in an Indian case expressions which merely connote the principles which underlie a particular English Statute, and form a guide to its interpretation. As will be seen this general observation is required by reason of the citation of certain authorities alluded to in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and referred to in the argument before their Lordships' Board.

The appellant is a member of a joint undivided family owning a property of considerable value, including inter alia 186 villages, assessed to revenue for about Rs. 17,000 per annum.

The mortgage is dated the 27th May, 1910. It is for the sum of Rs. 9,999 borrowed from the plaintiffs. The rate of interest is covered by the following provision:—

"I, the declarant, do promise that I shall pay interest on the said debt at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem on the 30th Jeth of each year. In case of non-payment of the annual interest, the interest will be taken as principal and interest will run, thereon at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem, that is, interest will be calculated on the principle of compound interest."

There can be no question that these terms were high: if payment was not made the sum due on the mortgage would speedily mount up. By the decree of the High Court which was pronounced on the 9th November, 1920, it is seen that the original debt of Rs. 10,000 had reached, with interest and costs calculated up to the 8th May, 1921, more than a lac of rupees, viz., Rs. 1,12,885. In eleven years the stipulation for interest at 24 per cent. compound had magnified the sum covered by the mortgage more than elevenfold. It is upon these facts, coupled with one other about to be mentioned, that the appellant takes his stand.

The statement in the defence admits that at the time of the execution of the mortgage the defendant was owner of one half of a valuable joint family property. The owner of the other half was his father. Father and son had quarrelled. Serious allegations are made by the son against the father; whereas it appears that the father had instituted criminal proceedings against the son. Shortly before the date of the mortgage the defendant had borrowed Rs. 1,000 from the plaintiffs so as to enable him to defend himself in these criminal proceedings. It is alleged that they caused him great mental distress, and that he required more money to conduct his litigations. That is the story.

Evidence was taken in the case. It is sufficient to say that the defendant gave no evidence at all. It is quite plain that no Court can accept a story thus unproved by its author as establishing a case either of mental distress or of undue influence under the Indian Contract Act. The only case which the appellant has is, the case derived from the contents of the mortgage itself.

It is argued with force that these are unconscionable, and that it is the duty of the Court in India to step in either to rescind the contract or to rectify the bargain. It was the latter course which was argued for in the present case. In support of this argument much reliance was placed upon the judgment pronounced by Lord Davey in Dhanipal Das v. Raja Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (1).

Before, however, addressing themselves to the authorities cited their Lordships think it desirable to make clear their views upon, in particular, sub-section 3 of section 16 of the Contract Act as amended. By this sub-section, 3 matters are dealt with. In the first place the relations between the parties to each other must be such that one is in a position to dominate the will of the other. Once that position is substantiated the second stage has been reached, viz., the issue whether the contract has been induced by undue influence. Upon the determination of this issue a third point emerges, which is that of the onus probandi. The burden of proving that the contract was not induced by undue influence is to lie upon the person who was in a position to dominate the will of the other.

Error is almost sure to arise if the order of these propositions be changed. The unconscionableness of the bargain is not the first thing to be considered. The first thing to be considered is the relations of these parties. Were they such as to put one in a position to dominate the will of the other? Having this distinction and order in view the authorities appear to their Lordships to be easily properly interpreted.

In the judgment of this Board in Dhanipal Das v. Raja Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (1) the outstanding effect was that the borrower who mortgaged the estate was actually, at the date of the transaction, under the control of the Court of Wards. He was treated, to use the language of Lord Davey, as "under a peculiar disability" and placed in a position of helplessness, and the lender was proved to have been aware of that and, therefore, in a position to dominate the borrower's will. On page 126* Lord Davey thus expressed the Board's view:—

"Their Lordships are of opinion that although the respondent was left free to contract debt, yet he was under a peculiar disability and placed in a position of helplessness by the fact of his estate being under the control of the Court of Wards, and they must assume that Auseri Lal, who had known the respondent for some fifty years, was aware of it. They are, therefore, of opinion that the position of the parties was such that Auseri Lal was 'in a position to dominate the will' of the respondent within the meaning of the amended section 16 of the Indian Contract Act. It remains to be seen whether Auseri Lal used that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the respondent."

This case was followed in terms in the case of Maneshar Bakhsh Singh v. Shadi Lal (2) in which the bond in suit was given by a talukdar in Oudh without the knowledge and consent of the Court of Wards after his estate had been placed under it. In these circumstances the former case was followed, and Lord Collins expressed the opinion of the Board to be that they "are satisfied that in this case also the borrower was placed in such a condition of helplessness that the lender was 'in a position to dominate his will' and that he used that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the appellant."

"It is sufficient to say that the borrower in the present case was sui juris, had the full power of bargaining and of burdening his estate, that his estate was not under the Court of Wards and that he lay under no disability. With regard to his helplessness nothing whatsoever is proved in the case except the bare fact that he being a man of wealth as owner of one-half of certain joint family property wished to obtain and did obtain certain monies on loan. The only relation between the parties that was proved was simply that they were lender and borrower.

It is an entire mistake to represent the decisions of this Board as being wanting in light upon the above mentioned case. For in Sundar Koer v. Rai Sham Krishan (3) the exact point was referred to by Lord Davey in the course of the judgment read by him:—

"There is no evidence of any actual exercise of undue influence by the mortgagees or of any special circumstances from which an inference of undue influence could be legitimately drawn, except that the mortgagor was in urgent need of money. The learned Counsel for the appellant argued that the mortgagees were thereby placed in a position 'to dominate the will' of the mortgagor, and cited a recent decision of this Board—Dhanipal Das v. Raja Maneshare Bakhsh Singh (1). In that case, however, the borrower was 'a disqualified proprietor' under the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, and his estate was under the management of the Court of Wards, and it was on that ground that their Lordships held that the borrower was under a peculiar disability, and the position of the parties was such that the lender was 'in a position to dominate his will'. There is nothing of that kind in the present case; and their Lordships are not prepared to hold that urgent need of money on the part of the borrower will of itself place the parties in that position."

This precisely fits the situation of these parties. It has not been proved,—it might be said that it has not even been attempted to be proved,—that the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower.

In these circumstances, even though the bargain had been unconscionable (and it has the appearance of being so) a remedy under the Indian Contract Act does not come into view until the initial fact of a position to dominate the will has been established. Once that fact is established, then the unconscionable nature of the bargain and the burden of proof on the issue of undue influence come into operation. In the present case, for the reasons stated, these stages are not reached.

MA SAN HLA ME v. MA TUN ME.

Their Lordships think it right to observe that the judgment now pronounced is not in accord with the principles laid down by the Appellate Civil Court of Calcutta in Abdul Majeed v. Kshirode Chandra Pal (4) that "where there is ample security, the exaction of excessive and usurious interest in itself raises a presumption of undue influence which it requires very little evidence to substantiate." Their Lordships think this decision to be wrong. There is no such presumption until the question has first been settled as to the lender being in a position to dominate the borrower's will. Their Lordships are further of opinion with reference to the citation of Samuel v. Newbold (5) that that case does not form any authority in the construction of the Indian Contract Act. The case was determined under the Money-lenders Act, 1900, as it expressly bears. The issue was thus stated by Lord Macnaghten:—

"It seems to me that the construction of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, is plain enough, and that the evidence before their Lordships is more than sufficient to show that this case is within the mischief which the Act was designed to remedy."

In the view of the Board cases of that character form no precedent for a decision of the present appeal which is rested on another and very differently worded Statute.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the High Court should be varied by allowing compound interest on the principal at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the execution of the bond until 25th September, 1917, and, thereafter simple interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum up to the date of realization, and that in other respects the decree of the High Court should be affirmed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

JUDGMENT.—Appellants case was that Shwe Zan had four wives, namely, Ma Da Nyo, whom he divorced, Ma Mya Thwin, whom also he divorced, Ma Da U, by whom he had two children, the present respondents, and Ma San Hla Me, the present first appellant, by whom he had one son, the present second appellant, that before any of the marriages Shwe Zan inherited half the property in suit from his parents, that during his marriage with the first appellant he bought the other half of the property, that after his death the property remained undivided in the joint possession of the parties as his heirs, and that appellants were entitled to partition and possession of their shares, which they allege to be three-quarters of the property. They have, however, n this Court, admitted that the share to which they were entitled would be one-half and not three-quarters.

Respondents replied that what Shwe Zan inherited from his father was two-thirds of the property and what he bought was only one-third, that the property was acquired by Shwe Zan during his coverture with their mother Ma Da U so that they would be entitled to three-fourths and the first appellant to only one-fourth, and that appellants' claim to that one-fourth was time-barred. They later amended that written statement so as to allege that what Shwe Zan inherited from his parents was only one-third of the property, that he inherited that share during his marriage with their mother Ma Da U, that subsequently he and his sister who had also inherited a similar share bought the third share of another sister jointly so that they became owners of a half share each that Shwe Zan's half share was "lettetpwa" of his marriage with their mother, so that they would be entitled to three-quarters of it and the first appellant to one-quarter, that they had been in adverse possession for over 20 years, and that, therefore, appellants' suit was time-barred. The Trial Court found that Shwe Zan inherited the whole of the property from his parents and that the parties as representatives of the two marriages of which there was issue should divide it equally between them. He also held that the suit was not barred by limitation and he gave the appellants a decree for half the property.

Respondents appealed and the lower Appellate Court held that the suit was time-barred.

Appellants now come to this Court in second appeal on the grounds that the lower Appellate Court wrongly placed on them the burden of proving that they were in joint possession of the lands along with respondents and was wrong in finding that the suit was time-barred.

There can be no doubt that the lower Appellate Court did place the burden of proof wrongly. Where one or more of several joint owners are in possession of property, they are presumed to hold that possession on behalf of the whole body of joint owners, and the burden of proving that their possession had become adverse is on them. That was the rule laid down by the Privy Council in Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (1), and followed by a Bench of the Chief Court in Hari Pru v. Mi Aung Kraw Zan (2).

In this case neither of the respondents gave evidence and there was no proof that their possession ever became adverse.

The suit was, therefore, not barred by limitation, and as the lower Appellate Court disposed of the appeal on this preliminary point, its decree is reversed and the appeal is remanded to that Court for a decision on the merits.

Respondents will pay appellants' costs in this Court on the uncontested scale.

A certificate for the refund of the Court fees paid on this appeal will issue to appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against a decision of the District Judge of Tipperah affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge at Comilla. The suit out of which this appeal arises is a suit by the plaintiffs to have their title declared to a 4-anna share in certain land. Plaintiff No. 1 claims as a daughter of one Safaruddi and the other plaintiffs claim as heirs of another daughter of Safaruddi who died leaving him surviving three sons entitled to 12-anna share in such land as he left, and two daughters entitled to the remaining 4-anna share of this land. As regards the lands in schedule ka and kha the First Court has found that they have been conveyed away by the three sons of Safaruddi. As regards the lands in schedules ga, gha and una the Court found that there was no document showing assertion of exclusive title, but that inasmuch as these lands were held by the brothers in the same right as the lands which they had conveyed they must have asserted exclusive title to all the lands left by Safaruddi. The point that has been urged before us on behalf of the appellants is that this last conclusion is erroneous and that, although the finding of the lower Appellate Court may have been right as to the lands of schedules ka and kha it is erroneous as regards the lands in the other three schedules and we were referred in support of this contention among other cases to the case of Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mandal.

(1) where the law is considered and also to a recent judgment of Sir Asutosh Mukerji. Before we consider the law to be applied it is necessary to ascertain what are the facts in this particular case. Safaruddi died 42 years ago leaving his wife Manik Banu him surviving and she died 36 years ago. The plaintiffs have not been able to establish that since his death they received anything in respect of the usufruct of the property either in kind or in cash and the finding is that during this period the lands were being cultivated separately by the three brothers and that two of the brothers left the land and went to live with their father-in-law. Moreover it has been found that the two daughters knew of the conveyance of the lands contained in schedules ka and kha as they were living close by. It was further found that these were valuable lands and that no claim was made by the daughters to the sale proceeds of the lands which were sold and an explicit finding of the lower Appellate Court will be found at the foot of page 11 of the paper-book where it is said that it is impossible that the plaintiffs would not know that the brothers were asserting exclusive title to these lands. That seems to us a finding of fact and the appellants can only succeed if they can show that this finding is not justified by the evidence in the case. As already stated, from the evidence that there is, it seems to us that it is not possible to say that there is no evidence to support the finding to which we have just referred. Consequently we think that the lower Appellate Court was justified in the inference that it drew that the title of the brothers and their exclusive possession were asserted not only in respect of the lands which they sold but also in respect of the lands which are comprised in schedules ga, gha and una. The law, no doubt, is perfectly clear. The possession of one co-sharer enures to the benefit of the other co-sharers and does not, except under exceptional circumstances, amount to an ouster of other co-sharers. In the case in Balaram Guria v. Syama Charan Mandal, (1) the facts as to the assertion of the exclusive possession by the co-sharer were not so strong as they are in the present case. It is true that in that case there was a conveyance by the co-sharer who was in possession but it was a conveyance to a nephew and there was considerable doubt whether this transaction was not merely a benami transaction and this being so, it would clearly have been impossible in that case to rely on the evidence of the conveyance as an assertion of exclusive right by a co-sharer to the property as against his other co-sharers. Both the Courts have found against the plaintiffs and have found an assertion by the brothers of their exclusive right to the property and we are not prepared to say in second appeal that these findings of facts are not justified by the evidence which was upon the record.

(1) 60 Ind. Cas. 298; 33 C. L. J. 314; 21 O. W. N. 1057.

This being so, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 23

Co-parcener, whether can apply

A co-parcener in a Hindu joint family has no locus standi to apply for Letters of Administration on the death of another co-parcener [p. 825, col. 2]

A co-parcener cannot make a Will of his undivided share in a Hindu joint family property and when he dies, he cannot be said to be intestate. Section 23, Probate and Administration Act, deals only with the administration of the estate of an intestate person. [p. 826, col. 2]

ORDER.—This is an application by Ramagiri Guruvaya Naidu for Letters of Administration to the estate of Ramagiri Lingaya Naidu. There is also a rival application, Civil Miscellaneous No. 228 of 1923, on behalf of the alleged son of the deceased in whose favour, it is alleged, a Will has been made by the deceased.

The fact that the applicant in the latter case is the son of the deceased is denied by the applicant in this case and the fact that a Will has been made in his favour or at all, is disputed.

This application of Ramagiri Guruvaya Naidu comes before me for decision upon the preliminary point as to whether the petitioner has any locus standi to apply for Letters of Administration or to oppose the grant of Letters of Administration to the alleged son of the deceased.

Mr. Naidu's contention on behalf of the petitioner is that his client is the member of a joint Hindu family being a son of the only surviving brother of the deceased and he claims that by section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act he is entitled to administer the deceased's estate. For the purposes of this application only it is assumed that the family is a joint Hindu family and that the property in respect of which Letters of Administration are applied for is ancestral property.

The alleged son denies both these allegations and claims that the family is not a joint Hindu family, and, secondly, that the property was self-acquired property of the deceased.

In support of Mr. Naidu's argument that a co-parcener, because it is assumed for the purpose of the argument in this case that the petitioner is a co-parcener, can apply for Letters of Administration my attention has been drawn to In re Dasu Manavala Chetty (1) in which it was held that the applicant in that case was a person to whom Letters of Administration could be granted under section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act. In that case the petitioner was the only surviving co-parcener and it was held that where a surviving co-parcener governed by the Mitakshara Law, applies for Letters of Administration in respect of property standing in the name of a deceased co-parcener which was a joint family property of the applicant and the deceased he is bound to include in the valuation of the property, the value of the share to which the deceased was entitled at the moment of his death and he cannot, under section 19 sub-section 1 (1) of the Court Fees Act, obtain Letters of Administration to the joint family property, unless he includes such share in the valuation and pay the proper ad valorem Court fees upon it.

This was a case in which the matter went for decision to the Appellate Side of the Court, it being contended on the one side by the co-parcener that such property, being the property of a joint Hindu family, was not subject to the duty upon Letters of Administration being obtained, and, on the other side, by the Advocate-General on behalf of the Madras Government that the property was so subject to that duty.

I have read through the case and I have come to the conclusion that this decision was mainly a decision deciding the question as to whether or not the property was subject to this duty. The question as to whether or not the co-parcener was a person who might apply for Letters of Administration is dealt with in a very few lines. I refer to the judgment of Mr Justice Miller on page 97* where he states: "I have no doubt that the applicant is a person to whom Letters of Administration may be granted under section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act. He is a person who would be entitled to the whole or part of the estate of the deceased. He would take his father's property if his father died intestate leaving property.

"And It seems clear to me that the ancestral joint family property passing to the applicant by survivorship, is 'property of the deceased' within the meaning of the Act (section 4), and, therefore, included in the 'property and credits' of section 77, that is to say, in the 'estate' of the definition of administrator in section 3. Inasmuch then as this property does not in the present case pass by survivorship to any one other than the applicant, there seems to be no doubt that the applicant is entitled to Letters of Administration which will vest it in him."

I think the important point to be observed about this judgment is that the decision as to whether or not a co-parcener may apply for Letters of Administration is contained in a very few lines and, moreover, an important point is made of the fact that the applicant in that case was the sole survivor.

No other case has been quoted by Mr. Naidu in which Letters of Administration have been granted to one of several co-parceners of a joint Hindu family where the property has not, first of all, been partitioned. Having regard to the fact that in the Madras case already referred to the judgment which is not a short one dealt almost entirely with the point as to whether or not such property would, upon Letters of Administration being granted, be subject to the duty or not, I do not take this as a judgment which lays down the principle that a co-parcener, where there are others and there has been no division of the property, can apply for Letters of Administration.

On behalf of the widow and the alleged son, it was argued that section 23 of the Probate and Administration Act, which is the only section under which this application is made only enables Letters of Administration to be granted in a case where the deceased has died intestate and it is argued that in this case there can be no intestacy, because, with regard to the co-parcenary property, it is said there can be no such thing as intestacy. The owner or the possessor of an undivided share in a joint Hindu family can neither be testate nor intestate, as it is argued that a co-parcener cannot, during his lifetime dispose of his undivided share by Will and, therefore, he cannot be said to be testate. When he dies his undivided share becomes part of the co-parcenary property, with regard to the ability of a co-parcener to bequeath or alienate this undivided share. Mayne, on page 582 of the 9th Edition, on Hindu Law and Usage says:—"The extent of the testamentary power, after being subject to much discussion, has at length been finally settled by decisions, and by express legislation. Whatever property is so completely under the control of the testator that he may give it away in specie during his lifetime, he may also devise by Will. Hence a man may bequeath his separate, or his self-acquired property, and one who, by the extinction of co-parceners, holds all his property in severalty, may devise it, even in Malabar and in Canara under Alyasantana Law, so as to defeat the claims of remote heirs. The rule is, however; not universal and though a manager can dispose of a small portion of the family property in favour of the female members of the family by gift, inter vivos, he cannot do so by Will. The Madras High Court in one case, acting on an obiter dictum of the Privy Council has held that a disposition by Will of co-parcenary property can be upheld, if the consent of all the co-parceners, being adults has been obtained. This decision sounds equitable enough, but it seems very questionable whether it is logically defensible, because, as has been pointed out, the testator's interest in the property was extinct at the moment from which his Will speaks. Its correctness has been questioned in a later Madras case." And on page 583, it is said:—"A member of an undivided family cannot bequeath even his own share of the joint property, because at the moment of death, the right by survivorship is at conflict with the right by devise." In my view, according to the authority, already quoted, it seems to me that a co-parcener cannot make a Will of his undivided share in a joint Hindu family and, under these circumstances, when he dies, he cannot be said to be intestate. Section 23 deals only with the administration of the estate of an intestate person and, therefore, I think the contention on this ground put forward on behalf of the widow and the son is sound and that the application under section 23 must fail.

(1) 4 Ind Cas 1084, 33 M 93, 6 M L T 286, 19 M L J 591 (F B).

RAMAGIRI V. GOVINDAMMAH.

It is further pointed out that, according to a decision in Abhiram Dass v. Gopal Dass (2) the petitioner here would have no locus standi at all. On page 48 the headnote reads as follows:—"A person not claiming any of the property of the testator, but disputing the right of the testator to deal with certain property as his own, has not such an interest in the estate of the testator as entitles him to come in and oppose the grant of Probate."

On page 52, in the judgment of the Court, it is said:—"The action of such person is rather that of one claiming to have an adverse interest."

In this case, according to Mr. Naidu the property is the property of the joint Hindu family and he is not claiming, therefore, any property of the deceased but is disputing his right to deal with his property as his own. He has not, therefore, such an interest in the estate of the deceased as entitles him either to oppose a grant of Letters of Administration to the alleged son or himself to ask for Letters of Administration.

Under these circumstances, in my view, this application for grant of Letters of Administration must fail upon the preliminary point. After the grant of Probate to the other applicant he will have his proper remedy by suit.

The application is accordingly dismissed with costs, I allow Advocate's fee three gold mohurs to the widow, who has been cited, and to the alleged son, the applicant in Civil Miscellaneous No. 228 of 1923.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 48—Mortgage decree for sale of properties and for recovery of balance from person of mortgagor—Execution of latter part of decree—Limitation

Where a mortgage-decree directs the mortgaged properties to be sold and the balance to be realised from the other properties and person of the judgment-debtor, the period of 12 years, under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, for an execution of the latter part of the decree must be calculated from the date of the mortgage decree.

Mr. R. Kuppusami Iyer, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The first point raised is one of res judicata. It is said that as the District Munsif decided on 20th August 1918, that the petition to execute the decree personally against first defendant was not barred in the absence of the first defendant, that constitutes res judicata and the respondent is debarred from raising the plea now that the execution application is out of time. The reason given by the District Munsif for his decision is that 12 years had not elapsed since the hypotheca became exhausted; but the Privy Council decision in Khulna Loan Co. v. Jnanendra Nath Bose (1) clearly lays down that the 12 years is to run from the date of the decree in the case of a decree of the kind in question where the mortgaged properties were first to be sold and the balance if any realised from the other properties and persons of the judgment-debtors. At any rate the present application is clearly barred by section 48, Civil Procedure Code, and the section is held by the Privy Council decision to apply to a decree of this kind. The intermediate step in 1911 which was moreover dismissed and again restored in 1921 does not affect the question. Had the present application depended on the legality of the previous one, as in Lakshman Chetti v. Kuttyan Chetti (2) there might be something to be said for the petitioner; but the present application falls within the mischief of section 48, Civil Procedure Code, and the ruling of the Privy Council in Khulna Loan Co. v. Jnanendra Nath Bose (1) is, in my opinion, applicable.

The second point is that the decree is in reality two decrees and that, therefore, a new starting point for limitation begins after the hypotheca is exhausted. The point has already been dealt with and is covered by the Privy Council decision referred to.

The O. M. S. A. must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 116, O XXI, r 11 (2)—Revision—Discretion exercised by lower Court—Interference—Creditor and debtor—Payment of debt—Method of payment

The High Court does not usually interfere in revision in cases where there is a real exercise of discretion in the lower Court, but in rare cases interferences are justified.

It is the intention of the law that debtors should be compelled to pay their just debts but it is not reasonable to compel them to do so by means which will deprive them of their means of livelihood if there is available an alternative method of enforcing payment which will be reasonably fair to the creditor, e.g., payment by instalments.

CHAPPLE v. MAMSA BROTHERS.

Civil revision against the decree of the Court of Small Causes, Rangoon, in Civil Suit No. 985 of 1923.

JUDGMENT.—Respondent sued petitioner for a balance of rent and compensation for use and occupation of his premises and obtained a decree for Rs. 665 with Rs. 71-4-0 as costs. In execution of that decree he attached the furniture and fittings of a Commercial School which petitioner kept and by which he earned his living.

Petitioner applied for an order for payment of the decretal amount by instalments of Rs. 50 a month. The learned Judge after hearing the Advocates on both sides said that he saw no reason for allowing payment by instalments and dismissed the application with costs.

Petitioner applied for a review of that order on the ground that if the equipment of his school was sold he would lose his means of livelihood. The learned Judge said that he saw no reason for changing his mind.

Petitioner then applied to this Court in revision and asked for stay of execution. His application for revision was admitted for hearing and on his application for stay this Court made an interim order ex parte for stay of sale of the furniture and fittings of his school on condition that Rs. 100 should be paid into Court before the 15th of December, 1923, and that thereafter Rs. 50 should be paid into Court on the 2nd of each month.

In accordance with those orders Rs 100 were paid into Court on the 15th of December, Rs 50 on the 3rd of January, and Rs. 100 on the 19th January, so that Rs. 250 out of the decretal amount has been paid.

The application for stay was put down for hearing in this Court on the 11th of January, 1924, but when the case was called on that date, petitioner was absent and his application was dismissed for default.

Petitioner then filed an affidavit saying that he had no notice that the hearing had been fixed for the 11th January, and that his absence was due to a mistake on the part of his Advocate or his clerk and on that affidavit this Court restored the application for stay.

Both the applications for revision and the application for stay are before me to-day and I have heard the learned Advocates on both sides. Petitioner's learned Advocate now states that owing to a change in his circumstances he is now able to pay instalments of Rs. 75 a month instead of Rs. 50.

The Court does not usually interfere in revision in cases where there is a real exercise of discretion in the lower Court but it seems to me that this is one of those rare cases in which interference can be justified. It is clearly the intention of the law that debtors should be compelled to pay their just debts, but it is not reasonable to compel them to do so by means which will deprive them of their means of livelihood if there is available an alternative method of enforcing payment which will be reasonably fair to the creditor. There is no sense in killing the goose which lays the golden egg. Petitioner now owes respondent about Rs. 500 which respondent is entitled to recover as soon as possible. But the Court has a discretion to allow payment by instalments and I am of opinion that in this case it should do so.

I, therefore, direct under the provisions of O. XX, r. 11 (2) that the amount standing in respect of the decree in Civil Regular Suit No. 6857 of 1923 of the Court of Small Causes be paid by instalments of Rs. 100, such instalments to be paid within the first seven days of each month beginning from March 1924.

The attachment will be removed and the parties will bear their own costs in this Court and on petitioner's application to be allowed to pay by instalments. The order for costs on his application for review will stand.

which this appeal arises was brought to recover rent from the defendant. The suit was valued at Rs. 79-13 annas.A preliminary objection was taken before us that having regard to the provisions of section 153 of the Bengal

Divisional Court, Myaunmya, in C A.
No. 144 of 1922.

Mr. Burjorjee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hay, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT:—This suit arises out of a registered mortgage deed the terms of which are unusual. This deed, Exhibit I, was executed on the 7th September 1905. The mortgagors were the plaintiffs, San Chein and one Maung Po Gyi, deceased. The mortgagee was Mg.
Tha Byaw, original defendant, who died after filing his written statement, after which his representatives were substituted.

NANA MIA v. MAUNG MIA.

The deed expressly says that the mortgage was one with possession. But there is further provision for payment of interest at $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per mensem.

It is agreed that the interest shall be paid annually and there is a clause providing that if interest is not paid in any year the mortgagee shall take over the land as owner. Nothing is said about the usufruct.

The plaintiff alleges that Po Gyi was a prior mortgagee who was paid off out of the money borrowed on this mortgage, and that he joined in executing the deed because the land was assessed in his name.

The written statement alleges that plaintiff was not the owner of the land, having previously sold it to Po Gyi, and that he joined in executing the deed because the land was assessed in his name.

A map of the land for the year 1904-05 is on the file. This shows Po Gyi's name as owner with the plaintiff San Chien as tenant. It certainly supports the plaintiff's version.

The principal defence was that the defendant had taken over the land as owner in 1906 and that since then he had been in adverse possession.

The plaintiff worked the land for the first year after the mortgage and paid rent. Thereafter he never worked it again and admittedly has paid no interest since then.

Both the lower Courts have found that the defendant took over the land as owner under the forfeiture clause. They held that section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act was not then in force, that clause was effective. The rulings cited by them support this view; but they have been overruled by a Bench of this Court in a later case Ma Min Byu v. Maung Chit Po (1) and the Bench decision is binding on us.

But I do not think that the question whether the forfeiture clause was effective or not is important in this case. On the facts I have no doubt that it was in fact enforced.

forced in 1906 and that ever since then Tha Byaw has been holding the land as owner and that the plaintiff was fully aware of this. Tha Byaw has thus been in adverse possession as owner, and not as mortgagee, for over twelve years.

In my view the plaintiff's suit was time barred.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Usurious Loans Act (X of 1918), s. 3—Court, duty of.

Under section 3 of the Usurious Loans Act a duty is cast upon the Court in cases to which the Statute applies, to apply its mind to its provisions even in a suit heard ex parte and to take up the question of its own motion, where it has not been raised by the defence.

Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Noakhali, exercising the powers of a Court of Small Causes, in S. O. C. Suit No. 382 of 1923.

Babu Jitendra Coomer Sen Gupta, for the Petitioner.

Babu Ramendra Chunder Ray, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued upon a khata for recovery of Rs. 294 made up of principal Rs. 100 and interest at the rate of $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per mensem. Defendant repudiated the execution of the khata entry and denied the loan.

The entry in the khata shows a stipulation to pay interest at $6\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. without mentioning whether it was per mensem or per annum. Defendant, in several places in his written statement adverted to the plaintiff's allegation in the plaint of the stipulated rate of interest being per month but did not controvert it specifically or plead its excessive or unconscionable character, beyond denying the transaction in toto. Paragraph 5 of the written statement, however, when translated runs thus: "The stipulation mentioned in the plaint is illegal and no claim for interest is sustainable on the basis of the same. It is exceedingly improbable and unnatural to borrow money at the rate of 6½ per cent. per mensem for the purposes of business; and if such a transaction ever took place it is humanly improbable that the debt should have been left unpaid or unrealised for such a long time. Besides interest at the rate claimed is penal and unconscionable". Whether by this statement the defendant invited the Court to adjudicate on the question as to the character of the interest or he merely pleaded it as showing the improbability of the transaction is not very clear. From the Summons book all that appears is that only one witness for the plaintiff stated and that in cross-examination that the rate of interest stipulated was 6½ per cent. per mensem.

The Court has disbelieved the defence and decreed the plaintiff's suit in full.

Defendant complains that he had seven witnesses in attendance, and that he had tendered seven witnesses to prove his case including the unreasonableness and penal nature of the interest claimed, but the learned Judge closed the case upon examination of only three witnesses on the petitioner's side. I quote this from the affidavit filed in support of the petition of motion: "To this allegation there is no reply on the other side. The statement however is not quite clear, whether the examination of the remaining witnesses was in fact refused by the Court or whether it was given up in consequence of some discussion that may have transpired; the insinuation is there was a refusal."

At one stage in the hearing of this Rule I was inclined to take the view that upon the denial of the whole transaction by the defendant and upon the fact that no real attempt was made to prove that if the transaction did at all take place, the rate of interest was otherwise than what was claimed and upon the vagueness of the statement referred to above the Rule should be discharged. On a further consideration I have come to the opinion that it would not be right to do so.

The Usurious Loans Act, 1918, applies to the transaction. Section 3 (1) of that Act provides that notwithstanding anything in the Usury Law Repeal Act, 1855, where in any suit to which the Act applies, whether heard ex parte or otherwise the Court has reason to believe that the interest is excessive and that the transaction was, as between the parties thereto, substantially unfair, and the Court may exercise all or any of the powers which are mentioned in the various clauses therein. The proviso to sub-section (1) need not be referred to as it has no bearing on the present case. Sub-section (2) is important. It lays down certain principles for determining whether the interest is excessive and whether the transaction was as between the parties substantially unfair. The Explanation to clause (d) of sub-section (2) is also important. It says that interest may of itself be sufficient evidence that a transaction was substantially unfair. The other sub-sections need not be referred to.

Upon the plain words of the Statute a duty is cast upon the Court, in cases to which the Statute may be applicable to apply its mind to its provisions even in a suit heard ex parte. The expression "Has reason to believe" clearly indicates that the intention of the Legislature was to enable the Court to take up the question, of its own motion, whether it has been raised by the defence or not. The section is founded upon section 1 of the English Money Lender's Act. In Samuel v. Newbold (1) Lord Macnaghten observed: "what an intolerable strain would be thrown upon inferior Courts, unfamiliar with the doctrines and the practice of Courts of Equity, if they were privileged or condemned to listen to lengthy arguments and venerable precedents before deciding a question that any man of common sense is just as capable of deciding as the most learned

RAJ KUNWARI v. MAHARAJ KUNWAR

Judge in the land, provided he is not hampered by authorities, which require no little training to discriminate and appreciate at their true value". This observation appears to have been borne in mind in the Usurious Loans Act, 1918. While keeping in view the principle of the English Act it has rendered the application of the principle much simpler by substituting the words "substantially unfair" for the words "harsh and unconscionable" and instead of referring the Court to considerations of general principles of equity has laid down certain practical tests for its guidance. The Act, therefore, will relieve the Courts from the necessity of going into elaborate and often very intricate questions which arise under sections 16 and 19A of the Indian Contract Act. Once a proper case presents itself the rules of evidence disentitling a party from varying the terms of a written agreement by evidence of a parol agreement inconsistent therewith are suspended, the rules prohibiting the setting up of inconsistent defences cease to have operation and the Court can, nay ought to, go behind the written document, find out the real nature of that transaction by admitting evidence relating thereto and do justice to the cause.

It is obvious that 75 per cent per annum is a high rate of interest it is, at any rate, more than the ordinary. The plain duty of the Court in such a case is to apply its mind to consider whether it is excessive and then, if necessary, to apply the provisions of the Act, which it does appear to have done.

I accordingly set aside the decree of the learned Munsif and send back the case to him to admit relevant evidence for the purpose of considering the provisions of the Act and dispose of the suit in accordance with law. I am of opinion that the dishonest defence set up by the defendant led the Court astray. I accordingly make no order as to costs in this Rule.

Where a transfer has been made ostensibly in favour of a wife or a son, there will, not in dealing with Indians be the same presumption of advancement as there would be in the case of English people [p. 836, col. 1].

The criterion in these cases in India is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase-money is paid. But the source of the purchase-money is to be the criterion in the absence of all other relevant circumstances [p. 836, cols. 1 & 2].

The burden of proving that a transaction was a benami one is on the assessor; even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction will suffice for the purpose. Such a transfer, however, cannot be considered as nothing and the person who impugns its apparent character must show something or other to establish that it is a benami or sham transaction [p. 837, cols. 1 & 2].

That a large portion of the consideration money was paid by a husband for the purchase of property in the name of his wife does not relieve those who allege the transaction to be a benami one, from proving it to be so. Appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Gonda, dated the 14th February 1923.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, H. K. Ghose, M. H. Qidwai and Girja Sankar, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshwar Nath Srivastava, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this suit are the daughters of Babu Kunj Behari Singh and Thakurain Durga Dei, and they sued for possession of the entire village Kharawan, Pargana Nawabganj in Gonda District from Musammat Rani Maharaj Kunwar, and subsequently from the latter's heirs. Musammat Rani Maharaj Kunwar had bought the village at an auction sale on March 20, 1894. On that occasion the property was sold to her and to Bala Prasad jointly but Bala Prasad subsequently sold her half to the lady, who thus became the owner of the whole property. The judgment-debtor in the decree in execution of which the property was sold was Thakurain Durga Dei, and the suit of the plaintiffs-appellants—her daughters—was based on the allegation that she was not the owner of the whole proprietary rights in the village, but only of a widow's limited right, having succeeded to it as heir of her deceased husband Babu Kunj Behari Singh who died in 1886. The determination of this question, again, depends on whether Thakurain Durga Dei, who had become the ostensible owners of the village in 1882, in circumstances which will be described more fully later on, was only a benamidar on behalf of her husband. The learned Subordinate Judge decided that Durga Dei was not a benamidar, but the real and absolute owner of the property, and that the reversioners, i. e., the plaintiffs-appellants, are bound by the auction sale in which Durga Dei's rights had passed to Musammat Rani Maharaj Kunwar and Bala Prasad and subsequently to the former alone. He, therefore, dismissed the suit and the plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court.

It will be necessary first to consider the circumstances in which the village in suit passed into the ownership of Durga Dei, for it is admitted by Mr. Sen on behalf of the appellant that if this transaction was not a benami one the appeal must fail. The property used to belong to Musammat Mirzai Khanam, and had been attached and put up for sale in execution of a decree against her. Before the auction sale, however, it was transferred by private sale by means of a sale-deed executed on July 17th 1882 by Musammat Mirzai Khanam in favour of Thakurain Durga Dei. In this deed the village in suit together with two others in the Gonda District are conveyed to the vendee for Rs. 33,000, and the vendor states that she has put the vendee in possession of the aforesaid villages and has received from her, the vendee, the entire consideration money by obtaining from her a trust deed and the receipts evidencing payment. The trust deed dated 1st July 1882 recites that Thakurain Durga Dei had received as a deposit from Musammat Mirzai Khanam by way of trust money Rs. 31,000 of which Rs. 5,130 were deposited in the Government

RAJ KUNWABI V. MAHARAJ KUNWAR.

Treasury on July 18th towards the decree of Janki Das, and that the balance was to be paid towards the other debts found due from Mirzai Khanam in respect of Kharua estate, etc.

The appellants' first task has been to show that all the arrangements for this sale in favour of Durga Dei had been made by her husband Kunj Behari Singh, and that the consideration money had been paid by the latter and not by Durga Dei. The oral evidence on the point has been discarded by the Court below as worthless. There is, however, a certain amount of documentary evidence which throws some light on the way in which the negotiations were conducted. It has been pointed out that on 19th May, 1882, Kunj Behari had opened negotiations with Mirzai Khanam regarding the sale of some of the latter's property, and in fact made an application for the postponement of the auction sale, alleging that he had arranged with the judgment-debtor to purchase several villages of her, including the one in suit, for Rs. 50,000 and was ready to deposit Rs. 5,000 as earnest money. This particular transaction seems to have fallen through, but the evidence is relied on by the appellants in order to show that at that stage Kunj Behari intended to purchase the property himself. On July 17th an application was made by the judgment-debtor through her agent to the effect that she had sold three villages including the one in suit to Kunj Behari Singh and deposited a sum of Rs. 4,275. Accompanying this document is a general power-of-attorney executed by the judgment-debtor in favour of her agent, reciting that she appoints him her agent in effecting mutation of names in regard to these villages in favour of Kunj Behari. Next we find that on August 3rd, the decree-holder in the proceedings against Musammam Mirzai Khanam certified payment of Rs. 27,181 in two items, namely, Rs. 22,051 by transfer receipt of Gonda District, and Rs. 5,130 by cheque from the Judge, Fyzabad. Up to the date of the sale-deed July 17th, therefore, the name of Thakurain Durga Dei does not appear in these documents, and on the very day on which the deed was executed in favour of Durga Dei by Mirzai Khanam herself, we find that the agent of the latter made an application in the Court of the Judge executing the decree to the effect that the villages had been sold, not to Durga Dei, but to Kunj Behari Singh, and depositing a sum of Rs. 4,275 which purported to be part of the consideration money received from Kunj Behari Singh. Later on, on August 21st we find that Kunj Behari Singh borrowed a sum of Rs. 9,500 on a mortgage-deed wherein he states that he has purchased the property in suit from Mirzai Khanam, and that he has to pay up certain liens with which that property is encumbered. He makes no reference in this mortgage deed to his wife, a fact which may be explained on behalf of the respondents by the arguments that Kunj Behari was mortgaging his own property, and that the mortgagees had nothing to do either with the lady or with the property which had been conveyed to her. On August 19th, Kunj Behari borrowed Rs. 5,000 from Itraji Muari to pay off the mortgage on these three villages, which he says he had bought, without mentioning his wife. On September 15th, Kunj Behari borrowed Rs. 5,000 from Mata Prasad specifically for the balance of the consideration money for the leases and mortgage-deeds relating to the village Karna, etc., but in this deed he clearly stated that it is his wife Durga Dei who owned the money, and that it was she who had purchased the villages. It is only in the last of these deeds, therefore, that he suggests that Durga Dei had bought the villages and that the mortgage debt is due from her. These documents are relied on by the appellants to prove that the consideration money for the villages in suit was paid by Kunj Behari and not by his wife and that he had to borrow money in order to raise the necessary sum. It is argued that he would not have been likely to borrow money for such a purpose unless he wanted the property for himself. On the other hand it is shown that Durga Dei's name is entered as the vendee in the sale-deed, and that although there is no mention of her name in the proceedings previous to the date of the sale-deed on the 17th July, there is a distinct recital by Kunj Behari Singh in the mortgage-deed of September 15th, that the property was purchased by his wife and that she still owes part of the money due on the leases and mortgage-deeds. In this connection it is interesting to note that on July 11th Durga Dei succeeded to the ownership of a village in Gonda District in the same Tahsil as the property in dispute though in a different pargana, and there it is at least a plausible theory that Kunj Behari had originally intended to purchase the property for himself but had afterwards decided to convey it to his wife in order that she might have a compact property in the Gonda District. He himself was a resident of Basti District and most, so far as are aware, all of his property was there. The appellants have attempted to show that the whole of the consideration money was paid by Kunj Behari, and the lower Court has come to the conclusion that he did pay the consideration money, though with the intention of making his wife the absolute owner of the property. The learned Judge was influenced by the consideration that Durga Dei was not in a position to purchase property worth Rs. 33,000 on the 17th July 1882. We must, however, take into consideration two qualifying circumstances. In the first place these various sums which are alleged to have been borrowed by Kunj Behari and paid either to the vendee or to the mortgagee do not amount to much more than half of Rs. 33,000. In the second place although Durga Dei is not shown to have owned any other landed property except the small one in which she succeeded in July 1882, yet there is a possibility that she owned moveable property and cash in her own right, and that she may at any rate have contributed to the sale price.

Later on it is pointed out that in 1885 Durga Dei and Kunj Behari together with a third person named Suraj Bali executed a joint deed which is called a hypothecation bond in favour of Salig Ram for Rs 15,000. The properties mortgaged, consisted of the three villages in Gonda District which were purchased in the deed of 1882. This is a curious deed, for the three parties executing it refer to themselves as owing and possessing the villages. Suraj Bali so far as we know had nothing whatever to do with these villages, and there is nothing to show that Kunj Behari and Durga Dei were joint owners of them. In 1886 Kunj Behari died, and later on Durga Dei mortgaged various parts of the property in suit to different people. The evidence as to any transfer she made after Kunj Behari's death, however, is clearly of less importance than the transactions into which she entered during his lifetime, for it is quite probable that she would have been able to obtain money on the security of property of which she was the ostensible owner even if her legal right in such property was only the limited estate of a widow. The village in suit was finally sold as mentioned above in execution of the decree obtained by Salig Ram on the basis of the bond of 1885 and others.

It has been advisable to recount at some length the circumstances surrounding the purchase of the property in suit by or on behalf of Durga Dei, in view of the appellants' contention that the whole of the consideration money was paid by Kunj Behari, and that the transaction was a benami one. The property was conveyed to Durga Dei in 1882, mutation was effected in her name and she remained in possession, nominally at any rate until Kunj Behari's death in 1886, and thereafter either as full owner or as her husband's heir until the property was sold in the auction sale of 1894. Owing to the long period, that has elapsed since Durga Dei acquired her title the evidence is scanty, and it must be admitted that the plaintiffs are largely responsible for this, for delaying matters so long before bringing them into Court. It is a fair statement that they had no locus standi until Kunj Behari's death in 1886. It is argued that they had no reason to sue for a declaration after that date because they imagined that Durga Dei was only enjoying the interest of a widow in the property. Even this argument, however, fails to hold good from the date that the auction-purchasers obtained possession of the property in 1894. It is evident that the reversioners have delayed matters till the last possible moment. It is worthy of notice that the second plaintiff-appellant is the wife of Sarju Prasad who is the son of Suraj Bali. The latter was evidently thoroughly familiar with all the circumstances of these transfers. He joined Kunj Behari and Durga Devi in 1885 in executing that curious hypothecation bond and he was actually made a party to the suit brought by Salig Ram in 1890 on the basis of that bond. For some reason or other however, he disappeared from the part of the judgment-debtor in the execution proceedings, but later we find him taking an active part in the same execution proceedings as the agent of Bala Prasad (his son) who had also obtained a decree against Durga Dei, which appears to have been executed jointly with Salig Rams. It was Suraj Bali who bid at the auction sale on behalf of the decree-holder Bala Prasad, who jointly with Musammam Rani Maharaj Kunwar, respondent, finally brought the property. It is impossible to believe, therefore, that he was not in a good position to advise his son's wife as to the proper time for filing a claim in Court.

The case-law in regard to benami transactions has been quoted in this Court at some length, but it is not necessary for us here to do more than notice the main principles which according to our judgment are to guide us in the decision of this case. It is universally acknowledged that benami transactions are by no means unusual in India, that where a transfer has been made ostensibly in favour of a wife or a son, there will not in dealing with Indians be the same presumption of advancement as there would be in the case of English people. It was laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council so long ago as 1854 that the criterion in these cases in India is to consider from what source the money comes with which the purchase-money is paid. A more recent decision of the Privy Council on the precise point before us is that quoted as Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1) in which the above passage is quoted, but with the important qualification that the source of the purchase-money is to be the criterion "in the absence of all other relevant circumstances". This latter decision has been relied on by the appellants not only on account of the principle laid down, but of the circumstances of the case there decided which correspond with the present ones. In that case the taluqdar had purchased a house with his own money in the name of his mistress, and he had registered the deed also in her name. Their Lordships nevertheless held that the transaction was a benami one, and they considered the facts that the house was useless to the mistress for any personal use and was wholly inappropriate as a provision for her, and that there was no evidence of an intention to give the house to her, beyond the fact of the registration in her name. In the present case, however, there are reasons for believing that the transfer to Durga Dei of this property was particularly appropriate, as she had other property in the same District, and Kunj Behari has not only referred to her as the owner of the property in the sale-deed itself but in other documents. No direct reference has been made in Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1) to section 82 of the Indian Trusts Act, which is subsequent to the Privy Council ruling of 1854, but it has probably influenced the decision: "Where property is transferred to one person for a consideration paid or provided by another person, and it appears that such persons did not intend to pay or provide such consideration for the benefit of the transferee, the transferee must hold the property for the benefit of the person paying or providing the consideration."

RAJ KUNWAR V. MAHARAJ KUNWAR.

The words italicized appear to throw the burden of proving that a transaction is benami in such a case as the present on the plaintiff, whereas previously to that enactment of law, the position may well have been that a plaintiff who came into Court with proof that he had paid the consideration money himself would have been able to throw the burden of proving that the transaction was not benami on the other side. Reliance has been placed by the appellants on a decision in Bai Motiahoo v. Purshotam Dayal (2) in which it is said: "The presumption of advancement that would arise in England does not arise in India, the source from which the purchase-money was paid shifting the onus. Section 82 of the Trusts Act of 1882 does not diminish the effect of the Privy Council ruling" above cited. But I think that a purchase made by a Hindu husband from his own money in his wife's name, cannot be held sufficient evidence of intent to confer on her an absolute estate, merely because no special reason has been shown in the particular case for a practice so general in India." In that case the evidence was comparatively recent, and the learned Judges did not consider that it was sufficient to establish the intention to convey a gift. So far as the question of the burden of proof is concerned, the decision is certainly in favour of the appellants; but it appears to be at variance with the principle laid down in 1919 by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Muhammad Mahbub Ali Khan v. Bharat Indu (3): "Benami transactions are very familiar in Indian practice, and as Lord Hobhouse said in Uman Parshad v. Gandharp Singh (4) 'even a slight quantity of evidence to show that it was a sham transaction will suffice for the purpose.'" Their Lordships, however, added "Still, such a transfer cannot be considered as nothing, the person who impugns its apparent character must show something or other to establish that it is a benami or sham transaction." Moreover, their Lordships remark in the same judgment "The action is brought after years of possession, and when the principal parties to the transaction challenged..... are dead. This is a circumstance not without weight in such cases, and it involves a certain addition to that duty or onus of proof which, in benami cases, does undoubtedly rest upon the assertor." It may be mentioned in this connection that the learned Subordinate Judge referred with approval to recital from a judgment of 1884 which disposed of the suit brought by Mata Prasad against Kunj Behari in connection with the property concerned in this suit. That recital is to the effect that Kunj Behari intending to make his wife proprietor of the properties after they had become free from encumbrances purchased the mortgagee and leasehold rights. The question of whether such a recital may be used as evidence does not appear to have been finally decided in the ruling of the Calcutta High Court printed as Basi Nath Pal v. Jagat Kushore Acharjee (5) for as Lord Dunedin remarked in Midnapur Zemindari Co. v. Nares Narayan Roy (6): "It is the finding of a Court which was dealing with facts nearer to their ken than the facts are to the Board now, and it certainly creates a paramount duty on the appellants to displace the finding, a duty which they have not been able to perform."

We consider, therefore, that the appellants were faced with the task of proving that the transaction was a benami one, and that they were not relieved from this burden by being able to show that a large proportion of the consideration money was almost certainly paid by Kunj Behari. Their burden was greatly enhanced by the length of time that has passed since the transaction impugned. Beyond the inconclusive evidence as to the source of the consideration money, there is nothing to show that the property was not intended to be conveyed in fact to Thakurain Durga Dei. On the other hand we find not a little evidence that Musammât Durga Dei was intended to be the full owner of the property and that she really exercised possession over it. There is no evidence on the file as regards Kunj Behari's age or his expectation of life in 1882, when the sale-deed in favour of his wife was executed, but we know that he died in 1886 and that between 1882 and 1886 he referred in more than one deed to Durga Dei as owner and possessor of the property. In the mortgage-deed of 1885 in favour of Salig Ram, Durga Dei is named first of the three executants, who are described as owning and possessing the property, and of the others Suraj Bali had no interest in the property at all. It is quite possible, therefore, that Kunj Behari had also no interest in it. Mutation, as has already been remarked, was effected in Durga Dei's name, and we also find that notices for the ejectment of tenants were issued in her name, and that tenants contested these notices by suits filed against Durga Dei during Kunj Behari's lifetime. On the other hand no single act of ownership has been proved to have been performed by Kunj Behari. We consider, therefore, that Durga Dei has not been proved to be a benamidar and that the appeal must fail on this ground.

In view of the fact, however, that our judgment may be the subject of an appeal to a higher Tribunal we think it advisable to deal with the second part of the appellants' arguments, which are based on the assumption that the transaction is a benami one. We have, therefore, to assume for the moment that Durga Dei had no interest in the property except a widow's limited interest, which she acquired on Kunj Behari's death in 1886. The property was brought to sale in 1894 in execution of a decree obtained by Salig Ram on the basis of the mortgage-of 1885 to which reference has already been made. Salig Ram in 1890 instituted a suit against Durga Dei "herself and as the heir of her deceased husband Kunj Behari Lal," and Suraj Bali, and prayed for a decree for Rs 30,000 by sale of the property hypothecated and also against the person of the defendants; and he obtained a decree on December 2nd, 1890. In the meantime Bala Prasad had also sued Durga Dei on the basis of two bonds, the first of which was a mortgage bond hypothecating not the property in suit but Durga Dei's own private property in Gonda, and also some villages in Basti which had been the property of Kunj Behari. Bala Prasad made an application for execution of his decree in October 1891, in which he stated that as he could not obtain satisfaction of his decree from the property mortgaged, he might be allowed rateable distribution of the sale-proceeds of the property attached in Salig Ram's decree. This was allowed, and when the property was eventually put up for sale in 1894 the sale-proceeds, Rs 17,700, were applied in the first place to the payment of Salig Ram's decree and secondly to the payment of Bala Prasad's. It may be noted here that the accounts filed by these two decree-holders show that the amount then owing to Salig Ram was Rs 5,867-7 and to Bala Prasad Rs 7,008-6.

We have been asked on behalf of the appellants to hold in the first place that Salig Ram's decree was not a mortgage decree. The form of the decree is certainly incorrect, as it is not a preliminary decree and no final decree was ever framed. The District Judge simply ordered that a decree be granted ex parte against the two defendants (Suraj Bali was the other defendant but execution was never enforced against him and he afterwards appeared as agent for Bala Prasad who is his son and bought in the property at the auction sale). The Judge's order added that the decree could be executed by sale of the villages hypothecated. It is argued that this could not be considered as an order for a mortgage decree, not only on account of the form, but because the property was attached, and because in the Court's statement of property proposed for sale a list of subsequent mortgages is entered. This last circumstance, however, is explained by the fact that the subsequent mortgages were all usufructuary and the mortgagees were in possession. For the rest the decisions referred to by the respondents—[Lal Behary Singh v. Habibur Rahman (7), Muthukaruppan Chatti v. Chinnasawamy Pillai (8), Totaldas v. Utumal Thakurmali (9), and Pahalwan Singh v. Narain Das (10)]—are sufficient to show that the decree must be regarded as a mortgage decree. The point, however, is not of vital importance because we are of opinion that in deciding whether a sale in execution of that decree would bind the reversioners, we shall have to look beyond the decree to the form of the suit or possibly even to the terms of the bond itself. Jugal Kishore v. Jotendra Mohun Tagore (11), Subbammal v. Arudaiyammal (12) and Veerabadra Aiyar v. Marudaga Nachiar (13). The principle underlying these decisions appears to be this. If the form of the suit is a claim based on a mortgage-deed, the widow in defending such a suit is acting in defence of the estate and on behalf of the reversioners, whereas if the form of the suit is a claim on a personal bond she could not be held to be acting on behalf of the reversioners. In the present case, it cannot be denied that the plaintiff represented a claim based on a mortgage-deed, and Durga Dei must be held to have represented the reversioners. If we go still further back to the bond itself the case becomes clearer still, because Kunj Behari was one of the executants of the deed. As he was, according to the present line of argument, the owner of the estate it can hardly be denied that a genuine debt which would be binding on him would also bind his personal estate. So far as Salig Ram's decree is concerned, therefore, the sale must undoubtedly be held to be binding on the reversioners. The case of Bala Prasad's decree is different. This decree was based on two bonds, one of which was a mortgage bond but the property mortgaged was not that in suit, and, therefore, the form of the suit is no safe criterion. This mortgage bond and this simple money bond were both executed by Durga Dei herself. The mortgage bond was for Rs. 7,000, the ostensible object of the loan being the payment of the debt of Kunj Behari, and the money bond was for Rs. 1,000 which was to be used for Durga Dei's own purposes. As neither of these bonds created any charge on the estate in suit they must both be considered as mere money bonds. It is argued for the appellants that as such they cannot bind the reversioners. There is authority for this view, because in Kallu v. Faiyaz Ali Khan (14) it was held that a widow's personal bond even for legal necessity does not bind her husband's property. Reference has also been made to Baij Nath v. Sheoraj Singh (15) but that decision is not really relevant. On the other hand the view taken in the Madras case which has already been quoted [Veerabadra Aiyar v. Marudaga Nachiar (13)] is that the question is to be decided by the nature of the debt, and even if the debt could have bound the whole estate, the widow's personal bond is sufficient to bind the reversioner. There is, however, in the present case no reliable evidence that the debt would have bound the estate. The respondents have pointed to the wording of the deed, which shows that Durga Dei borrowed the money for the payment of the debt of her deceased husband. The value of such a recital has been now well defined by their Lordships of the Privy Council, whose latest decision on the point is reported as Nanda Lal Dhur Biswas v. Jagat Kishore Acharyya (16): "It is well established that such recitals cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertions of fact which they contain; the recital is clear evidence of the representation, and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible the recital coupled with such circumstances would be sufficient evidence to support the deed." The respondents rely on the mere recital that the money was borrowed to pay Kunj Behari's debts, combined with the circumstances that Kunj Behari is known to have been borrowing money for some years and that the recital is now over 30 years old, but Kunj Behari according to the evidence on the file possessed a good deal of property and there is nothing to show that he was in great need of money. Moreover, although the bond was executed some 35 years before the institution of the suit, it is by no means clear that the production of other reliable evidence on the point was impossible. It appears an undoubted fact that the older the recitals are the less need there is for confirmation by other circumstances, and in the case with which the Privy Council were dealing in the decision already quoted, the recitals were 60 years old. On the whole we consider that the learned Subordinate Judge was not justified in deciding that so far as Bala Prasad's decree is concerned, sale was binding on the reversioners, and as for the balance it must be presumed to have been handed over to Durga Dei for her own uses. If we had been called on to decide the appeal on these issues, therefore, we should have had to find that the reversioners were only bound to the extent of Rs. 5,887-7 and that they would have been entitled to recover possession of the property in suit on payment of that amount. As it is we find that the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—These two appeals arise out of two suits, the plaintiffs in one suit being the defendants in the other, in respect of the right of shebaitship of a Thakur named Radha Benode Jew. The facts which are necessary for the determination of these appeals are these:—Thakur Radha Gobinda Jew was the family diety of one Man Govinda Banerjee who had only a turn in the worship of the said Thakur and his agnate relations were also co-shebais with him. The Thakur had some debutter lands dedicated by the ancestors of Man Gobinda of about 120 bighas in area. Man Gobinda had no children. By a registered Will executed in 1306 he appointed one Tarak Nath Chatterjee and his heirs to act shebais of the Thakur after his and his wife's death. Dissatisfied with the conduct of Tarak, Man Govinda, when he was about 70 years old, by an arpannamah executed in 1308, dedicated certain immoveable properties in favour of the family Thakur for the better performance of the worship during his turn of worship, and also for the annual festivals of the Thakur and by the said deed he provided that, during his life he shall continue to be the shebait and after his death his widow will succeed to the office and then on her death, his agnate relatives, the plaintiffs in Suit No. 1951 of 1919 and their heirs in succession will become the shebais in his place. In 1316 Man Gobinda executed another deed of gift by which he dedicated some further immoveable properties to the said Thakur and made a gift of his right as a shebait of his turn of the worship in favour of one Nil Kumari Devi, the mother of the Chatterjees the plaintiff in Suit No. 2094 of 1919. This gift was given immediate effect and Nil Kumari Devi was installed as shebait in his own place and she managed the dedicated properties and acted as shebait of the Thakur. It appears that in a rent suit in 1911, while Man Gobinda was still alive she was made a party in that suit and she was treated as a co-shebait, taking the place of Man Gobinda, by the other co-shebais of the Thakur. Man Gobinda died in 1319 and his widow died in 1320. Then a dispute broke out between the parties as to the possession of the properties dedicated to the Thakur by Man Gobinda, and it culminated in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code with the result that the Banerjees were maintained in possession of 6 bighas and the Chatterjees, the heirs of Nil Kumari, were maintained in possession of 2 bighas of the endowed lands. Each party brought a suit with respect to the land which was declared in possession of the other under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. As I have already stated the Banerjees brought Suit No. 1951 and the Chatterjees brought Suit No. 2094 both of 1919, the plaintiffs in one suit being the defendant in the other. Both the Courts below have found in favour of the Banerjees and, therefore, decreed Suit No. 1951 and dismissed the Suit No. 2094. The Chatterjees have brought these second appeals against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge of Assansol who affirmed the decree of the Munsif of the said place.

SRIPATI CHATTERJEE V. KHUDIRAM BANERJEE.

Both the Courts came to the conclusion that the appointment of the Banerjees by the arpannamah of 1308 was not revocable by Man Gobinda and, therefore, the subsequent appointment of Nil Kumari by the deed of gift of 1316 was invalid. Consequently the Banerjee were declared as the shebait of the Thakur of the dedicated properties and as such they got a decree for possession of the lands held by the Chatterjees whose suit was dismissed.

The Subordinate Judge further finds that the gift by Man Gobinda to Nil Kumari was operative so long as he was alive; and that Nil Kumari acted as shebait even during the lifetime of Man Gobinda and that she was treated as a co-shebait by the other *shebait*s of the family Thakur. It is then observed by the learned Subordinate Judge that "the god was not the property of Man Gobinda alone" and later on he says: "Man Gobinda was not the founder of god or of god's estate, he added to that estate, with the consensus of all the *shebait*s this change in the succession was not made." It is difficult to follow what the learned Judge meant to decide on the basis of his observations that Man Gobinda was not the founder and that he was one of the many *shebait*s. If the learned Subordinate Judge was thinking that a subsequent shebait has no right, although he might make additional gifts to a family Thakur, to alter the rule of succession established by the founder, then Man Gobinda had no authority to appoint either the Chatterjees or the Banerjees who base their claim only on the arpanammah and not on their right as the successor of the original founder who apparently has more successors than the Banerjees, the plaintiffs in Suit No. 1951. It was the common case of the parties that Man Gobinda could and did appoint *shebait*s with reference to the properties dedicated by himself and also by his ancestors but the question as to the validity of such appointment has not been determined having regard to the fact that Man Gobinda was merely a co-shebait. Upon the facts admitted by the parties and on the findings arrived at by the lower Appellate Court the following questions arise and must be decided before the rights of the parties can be determined.

(1) Was the appointment of the Banerjees by the deed of 1308 revocable by Man Gobinda?

(2) Was the appointment of Nil Kumari and her heirs as *shebait*s in the place of the Banerjees by the deed of 1316 valid?

(3) What is the effect of the two deeds in respect to the lands dedicated by Man Gobinda by these deeds?

In order to answer the above mentioned questions, it is necessary to bear in mind some of the general principles as regards the endowments made in favour of a family Thakur. The gift of land to the service of the diety was not only permitted but highly extolled for inducing pious men to make such dedication: "The bestower of skin-of land to Vishnu is promised fortune and prosperity for seven births, he who dedicates a field or a house for the enjoyment of Vishnu is released from all sins". See Hemadri-dankhaida quoted by Pran Nath Saraswati in his Tagore Law Lectures, p. 137. There are numerous such other texts, and it is unnecessary to multiply them. The Thakur could not obviously enjoy any property unless, some one manages the same for him and utilises the income for his worship. This is usually done by the appointment of a shebait. In an early case, the Judicial Committee said as follows:—"The taluk itself, with which these jamas were by tenure, was dedicated to the religious services of the idol. The rents constituted, therefore, in legal contemplation its property. The shebait had not the legal property, but only the title of manager of a religious endowment." See Maharanees Shibessourree Debea v. Mathooranath Acharjo, (1).

In the case of Prosunna Kumari Debya v. Golab Chand Baboo (2) the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council referred to the case of Maharanees Shibessourree Debea v. Mathooranath Acharjo (1) and said as follows:—"The authority of the shebait of an idol's estate would appear to be in this respect analogous to that of a manager for an infant heir, which was thus defined in the case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooe Munraj Koonweree, (3)". On these authorities, it is clear that the dedicated properties belong to the Thakur and that the shebait is a mere officer and has no right therein. The gift to the Thakur is absolute and cannot be revoked nor can any one misappropriate it. "He who seizes the subsistence of the gods or priests whether given by himself or another is born a reptile for a million of years". Macnaughton's Principles of Hindu Law, Vol. II, p. 305. It is now settled law that the appointment and succession to the office of a shebait must follow the line laid down in the original grant and in the absence of special direction and usage the heirs of the donor succeed. See Gossami Sri Gridharji v. Romanlalji Gossami (4) also Kali Krishna Roy v. Makhan Lal (5) and Ananda Chandra Chakravarti v. Broja Lal Singh (6).

The right of a pujari of the Thakur is not that of a shebait and he is merely a servant appointed by the shebait for the performance of the ceremonies. See Ananda Chandra Chakravarti v. Broja Lal Singh (6).

Now it may be borne in mind that the rule laid down in the Jotendromohun Tagore v. Ganendromohun Tagore [The Tagore case], (7) prohibiting a Hindu from creating a special line of succession unknown to Hindu Law does not apply to the case of appointment of a shebait of a family Thakur and the reason is obvious, for an appointment to such an office creates no interest in property. Narain Ganguly (8). The appointment of a shebait, therefore, is obviously not a gift of any property to the shebait but it is purely an appointment to an office without, it may be, any remuneration whatsoever. The dedication to a Thakur is irrevocable but on what principle can it be said that the appointment of a shebait for the management of an endowed property is also irrevocable by the donor although it is unalterable after his death by a succeeding shebait of the Thakur. If the donor during his lifetime cancels the previous appointment and appoints a new person, on what ground can the dismissed nominee enforce his right?

From the authorities, which I have quoted, the rules which, in my opinion, are laid down and are deducible are these: First. That the dedication to the Thakur is irrevocable. Second: The rules laid down for the worship of the Thakur and for the management of the charities, if any connected with the endowment, are binding. Third: That the rule laid down for the appointment of *shebait*s and their succession in the deed of endowment are binding. Fourth: That the shebait had no right to the property but is merely an officer with the rights and limitations as are applicable to the guardian of a minor. Fifth: That the rules laid down in the deed of endowment are binding and are unalterable after the death of the donor by an successor in estate of office. Sixth: That the office of a shebait is not transferable either by sale or gift. See Raja Vurmah Valia v. Rani Vurmah Kunhi Kutty (9) and Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadhi v. Velu Pandaram (10). Seventh: That the gift in favour of a co-shebait has been recognised. See Radha Rani Dasi v. Doyal Chand Mullick (11) but this is not allowed except on the ground that such transfers are for the benefit of the endowment. See Gobinda Kumar Roy Chowdhury v. Debendra Kumar Roy Chowdhury (12).

There is no authority, so far as I know, with the exception of a case which I shall discuss later, nor is there anything on principle which would stand in the way of the donor to alter the appointment of a shebait to the office or the rules regulating the worship except on the ground that the donor has expressly precluded himself from doing so or that such an alteration affects some right of property of the shebait so appointed or the right of a third party which had already been created; provided always that any such alterations do not affect any of the fundamental gifts. So far as I know, such alterations, as stated above, are frequently made, and if not allowed, may lead to needless complications and difficulties and it may be observed that Man Gobinda himself, executed three deeds by which he changed the *shebait*s from time to time. Ordinarily these appointments are without remuneration, and *shebait*s are appointed in many instances without their knowledge or consent and consequently *shebait*s so appointed are not bound to accept the office. Tarak Nath Chatterjee, who was appointed by Man Gobinda in 1306, refused to act and then the Banerjees were appointed.

It is needless to point out that all the *shebait*s if they agree and if it is for the benefit of the endowment may introduce changes without changing the rules of the founder in any vital matter.

In this case the appointment of the Banerjees was to take effect after Man Gobinda's death and his widow's death. It was not an appointment which had taken immediate effect, it was in the nature of a testamentary arrangement to come into effect after his death and after the death of his widow. If the appointment was to a mere office, as I think it was, I do not see any reason why Man Gobinda could not alter what was really a testamentary provisions. A donor may think a particular person was a fit and proper person, at the time when he executed the deed, why can he not take a different view as to the fitness of that individual before he died. Take the analogy of the testamentary appointment of a guardian of a minor. Surely the testator can alter it by a subsequent Will.

The learned Vakil for the respondent relied upon the case of Gouri Kumari Dasi v. Ranimoyi Dasi (13) in support of his contention that the appointment of the Banerjees was irrevocable. The learned Judges held that "the creator of a debutter could not make any change in the order of succession of shebait unless he had made a reservation to that effect in the deed." On the principles and authorities I have discussed, the appointment being an appointment to an office of the peculiar kind as indicated above I am inclined to think that the power should be presumed to exist unless expressly given up. In the present case the Courts below have held that the deed of 1308 contains provisions by which Man Gobinda precluded himself from making any further change. Although I feel considerable doubt as to the construction put upon the deed, I do not, however, feel justified in holding that both the Courts are clearly wrong in the view taken by them as to the effect of Bengali deed. Man Gobinda consequently precluded himself by terms of the deed of 1398 from revoking the appointment of the Banerjee as shebait for the management of 6 bighas of land endowed by that deed. In this view of the matter, the case of Gouri Kumari Dasi v. Ranimoyi Dasi (13) is in support of the decision of this case.

What then is the effect of these two deeds as to the rights of the contending parties in the additional endowments made by Man Gobinda?

Before we can answer this question another question arises and that is this: Could Man Gobinda appoint a new line of *shebait*s to a family diety who was established by his ancestor and the line of successors after the death of that ancestor seem to be his heirs? In the present case it appears that the legal heirs of the donor are the *shebait*s of the old endowment. It is clear on the authorities, Man Gobinda who had only a turn in the worship could not alter the line already established but without doing that could he fix a new line for the property endowed by himself? That he could appoint the new *shebait*s so far as his own endowments are concerned, as I have already said, is the common case of both the parties but how are these appointments valid.

Additional endowments are frequently made to a family, diety by the descendants of the original donor and this is highly desirable and is to the benefit of the Thakur and I am of opinion that there is no objection to the donor appointing a new line of *shebait*s for the management of the property dedicated by himself. But he cannot alter any of the rules laid down specifically by the founder. Such new shebait may manage the property and he would be ordinarily allowed to place the income in the hands of the *shebait*s under the original founder's rules. If the old *shebait*s agree, the new shebait may act as a joint shebait as Nil Kumari was allowed to do from 1316 to 1320. The cardinal points to be kept in view in these matters are, first that additional endowments are for the benefit of the Thakur. Secondly, that the new endowment and the rules laid down for its management and the use of the income should not be in any way inconsistent with the rules and usage of the original foundation in any material particular. In this connection see the case of Pradyumna Kumar Mullik v. Pramatha Nath Mullik (14). The Thakur in the nature of the thing, cannot express any view, he must speak through the *shebait*s who have the control of the original endowment.

As I have already stated, Man Gobinda by the deed executed in 1316 endowed additional lands, and appointed Nil Kumari the shebait even of the land covered by the deed of 1308 and put her in immediate possession of both the properties and Nil Kumari was accepted as shebait by all the *shebait*s under the original endowment, including the Banerjees, who are the plaintiffs in Suit No. 1951.

As I have pointed out before, the deed of 1316 made an additional endowment of some more properties including 2 bighas the subject-matter of the suit instituted by the Banerjees. On the principle already discussed and accepted, there was nothing to prevent Man Gobinda to appoint Nil Kumari and her heirs as shebait of these additional endowed properties. I am clearly of opinion, that the right created in favour of Nil Kumari has not ceased on the death of Man Gobinda's widow and that under the circumstances the Banerjees have no right under which they could recover possession of the properties in the hands of Nil Kumari's heirs. The deed of 1308 deals only with 6 bighas and not the 2 bighas granted in 1316. Additional endowments, if allowed, must be accepted with the terms and conditions in the deed but subject always to the limitation that such endowments are for the benefit of the Thakur and the new rules are not inconsistent with the rules already made.

Then let us see how the matter really stands. As regards the shebait-ship of the Thakur, as created by the original founder, Man Gobinda could not alter it either in favour of the Banerjees who are only some of the heirs of the founder nor could he alter in favour of Nil Kumari who was not a member of the family. So far as the properties endowed by him by the deed of 1308, Banerjees were appointed *shebait*s and Man Gobinda was not competent by the terms of the deed to alter this appointment, under which the Banerjees are entitled to manage the 6 bighas of land endowed by the deed of 1308 but the Banerjees had no right as *shebait*s to the property created debutter by the deed of 1316, by which Nil Kumari and her heirs were appointed. What both the Banerjees and Chatterjees are performing the pujas and are in possession of some of the lands.

What the effect of the acceptance of Nil Kumari as a co-shebait by the other shebait, is, need not be considered in this case because that question relates to the shebailship of the Thakur under the original grant and I have that question open for decision if and when occasion arises for its determination in the presence of all the necessary parties.

The result of the foregoing considerations, is that both the suits must fail and should be dismissed with costs throughout. Appeal No. 764 of 1922 is allowed with costs in all Courts, and Appeal No. 765 of 1922 is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Tinnevely, in Appeal Suit No. 85 of 1921 (A. S. No. 63 of 1920 on the file of the District Court of Tinnevely) presented against the decree of the Court of the Additional Temporary District Munsif, Tinnevely, in O. S. No. 108 of 1919 (O. S. No. 34 of 1918 on the file of the Court, of the District Munsif, Koilpatti).

Mr. K. S. Sankara Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question argued in this second appeal is whether the third mortgagee is entitled to priority over the second mortgagee. There were three mortgages, one of 1900, in favour of one Veerappa Naick Exhibit B, another in 1904 in favour of the second defendant Exhibit I, and the third in favour of the plaintiff in 1912; Exhibit C. Veerappa Naick brought a suit and obtained a decree without impleading the second defendant as a party. In order to discharge the decree the mortgagor borrowed from the plaintiff Rs 3,350 on 28th July 1912 and paid the amount to Veerappa's Vakil in discharge of the decree-debt. The mortgage-deed, Exhibit C, in favour of the plaintiff was executed on 16th August 1912 and the stamp paper for the deed was purchased on 27th July 1912.

Both the lower Courts have found in favour of the plaintiff's contention that he is entitled to priority over the second mortgagee.

It has been urged before me that the plaintiff is a volunteer and that he had no subsisting interest on the date of his mortgage to enable him to get the benefit of the principle of subrogation and that in order to stand in the shoes of the first mortgagee Veerappa Naick, the plaintiff, ought to have had an interest in the mortgaged property before he discharged the amount due to Veerappa, and reliance is placed on Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh (1) and Govinda Padayachi v. Lokanatha Aiyar (2). In Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrikah Singh (1) the learned Judge observes "That principle is, that subrogation as a matter of right is never applied in aid of a mere volunteer. Legal substitution into the rights of a creditor for the benefit of a third person takes place only for his benefit, who, being himself a creditor, satisfies the lien of a prior creditor, or for the benefit of a purchaser, who extinguishes the encumbrances upon his estate, or of a co-obligor or surety, who discharges the debt, or of an heir, who pays the debts of the succession. Any one, who is under no legal obligation or liability to pay the debt, he is a mere volunteer." Now the question is whether a person who advances money for the purpose of getting a mortgage and pays the consideration for the mortgage of a prior encumbrancer is a volunteer or not. The authorities cited by the learned Vakils for the appellant do not support him in the contention that the mortgagee who pays off the prior encumbrance is a volunteer. In Govinda Padayachi v. Lokanatha Aiyar (2) the learned Judges find that the person who claimed priority did not get any title to the property. At page 120*, they observe, "Their claim, therefore, rests only on the fact that they made payments to free property from encumbrances in the belief that in the future they might acquire from a third party an interest in that property, by which their payments could be justified. On those facts no authority supports their claim to reimbursement." The case of Karuppa Ambalagaran v. Muhammad Sakuth (3) does not support the appellant's contention. In Pingali Venkataramana Reddi v. Kotigari Rangian Chetty (4) also, the person who claimed to stand in the shoes of a prior encumbrancer was a volunteer. That a person who takes a mortgage interest or any other interest on the property is entitled to keep alive a prior encumbrance which he pays off requires no authority. In Butler v. Rice (5) the facts were that the plaintiff advanced £450 on the representation of Mr. Rice that the property was his and that the Bank had lien on the property. The plaintiff paid off the debt due to the Bank and got possession of the title-deeds. It turned out afterwards that the property did really belong to his wife Mrs. Rice. Warrington, J., on the facts held that the plaintiff was entitled to priority in respect of the amount paid by him to the Bank. The learned Judge observes at page 282: "The statement of claim proceeds on the well-known equitable doctrine that if a stranger pays off a mortgage on an estate he presumably does not intend to discharge that mortgage, but to keep it alive for his own benefit. The statement of claim asks for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to a charge on the Manor Road property for £450 and interest at 5 per cent. The charge referred to is the Bank's charge, which the plaintiff says was kept on foot in his favour, and the question is whether his position is well-founded. In the first place I find from the facts I have stated that it was not the intention of the plaintiff, nor indeed is it possible to suppose that any sensible man would have such an intention, to discharge the property from the debt. There are only two questions which have to be dealt with in order to arrive at the further conclusion that in equity the debt is still kept alive. The first is this: is it material that the owner of the property, the mortgagor, has not requested the person who paid the money to make the payment? and secondly, is the plaintiff's right affected by the further intention that, when the transaction was fully carried out, his position should be secured by a legal mortgage for £300 and a guarantee £150? In that case the learned Judge held that, even if Mr. Rice was not a party to the transaction, the plaintiff was entitled to stand in the shoes of the Bank so far as the amount which he paid to discharge the debt due to the Bank was concerned. It is unnecessary to refer to all the cases quoted at the Bar. It is sufficient to refer to the case reported as Ram Narayan Singh v. Sahadeo Singh (6) the facts of which are very similar to those of the present. In that case it was held that mortgagee who advanced money to pay off prior encumbrances was entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the prior encumbrancer. The learned Judges rely on the Privy Council decision in Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (7) and Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (8). Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the latter case feel no difficulty in holding that "the law remains as it certainly was before the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, namely, that an owner of a property who is in the rights of a first mortgagee and the original mortgagor, as acquired at a sale under the first mortgage is entitled at the suit of a subsequent mortgagee who is not bound by the sale or the decree on which it proceeded to set up the first mortgage as a shield." I find against the appellant so far as this contention is concerned.

The next contention is that section 47 is a bar to this suit, I do not see how section 47 can be a bar. When a person wants to have the benefit of the discharge of a prior encumbrance he can only bring a suit on the prior encumbrance; he cannot claim to be substituted for the plaintiff in the mortgage-decree obtained by the prior encumbrancer and execute the decree. The amount due to the prior encumbrance having been paid off, there can possibly be no decree which has to be realised by execution. That being so, a suit is the only remedy. This point is set at rest by the decision in Sundara Reddiar v. Subbiah Koundan (9).

In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Time for redemption by the appellant three months.

Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act (II of 1913), s. 49K—Sale of tenure of aboriginal, whether nullity—Waiver of provisions of Act—Application to set aside sale—Limitation—Interpretation of Statute—Statute for benefit of particular class—Public policy

A sale of the tenure of an aboriginal in execution of a decree in contravention of the provisions of section 49K of the Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act of 1913 is a nullity [p. 850, col. 1].

The Bengal Tenancy (Amendment) Act of 1913 was enacted with the object of protecting the aboriginals against indiscreet transactions. It is not, therefore, open to an aboriginal to waive the benefit of the provisions of the Act [ibid].

The question of limitation arises only where a sale is a valid sale until it is set aside, it does not arise where the sale is altogether void [ibid].

When the provisions of a Statute have been contravened, if a question arises as to how far the proceedings are affected by such contravention the matter must be determined with regard to

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter, (with him Mr. J. M. Mitra), for the Appellant.
Babu Pyarimohan Chatterjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question involved in this appeal is whether a sale held in contravention of the provisions of the Bengal Act II of 1918 is merely an irregular sale or a nullity.

The appellant obtained a decree for money against the respondent who is an aboriginal residing in the District of Midnapore, to which the Act applies, and in execution of the decrees put up, has tenure to sale and purchased it himself on the 20th August 1920. An application was made to set aside the sale on the 13th January 1922. It was far beyond the period prescribed by Art. 166 of the Limitation Act or even Art. 12 of the Limitation Act. The Courts below, having come to the conclusion that the sale was a nullity, overruled the objection of limitation and set aside the sale.

The decree-holders have appealed to this Court and it is contended that the sale was not a nullity and that the provisions of the Act having been made for the benefit of a particular class of persons and not for the general public, the respondents could waive the irregularity of the sale and the sale, therefore, was not altogether invalid. We have been referred to certain observations made by Mookerjee, J., in the case of

Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behari Lal Kirtanta

(1). The learned Judge observes:—"When the object of the Statute has been determined, if the statutory provision is not based on grounds of public policy, and is intended only for the benefit of a particular person or class of persons the conditions prescribed by the Statute are not considered as indispensable and may be waived, because every one has a right to waive, and to agree to waive, the advantage of a law or rule made solely for the benefit and protection of the individual in his private capacity, and which may be dispensed with without infringement of any public right or policy. The mere fact that the statutory provisions are intended for the benefit of a class of persons does not necessarily show that it is not based on grounds of public policy. As was observed by Lord Campbell, L. C., in Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner (2), that "No universal rule can be laid down for the construction of Statutes, as to whether mandatory enactments shall be considered directory only or obligatory with an implied nullification for disobedience. It is the duty of Courts of Justice to try to get at the real intention of the Legislature by carefully attending to the whole scope of the Statute to be construed" and in the case of Rajani Kanta Ghose v. Sheikh Rahaman Gari (3), Mr. Justice Mookerjee observes:—"The only rule that may be adopted is, that when the provisions of a Statute have been contravened, if a question arises as to how far the proceedings are affected by such contravention, the matter must be determined with regard to the nature, scope and object of the particular provision which has been violated. No hard and fast line can be drawn between a nullity and an irregularity. We, therefore, have to consider the object of the Act. The preamble states:—"Whereas it is expedient to supplement and amend the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885." (Section 49B, of the Act lays down, "No transfer by an aboriginal tenure-holder, raiyyat or under-raiyyat of his right in his tenure or holding, or in any portion thereof, by private sale, gift, Will, mortgage, lease or any contract or agreement, shall be valid to any extent except as provided in this Chapter."

The voluntary alienation, therefore, is absolutely prohibited except as provided for in that Chapter, and section 49 K lays down "Notwithstanding anything in this Act, no decree or order shall be passed by any Court for the sale of the right of an aboriginal tenure-holder, raiyyat or under-raiyyat in his tenure or holding, or in any portion thereof, nor shall any such right be sold in execution of any decree or order." There are certain provisos to which we need not refer. Section 49K, therefore, clearly lays down that there shall be no decree for sale of a tenure of an aboriginal and no sale shall be held in execution of a decree except a rent-decree and certain other cases mentioned in the proviso. It is not reasonable to hold that the Legislature having enacted that there shall be no voluntary alienation by an aboriginal to any extent except as provided in this Chapter should allow an involuntary sale in the same Chapter. The enactment is for the protection of the aboriginals against any indiscreet transaction. That being the object of the enactment, we think it was not open to him to waive the benefit of the provisions. We do not think that the mere fact that the enactment was made for the benefit of a class of persons, viz., the aboriginals in certain district, shows that that it was not on the ground of public policy. We are, therefore, of opinion that the sale was a nullity and, if the sale is altogether void, the question of limitation does not arise. That question arises where the sale is a valid sale until it is set aside, as it was in the case of Malkarjun v. Narkari (4). Having regard to the view taken by us that the sale in the present case was not an irregular sale but a void one, we are of opinion that the application is not barred by limitation.

Contract Act (IX of 1873), ss. 95, 96, 107—Sale of goods—Vendee's failure to take delivery—Repudiation of contract—Vendor's lien on goods sold—Re-sale

If a sale of goods is on credit and no time is fixed for delivery, the vendor has no lien and the vendee is entitled to immediate delivery. But where the vendee fails to take delivery within the time fixed and repudiates the contract, he cannot take advantage of the provisions of section 96, Contract Act. The general provision of section 95 of the Act giving the seller a lien on sold goods remaining in his possession has effect unless some exception applies, and the vendor in such a case has a right under section 107, to re-sell the goods and recover the loss from the vendee. [p. 851, col. 1.]

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Calicut, in S. O. S. No. 138 of 1922.

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs allege that they sold 2,500 cocoanuts to defendants at Rs. 41 a thousand, that the defendants agreed to remove the cocoanuts from plaintiffs' warehouse within four days, that the defendants did not remove them and, therefore, plaintiffs after notice to defendants sold the cocoanuts by auction at Rs. 35 a thousand. Plaintiffs sued defendants for the amount of the loss on the re-sale. Defendants denied the sale to them, but the Subordinate Judge made a decree for plaintiffs as sued for. Defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 4 pray for revision.

It is urged before me that there was no completed contract between the parties but only negotiations for the sale of the cocoanuts at Rs. 41 a thousand from plaintiff and that even if defendants agree to buy 25000 cocoanuts, those cocoanuts were never ascertained and appropriated to the sale from among the cocoanuts in plaintiffs' warehouse. But on examining the record, I find that there is evidence, not only that defendant No. 4, on behalf of defendants, agreed to buy 25,000 cocoanuts at Rs. 41, but also that he inspected the cocoanuts at the plaintiffs' warehouse, where they were stored in one lot, and agreed to take that lot. The Subordinate Judge was entitled to find on that evidence that the sale was complete.

The only other point urged for defendants is that plaintiffs had no right to re-sell the cocoanuts. The argument is that they could do that under section 107 of the Contract Act, only if they had a lien on the cocoanuts and that in this case they had no lien, as it does not appear that any definite time was fixed for payment. For this defendants' Vakil relied on section 96 of the Contract Act. Under that section, if the sale was on credit and no time was fixed for delivery, then plaintiffs would have no lien and defendants would have been entitled to immediate delivery. But in this case, the time for taking delivery passed and defendants repudiated the contract. If the sale was on credit, as appears to have been the case, defendants would have had the right to immediate delivery, against which plaintiffs could not have set up any lien. But as defendants failed to take delivery within the time fixed and repudiated the contract, they cannot take advantage of the provisions of section 96 which give the buyer a right to delivery without payment in certain circumstances. The general provision of section 95 of the Act giving the seller a lien on sold goods remaining in his possession has effect unless some exception applies. In the present case the Subordinate Judge was right in finding that plaintiffs were entitled to re-sell the cocoanuts and to recover the loss from defendants.

The petition is dismissed with costs of respondents Nos 1 and 2.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877); s. 42—Declaratory suit—Consequential relief, question of—Duty of Court

It is not open to a Court to dismiss a suit filed under section 42, Specific Relief Act, on the ground that a mere declaration will not suffice, without taking evidence and going into the facts. [p. 852, col. 1.]

Babu Narendra Kumar Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff against a decision of the District Judge of Chittagong, confirming a decision of the First Subordinate Judge. The facts necessary for the understanding of this appeal are as follows. The present plaintiff in the year 1914 commenced a suit for partition and his brother who was a party in that suit filed a written statement. At this stage friends of the parties intervened and the plaintiffs' case is that he was induced by misrepresentations to sign a solenama compromising the matters in this suit. Then the plaintiff commenced the suit out of which this appeal arises and in this suit he asked for a declaration that the decree based on the solenama filed in the partition suit might be declared null and void and inoperative as having been obtained by undue influence, coercion and fraud. This was what the plaintiff asked for in this suit and he asked for nothing else. When the matter came before the First Subordinate Judge of Chittagong he said without taking any evidence that such a suit would not lie having regard to the provisions of section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and he also stated that the suit was not properly valued, the suit having been filed on a Court-fee of Rs. 10. Against this decision an appeal was preferred to the District Judge and he stated that the appeal was not maintainable having regard to the fact that only a Court-fee of Rs. 10 had been paid and he referred to the provisions of the Court Fees Act. It seems to us that the decisions of both the Courts were wrong. It was not, we think, having regard to the decision in Gokul Nath Jiu v. The New Barbhun Coal Co., Ltd. (1), open to the First Court to say that the suit did not lie without going into the facts and considering the relief that was asked and this being so, it was not open to the lower Appellate Court to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground upon which it was dismissed. It may be, as the respondents contend, that it will ultimately be found that the suit does not lie as a mere declaration will not suffice. But this is a matter that has to be decided after the facts have been ascertained and the Judge is in a position to deal with the point upon the facts as ascertained. The appellant before us contends that no consequential relief is necessary. He may be right or he may be wrong but it appears to us that it is impossible for the Court to decide the matter as the First Court purported to decide it without ascertaining the facts.

(1) 80 Ind. Cas. 589, 27 C. W. N. 972; (1924) A. I. R. (C) 153.

In the circumstances, we allow the appeal and the matter must go back to the First Court in order that the suit may be registered and dealt with on its merits. After that has been done if an appeal results it will then be possible to say whether a second appeal lies or not or whether having regard to the value of the suit there should be a first appeal to this Court, if appeal there be.

The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court. Costs of the lower Appellate Court will abide the result.

Chakravarti, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 36, 161—Inherent jurisdiction, scope of—Suit, when to be stayed—Transfer—Test—Suit, vexatious and oppressive

Appeals to the inherent jurisdiction of the Court have to be regarded, with the greatest caution. But if after exercising such caution the Court is clearly of opinion that the jurisdiction ought to be exercised, it should not be intimidated from so doing because no case on all fours is forthcoming from the reported decisions in the various High Courts. [p. 855, col. 2.]

The Court will interfere to prevent vexatious proceedings which would have the effect of preventing the due administration of justice. [p. 856, col. 1.]

Mulchand Raichand v. Gill & Co., 53 Ind. Cas. 518, 21 Bom. L. R. 963 at p. 966 and McHenry v. Lewis, (1882) 22 Ch. D. 397, 52 L. J. Ch. 325; 47 L. T. 549, 31 W. R. 305, followed.

Section 25 of the Civil Procedure Code does not apply or at any rate should not be confined to objection to a particular Judge personally. The objection must apply to the High Court as a whole. [p. 860, col. 2.]

The test for a transfer is much the same as for a stay of suit under section 161 of the Civil Procedure Code or alternatively the rather more lenient test adopted in section 527 of the Criminal Procedure Code [p. 860, col. 2].

Plaintiffs who carried on business in Bombay, Rangoon and Calcutta and had their head office at Bombay brought a suit at Bombay against defendants who also carried on business at those places as merchants and commission agents. The suit was for accounts in respect of certain transactions which had taken place at Rangoon under instructions of a partner of the plaintiffs' firm. The books of account as well as all the principal witnesses were at Rangoon and the suit involved a determination of the custom of trade observed at Rangoon with regard to the transactions. After the filing of the suit defendants paid what they regarded as balances due to the plaintiffs and offered to pay taxed costs to date but prayed that the suit should be stayed.

Held, (1) that it would be most inconvenient to the defendants to have the suit tried at Bombay, [p. 858, cols. 1 & 2, p. 859, col. 1].

(2) that as from the date when the defendants paid the amount to the plaintiffs and offered to pay taxed costs, the suit was vexatious and oppressive to the defendants, [p. 859, col. 2].

(3) that the plaintiff was at liberty to withdraw the suit under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, but in default of his so doing within the time limited for presenting an appeal, all further proceedings in the suit should be stayed [p. 859, col. 2].

FACTS.—Plaintiffs who carried on business in rice at Bombay, Rangoon and Calcutta and had their head office at Bombay brought a suit for accounts in respect of certain transactions with defendants who according to the plaintiffs were merchants and commission agents with their head office at Bombay and branch offices at Rangoon, Calcutta and Karachi. It was alleged that plaintiffs employed defendants as their commission agents and agreed to pay their usual commission, that defendants' branch office at Rangoon used to carry out instructions given by the plaintiffs' representative at Rangoon for buying and selling rice, that defendants' branch office having entered into certain speculative transactions on behalf of the plaintiffs which the latter had not authorised, disputes arise between the parties and as the accounts for the Sambat years 1975 and 1976 had not been adjusted, defendants had in their hands large sums of money, as well as some goods belonging to the plaintiffs, but had withheld the same owing to the dispute. The defendants contended that the firm with which the plaintiffs had dealings at Rangoon was not a branch of the defendants' firm in Bombay but was differently constituted and that, therefore, they, the defendants, were not concerned with the transactions between the plaintiffs and the Rangoon firm; that they were not the commission agents of the plaintiffs; that the agency alleged by the plaintiffs was between the plaintiffs and the Rangoon firm and was entered into at Rangoon, that no part of the cause of action had arisen in Bombay and the High Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. They further contended that all transactions took place and all moneys were paid at Rangoon, that all books of account, papers, etc., relating to the said transactions were at Rangoon, that the principal witnesses of both parties were at Rangoon and commissions would have to issue for taking their evidence; that if the suit was allowed to proceed at Bombay it would involve a great hardship, expense and inconvenience to the defendants, and that even if the High Court had jurisdiction the suit should be stayed or transferred to the Court at Rangoon. The defendants then traversed the other allegations of the plaintiffs with regard for accounts and alleged that they did not enter into any forward transactions; that no sums were due from them to the plaintiffs and that when the accounts for the Sambat year 1376 were made up by the Rangoon firm, the defendants forwarded to the plaintiffs on 28th February 1921 a cheque for the total amount found due by the Rangoon firm, and they offer to pay taxed costs to date. The main issue in the case was:

(4) "Whether the suit should not be stayed in any event on the ground of the balance of inconvenience and the suit being oppressive."

JUDGMENT.—[After stating the facts and discussing the pleadings of the parties His Lordship proceeded:—]

Now the facts which are admitted or proved here are shortly as follows. The parties come from Outch or Kathiawas, but their businesses are mainly elsewhere.

JETHABHAI VERSEY & CO. v. AMARCHAND MADHAVJI & CO.

The disputed transactions between the parties are (a) in gunny bags, and (b) in rice. The transactions in gunny bags number about 100 to 125 and amount in all to about three to four lacs of rupees. The transactions in rice are about 500 or 600 and amount to nearly rupees fifty lacs. All the transactions took place in Rangoon, and all the instructions for these transactions were given in Rangoon to the defendants by Khimji and Tokersey. Khimji was admittedly a partner in the plaintiffs' firm. It is in dispute whether Tokersey also was a partner in the plaintiffs' firm. Further, the moneys in respect of these transactions were paid in Rangoon and all deliveries were given or taken there. Substantially all the books of account and vouchers relating to the suit transactions are at Rangoon. Further the other parties to the transactions are all merchants in Rangoon and consist of Chinese, Burmese, Europeans and Madrasis. The books of the Chinese and Burmese merchants are written in the Chinese and Burmese languages respectively, while the Madras books are in Tamil. It is not practicable to get business men to come from Rangoon to Bombay to give evidence, for the journey takes about eight days if a traveller goes via Calcutta. I think it would probably take longer if he went by Colombo unless he was fortunate in meeting connecting boats. It is in dispute whether the plaintiffs are acting bona fide in persisting in having this suit tried in Bombay. They contend that the transactions in question were the private ventures of Khimji and Tokersey, and that they are now hostile to them. The defendants allege that the suit is being continued in Bombay in order to harass the defendants and so force them to some settlement which they would not otherwise agree to; that the plaintiffs are wanted by their creditors both in Bombay and in Rangoon and have decrees out against them in Bombay, and that that is the real reason why they have remained in Cutch and have put forward requests for adjournment, and that under all the circumstances it would amount to a denial of justice if they were forced to have the matter tried in Bombay.

The plaintiffs have called no evidence, but the defendants have called their Rangoon partner Jivandas Sevchand. It appears from his evidence that in the rice transactions a question will arise on the local law of Rangoon with regard to the rice control. It would appear that in these rice transactions the plaintiffs have been debited and credited with certain bonuses. The defendants say that this is in accordance with the practice in Rangoon and that this practice was not an infringement of the local regulations. Whether that be so or not would be eminently a matter for the Rangoon High Court to determine, if possible.

Then the same witness in answer to the Court made a statement which might be liable to misconstruction. He said: "If a commission was sent to Rangoon to take all the evidence, we should have no objection. If all the evidence is taken there, we have no objection." Then on being cross-examined he said: "If all evidence were taken on commission, we should have no objection to being tried in Bombay." Whereupon Counsel for the plaintiffs said: "I say now I shall have no objection to all evidence being taken on commission including this gentleman's." What the witness meant there was, I think, that if all the evidence on both sides was taken on commission and no other evidence was allowed to be called at the trial, then his firm would not object to the Bombay Court determining the rights of the parties. But that was only a layman's reply and as was pointed out by his Counsel shortly afterwards, a commission to Rangoon would not prevent the plaintiffs from afterwards calling oral evidence at the trial in Bombay and thereby springing a surprise on their opponents and a surprise moreover which they might be unable to cope with by calling rebutting evidence.

Further, on March 2nd, 1923, when I asked Counsel for the plaintiffs how he suggested the case should be tried, he said he wanted it to go before the

Commissioner of this High Court in the ordinary way. Then when I said a Special Commissioner might have to be appointed to go to Rangoon and that provision must be made for his costs and that in the first instance those costs should be provided by the plaintiffs without prejudice to their ultimate incidence, Counsel said: "If I am to be asked to deposit costs here for a Special Commissioner I say I am not obliged to do so, and that if I am ordered to do so, I withdraw my application to consent to Special Commissioner to Rangoon." As to this, I will only say that if the Court has to appoint a Special Commissioner to go thousands of miles away to Rangoon and be engaged on a lengthy enquiry, such cash deposit must be made in order to provide for his costs, I am referring of course to his costs and not to the costs of the parties. That being so, as it is the plaintiffs' suit, and they have selected this inconvenient forum of Bombay, it would seem only reasonable that in the first instance they should provide the initial Court costs necessary for the determination of this suit, just as if they were additional Court fees, leaving it to the Court hereafter to say how those costs should be ultimately borne. The plaintiffs have, therefore, once more put me in a position of difficulty. Their Counsel has declined to accept the terms which were provisionally arranged on January 9th, 1922, for selecting a limited number of items in the gunny bag transactions as a test to determine the liabilities of the parties, and have insisted on raising the point about the rice bonuses which is not expressly pleaded in their plaint. They have now created obstacles in the way of an alternative solution of the difficulty, viz., to send a Special Commissioner to Rangoon. They prefer to take up the position that if the defendants want a Commission to Rangoon, they must first pay the estimated expenses thereof into Court under O. XXVI, r. 15.

These then being some of the main facts, what is the law on the subject? The jurisdiction under which I am asked to stay all further proceedings in this action is contained in section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, which runs: "Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court."

Appeals to the inherent jurisdiction of the Court have, I need hardly say, to be regarded with the greatest caution. But, if after exercising such caution, the Court is clearly of opinion that the jurisdiction ought to be exercised, I do not think it should be intimidated from so doing, because no case on all fours is forthcoming from the reported decisions in the various High Courts.

The only Indian decision to which I have been referred is that of Geffert v. Ruckchand Mohla (1) where under the then existing Code there was power for the Court to stay a suit, if "it is satisfied that justice is more likely to be done by the suit being instituted in some other Court." That was a suit for a libel published in the Bombay Gazette. Accordingly the cause of action arose in Bombay. The learned Judge refused to stay the suit merely on the ground that the libel related to the alleged wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff from his employ, which was the subject of another suit between the same parties in a District Court, where most of the witnesses were living. With great respect I entirely follow that decision, but it is of little assistance to me here. In the present case, substantially the whole of the cause of action arose in Rangoon.

On the other hand, Mulchand Raichand v. Gill & Co. (2) is an instance where this Court restrained the defendant in a Bombay High Court suit from prosecuting against the plaintiff and others a suit in an up-country Court which had been instituted some twelve days before the High Court suit. There Mr. Justice Macleod, who was the Trial Judge, said at page 966* :—

"I am prepared to hold that in the circumstances of this case justice requires that an order should go against the defendants in this Court in personam from proceeding with the suit in the Bijapur Court. All the evidence required for the purpose of deciding the dispute would be in Bombay. It is quite clear that this case should be tried in Bombay. It would be a most undesirable precedent that commission agents in Bombay who make advances to up-country merchants on their cotton should be dragged to up-country Courts in cases of dispute which may occur between them on these transactions.

That decision was confirmed on appeal for the reasons there given.

Turning next to the English decisions, I find that the broad basis on which the jurisdiction is exercised may be summarised as follows, viz., that the Court will interfere to prevent vexatious proceedings which would have the effect of preventing the due administration of justice. Thus in McHenry v. Lewis (3) Lord Justice Bowen at pages 407-408 said:

"I agree that it would be most unwise to lay down any definition of what is vexatious or oppressive. I would much rather rest on the general principle that the Court can and will interfere whenever there is vexation and oppression to prevent the administration of justice being perverted for an unjust end."

Then in the same case Lord Justice Cotton at page 406 said:

"In the first place, it is a jurisdiction which one ought to exercise with extreme caution. Stopping in the middle of a suit a plaintiff from going on when he has a right of action as against the defendant is a jurisdiction which has to be exercised with very considerable caution."

Those principles were more particularly considered by the Court of Appeal in Logan v. Bank of Scotland (4). The headnote runs:—

"The Court will stay an action brought within the jurisdiction, in respect of a cause of action arising out of the jurisdiction, if satisfied that no injustice will be done thereby to the plaintiff, and that the defendant would be subject to such injustice in defending the action as would amount to vexation and oppression, to which he would not be subjected if an action were brought in another and accessible Court, where the cause of action arose."

The suit there was for £50 damages for misrepresentations in a prospectus. The name of the Bank of Scotland appeared on the prospectus as the bankers of the Company, and accordingly they and their treasurer and certain directors of the Company were sued as defendants. The writ was served on the London branch of the Bank of Scotland, and also on one of the directors who was resident there. The Bank applied to stay all further proceedings in the action on the ground that it was vexatious and oppressive and an abuse of the process of the Court. Lord Odrell pointed out that the action was purely a Scottish action and all the transactions which gave rise to the alleged cause of action took place exclusively in Scotland, and that all the parties to the action resided in Scotland, with the exception of the defendant Scott, who appeared to reside in London. At page 147 the learned Judge said:—

"If this action be fought out, it is obvious that it will involve calling a large number of witnesses, all of whom reside in Scotland, and none in England, and the production of numerous books, documents, and papers relating to the matters in question in Scotland, and it is perfectly clear that a case of this kind ought, if possible, to be tried in Scotland, and that the inconvenience and difficulty placed upon the defendants in conducting the case in England would be so great as to put a great oppression upon them if they were obliged to produce and keep their witnesses and documents, etc., in London during the time such a trial as that which would take place would last."

Then after referring to the cases I have mentioned, the learned Judge stated at page 150:—

(3) (1882) 22 Ch. D. 397, 52 L. J. Ch. 325, 47 L. T. 549, 31 W. R. 305.

JETHABHAI VERSEY & CO. v. AMARCHAND MADHAVJI & CO.

"The difficulties which arise in the exercise of this power of the Court do not appear to be so much difficulties in stating the law as difficulties in administering or applying it. The Court should, on the one hand, see clearly that in stopping an action it does not do injustice, and, on the other hand, I think the Court ought to interfere whenever there is such vexation and oppression that the defendant who objects to the exercise of the jurisdiction would be subjected to such injustice that he ought not to be sued in the Court in which the action is brought, to which injustice he would not be subjected if the action were brought in another accessible and competent Court."

Then at page 151 the learned Judge proceeded:

"It seems to me clear that the inconvenience of trying a case in a particular Tribunal may be such as practically to work a serious injustice upon a defendant and be vexatious. This would probably not be so if the difference of trying in one country rather than in another were merely measured by some extra expense; but where the difficulty for the defendant of trying in the country in which the action is brought is such that it is impracticable to properly try the case by reason of the difficulty of procuring the attendance of busy men as witnesses, and keeping them during a long trial, and of having to deal with masses of books, documents, and papers which are not in the country where the action is brought, and of dealing with law foreign to the Tribunal, it appears to me that a case of vexation in some circumstances may be made out if the plaintiff chooses to sue in that country rather than in that where everybody is and where all the witnesses and material for the trial are."

Then, after referring to the possibility of suing in England a Bank whose head office was in Australia or Brazil in respect of transactions which took place in Australia or Brazil, the learned Judge continued (page 152):—

"This matter is, in this respect, of general importance, because so many Banks and other mercantile houses which are established in our Colonies and in the United States and other foreign countries have branches here. To a business concern to allow actions to proceed in such circumstances when there is a proper and adequate Tribunal in the place where both parties really are, and dealt with each other, and all the evidence is, would be intolerable. In the present case, apart from this question about Scott, it is difficult to conceive anything more harassing to the defendant Bank than to have their officials dragged up to London for a lengthy trial, when the Court of Session is, so to speak, across the way in Edinburgh. All this to my mind is not measured by mere expense."

Accordingly the Court stayed the suit in that particular case.

In the other two suits to which I will refer, the alleged cause of action arose curiously enough in India. One is Egbert v. Short (5) a decision of Mr. Justice Warrington. The other is In re Norton's Settlement, Norton v. Norton (6) a decision of the Court of Appeal. In both cases suits were commenced in England by a wife against her husband or trustee; and the defendant applied for and obtained a stay on the ground that they were vexatious and that the disputes should more properly be tried in India. Substantially the decisions were applications of the principles referred to in the above Bank of Scotland case (4) but I may quote what Lord Justice Vaughan Williams said in In re Norton's Settlement (6) at page 479, viz

"I wish to say, further, that the undoubted inherent jurisdiction of the Court to stay proceedings on the ground that they are an abuse of the process of the Court should always be exercised with the greatest care and caution. As I have already pointed out, in order to justify a stay it is, as a rule, necessary that something more should exist than a mere balance of convenience in favour of proceedings in some other country. In my opinion it must be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that either the expense or the difficulties of trial in this country are so great that injustice will be done in this sense, that it will be very difficult, or a practically impossible, for the litigant who is applying for the stay to get justice in this country. Speaking generally, one may say that the litigant must show that some injustice will be done to him. There is also another consideration to be borne in mind. If the Court, taking all the facts into consideration, comes to the conclusion that a plaintiff in commencing an action in this country has not done so on account of any legitimate advantage which a trial in this country will give him, but for purposes entirely foreign to that legitimate purpose, then, apart from any question as to expense or inconvenience, in my opinion not only has the Court jurisdiction, but it is its duty, to stay the proceedings.

Applying then the test laid down by Lord Justice Vaughan Williams, are either the expense or the difficulties of trial in the Bombay High Court so great that it would be very difficult or practically impossible for the defendants to get justice in this Court? I quite accept that mere inconvenience is not sufficient. It is clear to my mind that putting the matter in the most favourable way to the plaintiff, it would be most inconvenient to the defendants to have this suit tried out in Bombay. This inconvenience will in the main fall on the defendants, for the plaintiff is in the happy position that he is entitled to call upon the defendants as his commission agents to account for the proceeds of his goods that have been bought or sold on his account. He may accordingly remain safely in Cutch, and merely instruct his Counsel and Solicitors to require the defendants to prove strictly every single item in their accounts, and produce all necessary books, vouchers, etc. If, therefore, this Court had a complete discretion as to where this suit should be tried, I should undoubtedly hold that it ought to be transferred to and tried in the present High Court of Rangoon.

But does this case go further than mere inconvenience? In my opinion it undoubtedly does. What Lord Gorell has stated with reference to the officials of the Bank of Scotland applies in a considerable degree to the defendants' business at Rangoon. But one must remember this that whereas Edinburgh is only some eight hours by rail from London, Rangoon is some eight days journey from Bombay. And in the English suit there was no difficulty about languages. Here the evidence is that the defendants will require Burmese, Chinese and Madras merchants to produce their books, all of which are written in their own languages. But Burmese and Chinese witnesses are practically unknown in our Courts, and Tamil speaking witnesses from Madras are rare. We have no Court interpreters who know any of these languages. Consequently special arrangements will have to be made for the necessary official translations of all these documents and the oral evidence of the witnesses. It is to my mind clear that in any event a commission would have to go to Rangoon. It would be monstrous to say that the defendants must either do the impossible, that is, require independent business men to travel from Rangoon, or else have their evidence shut out. And even if a commission were issued, I think when it returned, the Trial Judge or our High Court Commissioner might be in the greatest practical difficulty as to how he should proceed. The plaintiffs might call some oral evidence to answer which another commission might be necessary, and there is almost bound to be great practical difficulty about the books. Some of the defendants' books are required for proceedings in Rangoon and in any event the defendants cannot be asked to forward recent books to Bombay, for they might easily be required any day in looking up or enforcing transactions with other parties. In this connection the defendants' witnesses no doubt admitted that they would not require the Samvat 1973 books for their daily business now and that there would be no hardship in bringing those books down. But the suit transaction are not in respect of the year 1973. They are for the Samvat years 1975 and 1976 (1918-1920).

In short, I have to the best of my ability endeavoured to forecast what would be the probable course of events if I allowed this suit to proceed in the ordinary way. But in the result I can find no solution to satisfy my sense of what is required for the due administration of justice in the present suit, except to have the disputes tried at Rangoon where the High Court "is so to speak across the way" as Lord Gorell put it in The Bank of Scotland case (4). I have already referred to the matter about the local law of Rangoon with reference to the rice control. That is an additional reason why the matter should be determined at Rangoon. Other reasons are the large aggregate numbers of the various transactions and the large sums involved.

Nor can I accept the plaintiffs' contention that all the matters in dispute can be tried by the Bombay High Court Commissioner on taking the accounts. A reference to the further issues (5-13) that have now been put in will, I think, show that there are many points which ought to be dealt with by the Trial Judge and not left to the Commissioner. For instance, the initial dispute as to the authority of Tokersey and Khimji and as to whether these transactions were on behalf of the plaintiffs or were private ventures of their own, are matters for the Trial Judge and not for the Commissioner on taking the accounts.

But there is one important distinction which must be taken into consideration in this case and that is that this suit was not wholly vexatious and oppressive at the date of its institution in August 1920, because it has at any rate resulted in the defendants paying a sum of Rs. 33,545 in February 1921 and offering to pay the plaintiffs taxed costs up to that date. But that does not, in my opinion, conclude the question as to whether or not the suit is oppressive as from February 28, 1921, or some later date. A suit may consist of two claims A and B, and be only oppressive as regards A. If, therefore, a defendant satisfies claim B, I do not see why he should be precluded from contending that claim A should be stayed. In the present case I think the suit was oppressive after February 28, 1921, when the defendants paid the above sum and made the above offer.

I have so far dealt with the case irrespective of whether the plaintiff is acting from any indirect motive. The defendants say he is, and have put forward certain reasons which in my opinion afford justification for their contention. The plaintiff has not gone into the witness box, and I understood from his Counsel's statement to me on March 2, 1923, that he is still in Cutch. The inference I draw from all the circumstances is that the plaintiff is acting from an indirect motive, and that he hopes by remaining in Cutch to avoid all inconvenience to himself, and yet at the same time by continuing the proceedings in Bombay to put his opponents to such disadvantage and to such oppression that they will either be forced to some compromise or else may run a serious risk of an adverse judgment in the absence of evidence which would be available for them at Rangoon, though not in Bombay.

My conclusion then is that I ought to make an order to the following effect. The plaintiff is to be at liberty to withdraw this suit under O XXIII, r. 1, but in default of his so doing within the time limited for presenting an appeal, all further proceedings in this suit will be stayed. But this is to be on terms. The defendants must pay the whole of the costs of the suit up to February 28, 1921, when they paid the cheque for Rs. 33,545 and offered to pay the costs up to date. As regards the subsequent costs of the suit, these will be paid by the plaintiffs, and there will be a set-off as to costs.

JETHABHAI VERSEY & CO. v. AMARCHAND MADHAVJI & CO.

In view of the offer of February 28, 1921, I do not think it would be fair to make the defendants pay the costs down to their filing of their supplemental written statement. Then there must be an undertaking by the defendants that they will raise no technical defence to the plaintiffs suing the Rangoon firm in Rangoon, even though the plaintiffs have elected in the present suit to sue Amarchand Madhavji & Co. of Bombay alone, and not all the partners in the Rangoon firm. There must also be an undertaking by the defendants that if the plaintiffs sue them in Rangoon, they will not ask for further security for costs against the plaintiffs as being foreign plaintiffs. These undertakings, defendants' Counsel have already expressed their willingness to give, viz., on January 9 and 20, 1922. Execution of this order is to be stayed for the limited time allowed for the presentation of any appeal by the plaintiffs from this order, and if any such appeal is presented, then pending the hearing of such appeal or until the further order of the Court. In any event the plaintiffs are to be at liberty to take such proceedings in the High Court of Rangoon in respect of the subject-matter of this suit or any part thereof as they may be advised.

Issue No. 4 will accordingly be answered "yes, after February 28, 1921, but any stay is to be upon the terms set out in the judgment of the Court".

In conclusion I should refer to one further point. On March 2, 1923, in answer to a question from the Bench as to the powers of transfer of suits in India, Mr Davar was good enough to refer me to section 25, of the Civil Procedure Code. This section enacts that:—

"Where any party to a suit pending in a High Court presided over by a single Judge objects to its being heard by him and the Judge is satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for the objection, he shall make a report to the Governor-General in Council, who may, by notification transfer such suit to any other High Court."

That section was not material at the previous hearings because the Rangoon Court was not then a High Court. But now it is. Accordingly this section affords a possible alternative remedy in cases where the Court considers that its inherent jurisdiction to stay suits is not applicable. Counsel were unable to refer to any decided case on the operation of section 25, but cited the corresponding provision in section 527 of the Criminal Procedure Code, where a transfer may be directed by the Governor General in Council "whenever it appears to him that such transfer will promote the ends of justice, or tend to the general convenience of the parties or witnesses." I do not propose to decide what in general would be reasonable grounds for objection within the meaning of section 25. But I am satisfied that the section does not apply or at any rate should not be confined to objection to a particular Judge personally, e.g., that previously while at the Bar he has advised one of the parties. In such a case all difficulty would be met by the case being tried before another Judge of the same High Court. Consequently the objection in question must, I think, apply to the High Court as a whole. That being so, it would seem probable that the test for a transfer would be much the same as I have already indicated for a stay of a suit under section 151 of the Code, or alternatively, the rather more lenient test adopted in section 527 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In fact, however, no formal objection has been made to me by the defendants under section 25. I have suggested it to their Counsel but have not pressed it. In the view I take there is a remedy under section 151, and accordingly the more cumbersome procedure of section 25 should not be adopted, despite the fact that some saving in costs might be effected by a transfer as opposed to a stay and a fresh suit.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the decision of Kennedy, A. J. C. holding that the plaintiffs are entitled to retain possession as against the defendants of certain portions of plot No. 7 in the Garden Quarter, Karachi.

The plaintiffs are Barans by caste. The first defendant is a Bhambhro and the second defendant the heir of a co-purchaser with the first defendant of plot No. 7 from one Ishak, a Baran. This plot has been the subject of dispute for over twenty years between the Barans and the Bhambhros and it would be convenient to refer at the outset to the history of this protracted litigation between them.

In 1876-77 at the Survey Settlement of the plots in the Garden quarter of Karachi the whole Plot No. 7 which measures 636 square yards was allotted to one Jiandi a Bhambhro. In 1886 one Jiari, the widow of Jiandi's son Shandoor, and the mother of the first defendant, applied for mutation of names. Kadu Bayan admitted the title of Jiandi. But one Nath Baran claimed the plot as his own though he also admitted that it had been allotted to Jiandi at the Survey Settlement. In 1888 the plot was transferred in the Revenue Records to the name of Jiari. In 1902 Jiari and her three sons including the first defendant instituted Suit No. 124 of 1902 against the three sons of Kadu, one Chibhir and one Walbal, all Barans for possession of this plot. These Baran defendants pleaded that they held the plot as permanent tenants of Nath Baran and his son Ishak and succeeded in non-suiting Jiari and her sons in the Appeal Court on the ground that Jiari and her sons had lost their rights, if any, by adverse possession.

In 1910 Ishak instituted Suit No. 330 of 1910 for ejectment against the sons of Kadu and the sons of Chibhir, and Walbal being then dead. It appears that this suit was inspired by the first defendant who was not prepared to accept his defeat quietly. On 22nd March 1911 Ishak assigned to the present defendants half his right, title and interest in the plot for valuable consideration evidently part of it being money required for litigation. Though in this suit the sons of Kadu and of Chibhir set up a plea of adverse possession and possession through one Elias, they failed. During the pendency of an appeal filed by them, Ishak conveyed the remaining half share in this plot to the present defendants. On 25th February 1914 the Appellate Court confirmed the decree in favour of Ishak. The present defendants then applied as assignees to execute the decree obtained by Ishak against the sons of Kadu and Chibhir. They were, however, resisted by Ishak who disputed the validity of the deeds of assignment executed by him. In order to spite the present defendants Ishak further attempted to create a wakf of the plot in favour of certain Sayads. This led to the present defendants instituting Suit No. 117 of 1915 against Ishak and the Sayads which resulted in an award decree being passed in their favour on 19th July 1917. On the strength of this decree the present defendants again attempted to eject the sons of Kadu and Chibhir and were obstructed by the present plaintiffs, who are all admittedly related to the sons of Kadu. The plaintiff Manio's mother is married to Chato son of Kadu, the plaintiffs Ibrahim and Arab are nephews of Kadu and the plaintiff Fakir Mahomed is related to Kadu through his mother. The Execution Court passed an order against the plaintiffs under O. XXI, r 98, Civil Procedure Code, and directed the defendants to be put in possession. The plaintiffs thereupon instituted this suit for a declaration that they were the owners of three of this plot measuring about 280 square yards, nearly half of the whole plot. They inter alia contended that the decree in Suit No. 117 of 1915 was a declaratory decree and, therefore, the order passed by the Executing Court for possession was erroneous.

The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner has found that there is no substance in the legal plea, as the defendants were not executing their decree against Ishak in Suit No. 117 of 1915 but Ishak's decree in the Suit of 1910, and that the plaintiffs had failed to prove title by adverse possession. He was however of the opinion that the possession of the plaintiffs though not shown to be adverse was not of a patently wrongful and permissive nature and that as the defendants had also failed to prove title to the specific portions of the plot, the plaintiffs as the persons in possession of their holdings were entitled to retain them until some persons appeared with a better title.

It may be conceded that the onus of proving a subsisting title to the land was on the defendants. They were out of possession of the land and the mere fact that the plaintiffs were driven to institute a suit for declaration of their rights in view of the provisions of O. XXI, r. 103, Civil Procedure Code, cannot, in my opinion, shift the burden on the plaintiffs.

The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner was, however, we think, in error in holding that the defendants had not proved a subsisting title to the portions of the plot in suit. He was of the opinion that the fact that Ishak had succeeded in getting a decree against some of the Barons was of no use to show that he had any title to any portion of Plot No. 7 which was not the subject-matter of the previous litigation. Possession of a part of land with defined boundaries in exercise of an assertion to claim the whole is evidence of possession of the whole. In Jones v. Williams (1) Parke, B., observed that "Ownership may be proved by proof of possession, and that can be shown only by acts of enjoyment of the land itself; but it is impossible in the nature of things to confine the evidence to the very precise spot on which the alleged trespass may have been committed: evidence may be given of acts done on other parts, provided there is such a common character of locality between those parts and the spot in question as would raise a reasonable inference in the minds of the Jury, that the place in dispute belonged to the plaintiff if the other parts did". These remarks have been referred to with approval by Blackburn, J., in the Lord Advocate v. Lord Blantyre (2). His Lordship there observed — "Every act shown to have been done on any part of that tract by the Barons or their agents which was not lawful unless the Barons were owners of that spot on which it was done is evidence that they were in possession as owners of that spot on which it was done. No one such act is conclusive and the weight of each act as evidence depends on the circumstances; one very important circumstance as to the weight being, whether the act was such and so done that those who were interested in disputing the ownership would be aware of it. And all that tends to prove possession as owners of parts of the tract tends to prove ownership of the whole tract; provided there is such a common character of locality as would raise a reasonable inference that if the Barons possessed one part as owners they possessed the whole, the weight depending on the nature of the tract, what kind of possession could be had of it, and what the kind of possession proved was". The same rule appears to have been laid down in Clark v. Elphinstone (3) an appeal from Ceylon. Reference may also be made to Sivasubramanya v. Secretary of State (4) and Vithaldas v. Secretary of State (5). The weight to be attached to the evidence of such acts would no doubt depend on the circumstances of each case. So far as the facts of the present case go, it would appear that throughout the history of this litigation, the whole plot was the subject-matter of contest between the Barans and the Bhambhros. In 1886 the father of Ishak laid claim to the whole plot before the Deputy Collector at the time of mutation of names of the plot to the name of Jiari and in the subsequent litigation also Jiari and Ishak laid claim to the whole plot. There is no evidence to show that any portions of the plot which were not in occupation of the defendants in the litigation of 1902 were, as a matter of fact, occupied by the present plaintiffs or by any person through whom they claim. The acts of constructive user proved by the occupation of portions of the plot through the permissive tenants of Ishak for over twelve years prior to 1902 and also subsequent thereto upto 1914 are acts which would show that Ishak had either title to the whole plot or acquired a title to the whole plot by adverse possession prior to 1902. The plot is a small plot forming a separate survey number with defined boundaries. The portions now in suit adjoin those which are said to have been in the possession of the sons of Kadu and Chibhir. It is somewhat difficult to believe that if the present plaintiffs were in occupation of these portions either Jiari or Ishak would not have instituted proceedings against them much earlier for ejecting them. Jiari wanted to eject all the Barans from the plot and not only some of them. Again there is no reason why the Baran defendants in the Suit of 1902 should not have pleaded that portions of this plot were in the occupation of the present plaintiffs specially when they raised the plea of the non joinder of one Elias who was alleged to be in occupation of a portion of the plot. Elias was, however, found to be occupying land outside the boundaries of this plot. If the present plaintiffs came to live on the portions in dispute subsequent to 1902, there is again no reason why Ishak who had at his back Ramzan the son of Jiari should not attempt to eject the plaintiffs in 1910. In this long protracted litigation we do not find any mention being made of any persons besides the sons of Kadu and Chibhir having huts on this plot. The evidence adduced by the plaintiffs of their long possession consisted chiefly of Baran, witnesses closely related to them, and the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner rightly came to the conclusion that this evidence was insufficient to prove their long possession. According to the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner, the Barans possessed cattle, and, therefore, it is very likely that the Baran defendants in the Suit of 1902 occupied the whole plot partly for their residence and partly for tethering their cattle. In their attempt to explain the evidence that some of these huts had been recently constructed, some of the plaintiffs were forced to admit that at one time or the other they were living with the sons of Kadu and to assert that they had reconstructed new huts on the site of their old huts which had gone into disrepair. It appears more probable that the whole plot was in the occupation of the sons of Kadu and Chibhir and used by them either as their residence or for tethering cattle and that the plaintiffs who are their relations have squatted on the plot in recent years. The possession of the sons of Kadu and Chibhir being the possession of their land-lord Ishak. Ishak continued to exercise acts of owners till recent years through them over the whole plot and not only over the portions on which they had huts. Their possession was Ishak's possession: Secretary of State v. Krishnamoni Gupta (6). The plaintiffs could not, therefore, succeed unless they showed that they had acquired title by adverse possession over the portions in dispute for over twelve years and which they have failed to prove. The defendants as the assignees of Ishak are entitled to eject them. I would set aside the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the suit with costs.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the competition is between the plaintiff who was the puisne mortgagee who brought a suit on his own mortgage without making the prior mortgagee a party and purchased the property in Court auction and the prior mortgagee who brought a suit without making the puisne mortgagee a party and purchased the property himself. Neither mortgagee made the other mortgagee a party to his suit. The puisne mortgagee now claims possession of the property under his purchase and in the alternative relying on his mortgage asks to be permitted to redeem the prior mortgage or to bring the property to sale subject to that mortgage.

When two mortgagees bring suits like this, each suing without making the other mortgagee a party, it is clear on the authorities that the rights of either mortgagee are not affected by the suit brought without making him a party. The result is the puisne mortgagee would have been entitled to redeem the prior mortgagee in this case if no difficulty of limitation arose. But unfortunately his right to enforce his mortgage has become barred by limitation. His mortgage was in 1893. The suit was brought in the year 1918 and is clearly beyond time under Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. He could not enforce his claim under his mortgage, either to redeem the prior mortgage or sell the property, as he is barred by limitation. An exactly similar case arose in Calcutta and is reported as Nidhiarm Bandopadhyaya v. Sarbessur Biswas (1). There their Lordships held that the second mortgagee having allowed the period of limitation to expire, was not entitled to enforce his mortgage by redeeming or selling and that a purchase by him in a suit brought by him against the mortgagor without making the first mortgagee a party did not give him a fresh starting point for limitation; he can only rely upon his original mortgage itself and being unable to do so, on Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 95, 97—Auction-purchaser—Delivery of possession—Obstruction—Suit for recovery of possession—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sec. 11, Art. 11A.

The resistance or obstruction contemplated in O. XXI, r. 97, Civil Procedure Code, is some overt act of resistance or obstruction to the giving of possession by some person who is present at the time. [p. 862, col. 1.]

Where, therefore, an auction-purchaser applies under O. XXI, r. 95, Civil Procedure Code, and gets possession from the tenants of the person in possession without any resistance, a suit against the auction purchaser for recovery of possession is not governed by Art. 11A, Sec. 1 of the Limitation Act. [Ibid.]

First appeal from the District Court, Maubin, in O. S. No. 8 of 1922.

Mr. Chori, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The owner of the two properties mortgaged them to one Po Kyaw on the 15th of March 1914. On the 12th of September, 1918, he sold these properties to Mr. Bose, the present appellant. U Po Kyaw filed a mortgage suit and obtained a decree, but he did not make Mr. Bose a party to that suit. A mortgage decree having been passed, the property was brought to sale and purchased by the respondent Chowdhury. On the 1st of November, 1920, Chowdhury applied under O. XXI, r. 95, of the Code of Civil Procedure, to be put into possession. On this, the Court ordered notice to issue to Mr. Bose's tenants. The Court examined them, and also Mr. Bose himself, but without any investigation of the title Mr. Bose set up, passed an order that, as the men were only coolies they had no right to be in possession, and that they should vacate the land within one month. This order was passed on the 31st of January 1921. On the 3rd February, 1921, Mr. Bose applied alleging that he was in possession as owner, and prayed that his possession should not be disturbed without investigation. Notice was ordered to issue to Chowdhury. On the 3rd of March, 1921, the Court dismissed Mr. Bose's application. The application was dismissed on the ground that Mr. Bose's possession has not yet been disturbed. On the 24th of July, 1921, Chowdhury was given possession in accordance with the order originally passed. Mr. Bose again applied on the 17th of August, 1921, pleading that he was the owner and that his possession should be restored after investigation, but on the 1st September 1921 the Court rejected his application. Mr. Bose then filed a suit on the 3rd of May, 1922, praying for a declaration that the decree in the mortgage suit brought by U Po Kyaw was not binding on him, for a declaration that he, Chowdhury, had acquired no title to the lands, for possession of the lands and for mesne profits. The suit has been dismissed as barred by limitation, the Court holding that Art. 11A of the Limitation Act applied, and that the suit must have been brought within one year from the date of the order of the 31st January, 1921. Against that decision an appeal has been filed.

It is clear that none of the proceedings taken before the Court were under O. XXI, r. 97, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The "resistance or obstruction" there contemplated is some overt act of "resistance" or "obstruction" to the giving of possession by some person who is present at the time.

There was no allegation of any such "resistance" or "obstruction" and it is clear that the suit that is provided for in cases of such "resistance" or "obstruction" is not a suit which could have been filed in the present case.

SUKHBIR SINGH v. PIARE LAL.

Article 11A of the Limitation Act is perfectly clear, and provides a period of limitation only for that class of suit. The present suit is an entirely different case. It seeks reliefs other than those contemplated and it is clearly within time under the general period of limitation.

The appeal will be accepted and the suit remanded to the District Court for disposal on the merits.

The respondent will pay the costs of the appellant in this appeal and we direct that a certificate may issue for the refund of the full Court fees paid in connection with this appeal.

We fix the Advocate's fee at two gold mohurs.

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 6th March, 1920.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, Messrs. Jagan Nath and Gopichand, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Mool Chand and Nanwan Mal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen out of the following facts.—

The plaintiff is a resident of Muzaffarnagar and the defendant is a merchant of Delhi who carries on the business of repairing motor cars, etc. In June 1915 the plaintiff handed over his motor car for repairs to the defendant. The motor was never repaired, and it is alleged that it had been damaged and made useless. The present suit was instituted by the plaintiff in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Meerut on the 10th of April, 1910, for the recovery of its price and for damages. One of the pleas raised in defence was that the Court at Meerut had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. On the 14th of December, 1918, the Trial Court gave effect to this objection and held that the suit was not cognizable by the Court at Meerut. The plaint upon this finding ought to have been returned to the plaintiff for presentation to the proper Court, but the Trial Court decided the suit on the merits also, and found against the plaintiff. The suit was accordingly dismissed.

The plaintiff preferred an appeal to the District Judge and it came on for hearing before the Additional District Judge, who, on the 2nd of April, 1919, held that the plaint ought to have been returned to the plaintiff and the Trial Court ought not to have gone into the merits of the case. The plaint was actually returned on the 14th April, 1919. It was then presented on the 22nd of April, 1919, to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Delhi. Objection was taken by the defendant to the effect that the suit was barred by time. The plaintiff, however, claimed the benefit of the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act. The Trial Court on the facts found that the plaintiff had not succeeded in proving that he had been prosecuting the suit in the Court at

DOLATSINGJI JASWANTSINGJI v. OGHAD VIRA.

Meerut in good faith and with due diligence and made an order dismissing the suit.

An appeal was preferred to the lower Appellate Court which refused to go into the merits of the questions arising under section 14 of the Limitation Act and dismissed the appeal on the simple ground that the plaintiff had not complied with the provisions of O. VII, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, according to which "where the suit is instituted after the expiration of the period prescribed by the law of limitation, the plaintiff shall show the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed."

It is clear that the suit as originally instituted in the Court at Meerut was within time, and, therefore, the provisions of the above rule had no bearing on the case on the date of the institution of the suit. When the plaint was presented to the Court at Delhi the suit was no doubt barred by time but the circumstances entitling the plaintiff to claim the benefit of section 14 of the Limitation Act appeared on the face of the record. There was the order of the Appellate Court holding that the suit was not cognizable by the Court at Meerut and there was further an endorsement on the record showing that the plaint was returned on the 14th April, 1919, to be presented to a proper Court. In addition to this the statement of the plaintiff's Pleader, dated the 22nd of May, 1919, was recorded in which it was made clear that the plaintiff claimed the benefit of the provisions of section 14 of the Limitation Act. In our opinion, under these circumstances, it was not necessary for the plaintiff to amend the plaint by adding a statement showing the ground upon which exemption from limitation was claimed. The lower Appellate Court has taken too strict a view of the provisions of O. VII, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code.

We accordingly set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court upon this preliminary point and remand the case to that Court under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code. The Court will allow the parties to produce such additional evidence as they may wish to tender for the decision of the questions arising under section 14 of the Limitation Act. Costs will abide the result.

Gujarat Taluqdars' Act (VI of 1888), as amended by Act II of 1905, s. 2 (1) (a)—Gameti, rights of—Mulgameti, definition of—Sovereign rights, whether essential—Cession of territory—Rights against sovereign how exercised—Burden of proving enforceable right—Taluqdari estate

Although the Kathis of village Salangpur in the Dhanduka Taluka of District Ahmedabad are Mulgametis by reason of their retention of the jivas lands and chauth, they do not hold lands directly from Government and consequently are not taluqdars within the meaning of the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act, 1888, as amended by the Act of 1905 [p 875, col 2].

Per Marten, J.—Generally speaking a Gameti would have sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights but a retention of such sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights is not essential to constitute a Mulgameti. It is sufficient if the Gameti retains or is granted some of his former lands or an interest therein although all his former governing rights pass to others [p 872, cols 1 & 2].

A Mulgameti of Salangpur is one who is or is descended from a former ruler and owner of the village and still retains by re-grant or otherwise some portion of the lands or interests therein of such former ruler and owner, but not necessarily any of his governing rights [p 872, col 2].

After a cession of territory to British Rule the only enforceable rights against the Sovereign are those conferred by him after the cession either by agreement, express or implied or by legislation. An implied agreement conferring rights may be established by evidence of recognition of rights existing before cession, and of an election express or implied to be bound by them but the burden of establishing the existence of an enforceable right is upon the subject. [p 874, col 1].

Per Pratt, J.—A taluqdari estate is an estate which connoted rulership in pre-British times but which is now a landlord estate to which some seigniorial or subordinate rights may or may not be still attached. [p 877, col 1].

First appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 3 of 1914.

Mr. B. J. Desai (with him Mr. R. W. Desai), for the Appellant.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Messrs. H. V. Dwatra and N. K. Mehta), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Marten, J.—The question in this appeal is whether defendants Nos. 1 to 30 are "Mulgametis who hold land directly from Government" within the meaning of section 2 (1) (a) of the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act, 1888 (Bom. Act VI of 1888) as amended by section 2 (1) of Bombay Act II of 1905, and hence are "Taluqdars" within the operation of the amended Act. The plaintiff contends that this question should be answered in the negative, and sues for a declaration to that effect. The defendants contend for an answer in the affirmative. Mr. Kennedy, the then District Judge at Ahmedabad, decided this point in the defendants' favour, and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs on March 23, 1916. Hence the present appeal by the plaintiff. The intervening delay is, I understand, accounted for by the necessity of adding the representatives of certain deceased defendants as parties to the suit.

The question as above stated is hardly indicative of its interesting character. But in fact, its investigation has led us to explore the somewhat misty history of the border-lands of Kathiawar in those pre-British days when might was right, and no man's life or property was secure. Jama or tribute used then to be collected by the annual excursions of armed bands led by one who apparently had a financial interest in the amount recovered for the Peshwas. But a receipt or fice pass (parwana) was given for the amount collected, and this apparently protected the local inhabitants from further exactions for the year in question. Failure to pay however led to extensive ravaging. Apart from the Peshwas—the then paramount Power—one also had to reckon with the hostility of one's neighbours. And in the present case each of the contending parties alleges that it was by the force or fraud of his opponent's ancestors that his own ancestors were obliged to give up those lands or rights which his opponent now enjoys.

The suit arises in this way. The village in respect of which the defendants Nos. 1 to 30 claim to be Mulgametis is the village of Salangpur situate in the Dhandhuka Taluka of the District of Ahmedabad in Gujarat. Though now within British India, it is geographically part of the eastern border of Kathiawar and is situate some twenty miles to the south-east of Limbdi or Limri as it is sometimes written. Limbdi is the principal town of the Native State of that name, and over that State the plaintiff rules. As is stated in Peile at page 4:—

"The estates of the Ahmedabad Talukdars may be defined geographically as the border land between Guzerat proper and the Peninsula of Kathiawar, and historically as the coast where the debris of the old Rajpoot principalities of that peninsula was worn and beaten by the successive waves of Mogul and Mahratta invasion. But they are part of Kathiawar rather than of Guzerat. Their proprietors are Kathiawar Chiefs. Their communities have the same elements."

The plaintiff, as the Thakore Sahib of Limbdi, is admittedly the registered Talukdar under the 1888 Act to the extent of two-thirds share in this village of Salangpur. As regards the remaining one-third share, the registered Talukdar is Sher Miya, defendant No. 39 (see Exhibit 439). On the evidence before us, it is also clear that up to the passing of the amending Act of 1905, none of the defendants Nos. 1 to 30 were entered as Mulgametis or Talukdars. But in the Settlement Register as altered after this amending Act was passed, the defendants Nos. 1 to 30 are entered as Mulgametis, if not as Talukdars, and this has led to the present suit. Exhibit 439 is a typical entry from this Register, and it describes some of the defendants as "Mul (original) Gametis." The plaintiff regarded this as the thin edge of the wedge, and accordingly brought this suit. Defendants Nos. 1 to 30 who are Kathis took up the challenge, and are strongly supported by defendant No. 39 who was added as a party at his own request. Defendants Nos. 31 to 38 one need not trouble about, as they are only assignees of defendants Nos. 1 to 30 and admittedly are not Mulgametis. But the dispute though originally over the Register does not necessarily depend on the accuracy of the precise entry there made. The point argued before us is whether the defendants Nos. 1 to 30 are Talukdars within the meaning of the amended Act, and that is the point on which both parties want our decision.

This point primarily depends on the definition of "Talukdar" in the amended Act, section 2 (1) (a) of which now runs as follows:—

"2. (1) In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context,—

(a) "Talukdar" includes a Thakur, Mehvasi, Kasbati, and Naik, and a Mulgameti who holds lands directly from Government."

These last words, viz., "and a Mulgameti who holds land directly from Government" were added by the amending Act of 1905. They were not in the original Act, viz., the Ahmedabad Taluqdars' Act, 1862 (Bom. Act VI. of 1862) nor in the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act, 1888, which was an extension of the 1862 Act. The amending Bill originally proposed to add merely the words "and a Mulgameti", but as a result of a protest by the plaintiff to Government that the word "Mulgameti" was an ambiguous one and would cause confusion, the additional words, "who holds land directly from Government" were eventually included in the amending Act.

There is no definition of "Mulgameti" in the amended Act, and not much light can be obtained from the provisions of the Act itself. But as regards its general nature I may quote from Waghela Rajsany v. Shiekh Moskudin (1) where Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council on certain matters arising under the 1862 Act said at page 562 as follows:

"The object of the Taluqdari Act was to maintain the status and order of Talukdars, which the Government, as a matter of policy, thought it important to maintain. They were a class of gentlemen who had been living beyond their means; they had got very much embarrassed, and they did not perform those political objects which the Government thought of great importance to have performed in various parts of the country. Many Acts of the kind have been passed relating to different parts of the country, and all with the same object. The method adopted was, where a Talukdari estate had reached a certain pitch of embarrassment, to make a declaration placing it under the management of an officer who was to manage for a term of years, which might extend to twenty years."

(1) 11 B. 551, 14 T. A. 89; 11 Ind. Jur. 315; 5 Sar. P. O. J. 16; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 364 (P. C.)

In the present case the estate of Sher Miya (defendant No. 39) is under management, and hence he appears by the Taluqdari Settlement Officer.

As regards the details of the Act, I need only for the present mention the following. Section 2 (1) (c) defines "jama" to mean "land revenue payable by a Taluqdar to Government." Sections 4 to 9 deal with the preparation of a Settlement Register in which (inter alia) the name of every registered Talukdar and of every incumbrancer is to be entered. It is not for the Court to correct this Register, but its entries have to be in conformity with any decision of the Court as to the respective rights of any particular parties (sections 6 and 8). In the present case the Collector and on further appeal the Governor in Council have upheld the entries made by the Settlement Officer with reference to the village of Salangpur. Sections 10 to 21 provide for partition; and sections 22 to 29 F. for revenue administration. Section 23 preserves all existing settlements as to the amount of jama. This is of importance to the plaintiff, for, as I shall presently show, he settled with Government as long ago as 1807 for the payment in one lump annual sum of the jama in respect of this and other villages. Section 24 provides that the registered Talukdar shall be primarily responsible to Government for the jama of his village. Sections 26 to 29 F. provide for the management of Talukdari estates and the liquidation of their liabilities. Section 31 puts restrictions on the power to incumber or alienate a Talukdar's estate, but the amending Act of 1905 provides that section 31 is not to apply to any incumbrance or alienation made before that Act by a Mulgameti who holds lands directly from Government, except where his estate has been taken under management. Section 33 (2) limits the application of the Bombay Land Revenue Code, and section 34 prevents any new declarations under the 1882 Act.

Stopping there for a moment, one may ask why are the defendants so anxious to come within the Act, and the plaintiff so anxious to exclude them? No very clear answer was given by Counsel, but it was pointed out that a dignity or honorary status went with the terms "Talukdar" and "Mulgameti." It was also suggested that the inclusion of the defendants might lead to increased interference by Government in the affairs of the village, and that friction might thereby be caused. But whatever may be the real motives of the contending parties, I think one may fairly assume that, as a matter of common sense, the respective parties would not have fought out this heavy litigation with its voluminous record and lengthy arguments, unless in their opinion there was some material advantage to be gained by obtaining a decision of the Court in their favour on the ostensible point in dispute.

The next difficulty is to define a Mulgameti, and it seems to me a very real one. Literally it signifies a former lord or proprietor of a village, and is derived from three words, viz, Mul (former), gam (village) and pati (lord). But in my opinion it is clear that the literal meaning is too wide and in some respects too narrow. For instance this literal meaning (a) would not include any descendants of a former lord, (b) nor necessitate such former lord having held any sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights, (c) nor necessitate his descendants retaining any portion of the lands or rights formerly enjoyed. Some clue to its real meaning may, I think, be obtained from the word

"mul" which is probably the same word as the Sanskrit "mul" signifying a root, and hence figuratively the root of a tree or origin of a family. If that derivation is correct, it would account for the secondary use of the word as "original" or "former." In this connection I may refer to the learned judgment of Sir Michael Westropp in Vyakunta Bapuji v. Government of Bombay (2), where the expression "Mulavargdar" as used in Kanara, was held to mean the proprietor of an ancestral hereditary estate, and was contrasted with "Gainivarg" where the land is held directly from the State (page 20).

The dictionary definitions give us little assistance. Robertson at page 16 defines "Gameti" as a Rajput Grashiya in the Ahmedabad Collectorate. "Grash" he says is a grant to a younger son of a Chief for his maintenance. Wilson at page 577 states that "Gameti" is the designation of proprietary villages held by Rajputs paying revenue. But defendants Nos. 1 to 30 are not Rajput cadets. They are Kathis. The plaintiff does not, however, contend that the definition should be confined to Rajputs.

The learned Trial Judge defined Gameti as a person holding in full proprietorship a village or group of villages and paying tribute or taxation (however you may call it) to the paramount power, and exercising certain sovereign rights in the village. If such a Gameti alienated his proprietorship, but reserved to himself some rights of a class associated with the retention by him of some sort of sovereignty, then he became an old proprietor known as a Mulgameti.

Defendants' Counsel does not accept this meaning of Mulgameti. He admits that the old proprietor must retain certain lands or rights, but contends that those rights need not be sovereign rights. He would define "Mulgameti" as follows, viz., "a person who or whose ancestor was once a proprietor of the village but who has lost the proprietorship retaining for himself a share of the village lands and land revenue such as jiwat and chouth, even though he may not have retained a share in the Government of the village, or any sovereign rights."

Plaintiffs' Counsel on the other hand accepts the learned Judge's definition of Mulgameti, but contends that the defendants Nos. 1 to 30 were wrongly held to have retained any sovereign or seigniorial rights, and that in fact all those rights passed to plaintiff about 1777 or 1781, and have ever since been enjoyed by him. Plaintiff's contention in short was that you cannot have an ex-Gameti unless he retains part of the sovereign rights.

Both Counsel, however, agree that to constitute a Mulgameti at the present day, he must hold some lands or rights which have descended to him from a Gameti. For instance, a Bombay Bania would not become a Mulgameti by purchasing some of the lands of the defendants. It is also agreed that the Kathi defendants Nos. 1 to 30 have established their descent from the persons they say were at one time Gametis. But there was no agreement, I think, as to the date up to which the Gameti must have remained a Gameti. If, for instance, the Act only refers to those who were Gametis at the date of the cession of the district by the Peshwas to the East India Company, but who then lost their rights and became Mulgametis, that would effect a substantial restriction on possible claimants for that name.

In Secretary of State v. Bai Rajbai (3) the Privy Council distinguished the status and rights of Kasbatis from those of Garasias and other true Taluqdars. At page 751* Lord Atkinson said:—

"They (Garasias) were ancient Rajpoot proprietors, and before the cession of the Ahmedabad Zilla, stood to their Native Sovereigns in that relation, their lands being cultivated by raiya tenants.

They and the Mewassias were clearly distinguishable from the Kasbatis. The last-named held their lands by contract, neither by sanad nor by defiance, and Colonel Walker, the first official appointed to deal with this district, was well aware that there was no analogy between the holdings of the Garasias and those of the Kasbatis. The word taluk was first applied to these Rajpoot proprietors by the British themselves."

Then at page 752* he continues:—

"They (Kasbatis) never were Taluqdars of Ahmedabad in the true sense. They did not lose their ancient right of ownership of their land by taking leases, as did the Garasias, and, therefore, did not suffer the injustice which the Statute (i. e. the 1862 Act) was designed to remedy."

I shall refer to this case again in another connection; and also to Maharana Shri Jaswantsingji Patesingji v. Secretary of State (4) where Mr. Justice Candy used the expression "Mulgameti" as meaning the original owner of the village; and quoted from Peile (page 21) where it is said: "The relief which it is possible to give to original holders (Mulgametis) is, therefore, small." Peile at pages 72 to 81 gives particulars of the Dhundooka Taluqa in 1863, and after setting out at page 76 that the plaintiff is the proprietor of various villages, including two-thirds of the village Salangpur, and pays a fixed jama of Rs. 15,448-0-11 sanctioned by Government on May 28, 1821, he states in a foot-note to page 80 as follows:—

"N. B. The Limree estate is only a late acquisition by Limree and was originally the property of Chorasumas or Kathees who are still found in the villages as Mool Gametees."

Colonel Jacob in his Report of October 1842 thus describes the origin of Mulgerassias:—

"The establishment of various tribes in the peninsula was founded on the sword, but much of the territory was subsequently gained by the weaker land-holders writing over their geerass to whomsoever they thought best able to protect them, reserving a fixed portion for themselves. These when they retained only a minor share of the village lands and taxes without one in its Government, are termed Mool Geerassias, and from the natural result of power and cupidity united have in most cases been deprived by degrees of much or all of what they had reserved for themselves. With those exceptions, the tenure on which the Chiefs hold their possessions is that of absolute sovereignty over, and property in, the soil." (See Selections, Volume 37, p. 23).

In Peile at page 67 is set out a despatch from the Government of Bombay, in 1862, pointing out that the Taluqdars of Gujarat are quite different in status and powers from the Taluqdars in the North-West Provinces:

"The Taluqdars of Gujarat all call themselves Gametees, Grassias, and more frequently still Bhomeas, all of which names indicate very ancient family possessions. These proprietors are the direct issue of one cadet of some Rajpoot, Gadee, or Sovereign Chief to whom two or three villages were given for support. The gadees or chiefships (such as Limree . . .) from which they have sprung still exist, and are recognised by the Gametees or Grassias as their natural head. The proprietary right of these Gametees, Grassias or Bhomeas is, therefore, as towards the public or States as complete as possible."

The present case is, therefore, somewhat unusual as we have to deal with Kathis and not with the cadets of a chieftain family. A long account of the Kathis is given by Colonel Walker in Selections pages 246 to 254, and though he does not give them a good character (see page 252), it was hardly an age for good characters in those parts of India. Strength was, then, a more important qualification for existence.

[His Lordship then referred to several passages of Colonel Walker's report and to the Girasia Court Rules in the Kathiawar Agency for determining disputes between the various kinds of land owners and, after discussing the judgment of the Trial Court, proceeded—]

The conclusion then, which I have arrived at, is that the learned Judge was correct in his view that generally speaking a Gameti would have sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights, but that I disagree with his finding that to constitute a Mulgameti some retention of such sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights is essential. In my opinion it is sufficient if the Gameti retains or is re-granted some of his former lands or an interest therein although all his former governing rights pass to others.

I will not attempt an exhaustive definition for all Gujarat, but as far as the village of Salangpur is concerned and for the purpose of the present case only, I will describe a Mulgameti as follows, viz., one who is or is descended from a former ruler and owner of the village and still retains, by re-grant or otherwise some portion of the lands or interests therein of such former ruler and owner, but not necessarily any of his governing rights.

I will next consider what are the existing interests of the parties in the village. Barring certain claims which the learned Trial Judge has disallowed, the existing interests of the parties are substantially what they have enjoyed for over one hundred years past.

[His Lordship then discussed the figures showing the area held by different parties and their interest therein and proceeded—]

A good deal turns in this case on the significance to be attached to the chauth which the defendants thus get. Literally chauth means a quarter of the income of the village. But sometimes it has been used to designate a form of blackmail which was levied in the old days as the price paid for forbearance to ravage. Before us, however, the plaintiff's Counsel has been content to treat the chauth as meaning merely the fraction of the income I have indicated.

These then being the interests of the parties, are defendants Noa 1 to 30 Mulgametis, and do they hold their land directly from Government? To answer this question, one must investigate the history of the village. Now at the trial two conflicting theories were advanced as to how the village lands came thus to be held in the present manner. The plaintiff alleged that originally he was the proprietor of the whole village, and that these jiwai lands and also the chauth were extorted from him by robber bands as the price of forbearance to ravage his estate. Consequently as this he said was the origin of the Kathis, they were never Gametis, and could not properly be regarded as Mulgametis. The case of the Kathi defendants was that they were the original proprietors of the village, and that for their own purposes they had leased or mortgaged the village from time to time to the plaintiff, and that he had wrongfully set up a title as an absolute owner.

The learned Judge found the facts midway between these two contentions. He found that the Kathis were the original proprietors of the village, and that in 1763 or thereabouts they granted one-third of it to the ancestor of defendant No. 39, and that in 1777 or 1781 they granted the remaining two-thirds to the plaintiff's ancestor, but that on the occasion of the latter grant they reserved to themselves the jiwai lands, namely, the 1668 acres and also the chauth in the remaining lands, namely, the 1462 acres. He rejected entirely the alleged leases or mortgages set up by the defendants.

My conclusion then is that the learned Judge rightly rejected all these alleged leases or mortgages, and that the present rights of the parties should be decided on that footing.

What then are the conclusions which one ought to draw from the voluminous evidence in this case? The Kathi defendants Nos. 1 to 39 are admittedly descendants of former Gametis, and admittedly hold jiwai lands, formerly belonging to those Gametis, and also chauth in respect of the produce of other land. But I draw a distinction between the mere holding of land or an interest therein such as chauth, and the exercise of sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights. In my judgment the true inference to be drawn from the facts is that in 1777 or 1781 or thereabouts the Kathis surrendered their lordship of the village to the Thakore Sahib in perpetuity in exchange for his protection, but at the same time retained or were re-granted the jiwai lands and the chauth. As the new Gameti, it was thenceforward for the Thakore Sahib to pay the jama, and settle all differences with the Peshwas and afterwards with Government, and this in fact he appears to have done ever since. In my judgment, therefore, the Kathis have not had any quasi-sovereign or seigniorial rights in respect of this village since 1781.

If then I were to accept the definition of Mulgameti adopted by the learned Judge, it would follow that I should not consider the Kathis to be Mulgametis. But taking as I do the view that the retention of sovereign rights is not essential to constitute a Mulgameti, I have arrived at the conclusion that in fact the Kathi defendants are Mulgametis by reason of their retention of the jiwai lands and chauth. And I am considerably fortified in this conclusion by the fact that in that formal document, Exhibit 428, and also in Exhibit 406 the Limbdi State has itself described and treated the Kathis as the Mulgametis of the village. And to this I may add the corroboration afforded by the definition of "Mulgirassia" in the Girassia Court Rules of the Kathiawar Agency, which I have already alluded to.

But can it be truly said that defendants Nos. 1 to 39 are Mulgametis "who hold land directly from Government" within the meaning of the amended Act? Unfortunately the learned Judge has almost taken this point for granted, for the following is the only direct passage in the judgment which deals with it, viz: "No real Mulgameti would fail to hold land direct from Government, for he must hold it from some one and ex hypothesi does not hold it from the actual proprietor."

Defendants' Counsel endeavoured to support this proposition by contending that in theory all lands in British India belong to Government, and that if any one is found in possession of rent free lands, presumably he holds from Govenfranchisement. I do not desire to be thus drawn into the controversial questions which were considered at great length in Vyakunta Bapuji v. Government of Bombay (2) and by the Privy Council in Gunga Gobind Mundul v. The Collector of the Twenty-four Pergunnahs (5) but I think I have stated enough of the history of the village of Salangpur to show that the Peshwas at any rate did not have the property in the soil of this village, and that the British officers felt the greatest difficulty in claiming more than a mere right of jama or tribute. No doubt after conquest, it is the right of the conqueror to say what he will take and what he will concede. Thus in Secretary of State v. Bai Rajbai (3) it was held by the Privy Council, following other authorities, that after a cession of territory to British Rule the only enforceable rights against the sovereign are those conferred by him after the cession either by agreement, express or implied or by legislation. An implied agreement conferring rights may be established by evidence of recognition of rights existing before cession, and of an election express or implied to be bound by them: but the burden of establishing the existence of an enforceable right is upon the subject.

In the present case we have the express agreement between the Thakore Sahib and Government which is contained in Walker's Settlement, and which has been acted on ever since 1807-8. But I can find no agreement express or implied between the Kathi defendants or their ancestors and the British Government. On the contrary it is the Thakore Sahib who has dealt directly with Government. Even, therefore, if it can be said that the Kathis hold their jiwai lands from Government—which, in my opinion, is open to extreme doubt—they do not, in my opinion, hold these lands "directly" from Government. An intermediary in the shape of the Thakore Sahib has, in my opinion, been interposed between them and Government. The very use of the word "directly" would seem to negative the mere application of any general theory that all land is held of the Crown. The definition in section 2 (1) (a) would indeed fit those Girassia proprietors spoken of in the same case (pages 751-752) who had taken leases from the British Government. They undoubtedly would hold directly from Government, but no such lease or sanad from Government has ever been taken by any of the Salangpur Kathis, so far as the evidence before us goes.

[His Lordship at this stage referred to the Bombay Land Revenue Code, 1879, and discussed the effect thereof on the question. After discussing various sections of the Code he proceeded.—]

The conclusions then which I draw from the 1888 Act and the Code is that defendants Nos 1 to 30 would be liable for land revenue, if it were not for the 1807 Settlement which the Thakore Sahib effected with Colonel Walker; and further that it is the Thakore Sahib as the registered Taluqdar who is regarded by Government as the person primarily responsible to them for such land revenue. The Code also uses the expression "lessee holding directly under Government" in excluding such a lessee from the definition of "tenant" in section 3 (14). Why say "directly" unless it was to negative any mere theoretical holding under the Crown?

Further the Code in defining in section 3 (13) a superior and an inferior holder and in fixing in section 83 their respective rights, would seem to consider the actual payer to Government of the land revenue to be the superior holder, provided he is entitled to receive it from another, viz. the inferior holder. In the present case, the plaintiff is not, I think, entitled to recover jama from the defendants Nos. 1 to 30. He pays the whole, and has no right of recoupment or contribution. Apart from that—which I agree is an important difference—he and they would seem to occupy the position of superior and inferior holders respectively as defined by the Code.

Nor I think is any different conclusion to be arrived at by studying the earliest Land Revenue Regulations which

DOLATSINGJI JASWANTSINGJI v. OGHAD VIRA.

Counsel referred us to, viz., Regulation XVII of 1827. There rule 2 (1) provides that—

"All land shall be liable to the payment of land revenue to Government according to the established principles which govern the assessment of that description of land to which it belongs, except such as may be proved to be either wholly or partially exempt from the payment of Land Revenue under any of the provisions of this Regulation."

It will be seen that this substantially corresponds with section 45 of the present Code.

Then section 3 is important. It runs:—

"The settlement of the assessment shall be made with the occupant. The cultivator when the land is held direct from Government is to be considered the occupant; and when it is not so held the person having the highest right or holding recognised by the custom of the country or resting on specific grant which intervenes between the Government and the cultivator is to be so considered."

Once more then we get the reference to holding "direct" from Government. And if the cultivator does not so hold direct, then Government makes liable the highest right intervening between the cultivator and Government. In the present case, surely the Thakore Sahib as Gameti would be the person having such highest right. At any rate nobody else has hitherto been recognised as having it except the Thakore Sahib. I exclude of course defendant No. 39. He is not a Kathi.

Then Regulation V provides that the occupant shall be liable in his person and property for the revenue of the land, but on non-payment by the superior holder it may be recovered from the inferior holder. And Regulation XXX provides that superior holders are responsible to the Collector for the public revenue assessed on their lands and, if payment is not made, the Collector may realise from the crop the amount due, or remit direct to the inferior holder as provided in section 5.

It is true that Regulation IV (2) provides that when there is a right on the part of the occupant in limitation of the right of Government in consequence of a specific limit having been established and preserved, the assessment shall not exceed such specific limit. That provision may protect the Thakore Sahib having regard to Walker's Settlement, but I fail to see what limitation on the right of Government could be proved by the Kathi defendants if once Walker's Settlement was out of the way. They were no direct parties to that settlement. Whether if Government forced them to pay, they would have any right of indemnity against the Thakore Sahib under the provisions of a presumed lost grant in 1777 or 1781 I need not discuss. No such point has been taken before us. In the result, therefore, I think these Regulations and the subsequent Code and the 1888 Act rather assist the Thakore Sahib's contentions than otherwise.

I have now dealt with the more important of the able and lucid arguments that were urged on us by Counsel for the respective parties. My final conclusion on the whole case is that the Kathi defendants Nos. 1 to 30, though they are Mulgametis, do not hold land directly from Government, and consequently are not Taluqdars within the meaning of the 1888 Act as amended by the 1905 Act. Defendants Nos. 31 to 38 are neither Mulgametis nor Taluqdars.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal, and set aside the decree of the Court below, and instead make a declaration to the following effect, viz., that within the meaning of the Gujarat Taluqdars' Act (Bombay Act VI of 1888) as amended by Bombay Act II of 1905, the Kathi defendants Nos. 1 to 30 are Mulgametis but that they do not hold land directly from Government and that they are not Taluqdars and that defendants Nos. 31 to 38 are not Mulgametis or Taluqdars.

As regards the Settlement Register (Exhibit 439), it is not for us to make any actual amendment therein. Our duty is to determine the rights of the parties, and it is then for the Survey Officer or the Collector to make any necessary amendments under sections 6 (2) and 8 (2) of the 1888 Act. We have now determined those rights and, in the view we take, the 1905 Act has effected no change in the respective rights of the present parties under the Gujaat Taluqdars' Act with reference to this particular village. But we may point out that as regards the only extract from the Register shown to us, viz., Exhibit 439, the Kathi defendants would not appear to be entered as Taluqdars but only as Mulgametis.

As regards costs, the plaintiff has failed in his contention that his ancestors were the original grantors to the defendants, and that the defendants Nos 1 to 30 are not Mulgametis. On the other hand, these defendants have failed in their contention that the plaintiff was only a lessee or mortgagee from them, and that they are Taluqdars within the meaning of the Act. Under all the circumstances of the case, I think the fair order as to costs will be that each party should bear his own costs throughout in both Courts. This order also applies to defendant No. 39. He has espoused the cause of the Kathis, and must stand or fall with them.

I have not overlooked the fact that in his plaint the plaintiff claimed that the village of Salangpur was a village in Limbdi State belonging to him; but this surprising claim was dropped before the trial. The written statement of defendant No. 39 goes far beyond any mere defence to this abandoned claim, and it would appear that he took an active part at the trial, and put in a large amount of documentary evidence. He cannot, therefore, be regarded as a nominal party, more especially as he was added at his own request.

Pratt, J.—The plaintiff in this suit is the Chief of Limbdi who has been registered as Taluqdar of the British village of Salangpur in the Settlement Register prepared under section 5 of Bombay Act VI of 1888.

He complains that although he is the sole proprietor and Taluqdar of the village defendants Nos. 1 to 38 have been registered as Mulgametis. This, he says, is prejudicial to his rights and status as Talukdar and he seeks a declaration that defendants Nos. 1 to 39 are not Mulgametis or Talukdars.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 30 are Kathis holding jiwa or rent-free lands in the village and claimed that they held the land independently of the plaintiff, and are, therefore, Mulgametis or Talukdars.

Defendants Nos. 31 to 38 are their assignees who are not interested.

Defendant No. 39, Sher Miya, was added as a party at his own request as he is a registered one-third sharer in the Talukdari of the village and desired to resist the plaintiff's claim to be sole Talukdar.

The lower Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that defendants Nos. 1 to 38 were Mulgametis holding directly under Government.

The plaintiff has, therefore, appealed. The talukdari estates in Gujarat are the remnants of old Rajput kingdoms. These disintegrated being either disrupted by internecine feuds, or crushed by foreign invaders. The subordinate states thus formed were known by names generally indicative of their origin. The smallest of these subordinate rulers was the Gameti or ruler of a single village. In Mahratha times these estates were independent and Colonel Walker writing of them in 1804 says:

"With the reservation of their acknowledged tributary payments, the Kattywar States are independent, and at liberty to form connections with other powers. They are under no obligations of service, and neither the Peshwa nor the Gaekwar pretended to exercise an authority in Kattywar, beyond the demand of their respective contributions."

Under the British Rule the old rulership slowly degraded into a mere landlord estate. This process is foreshadowed in Colonel Walker's Report of July 25th 1806—(Selections from Government Records No. 39, page 52)—In paragraph 69 occurs the following passage:

"Hence it would appear that the Purganas of Dundooka, Ranpoor, and Gogo and even Dholka, comprehend exclusively of the Honourable Company's Sirkar a variety of lordships."

DOLATSINGJI JASWANTSINGJI V. OGHAD VIRA.

Then in paragraph 81 he makes the following significant recommendation—

"It would, however, be extremely desirable to dissolve these discordant authorities and to consolidate all the inferior jurisdictions under the Company's power."

Bombay Act XIX of 1844 abolishing various local taxes and cesses was one stage in the process by which some of these lordships or seigniorial rights were dissolved. But it may be that some still survive such as the right to waste or the right of escheat.

A Talukdari estate is, therefore, an estate which connoted rulership in pre-British times but which is now a land-lord estate to which some seigniorial or subordinate rights may or may not be still attached.

When the estate connoted rulership of a single village the holder is a Mulgameti, i.e., a Gameti who has lost all or most of his lordships. These estates being very small the holder was not included in the definition of Talukdar until the amending Act (Bombay Act II of 1905) recognized as a Talukdar a Mulgameti who holds lands directly from Government.

The plaintiff's contention in the lower Court was—

(1) that the Kathi defendants were not Mulgametis as their ancestors were not the rulers of Salangpur.

(2) that even if they were Mulgametis they were not entitled to be registered as they do not hold land directly from Government.

On the first point it is now conceded that prior to 1777 at any rate, the Kathis were the rulers or Gametis of the village and this in spite of the fact that they are Kathis and not Rajputs—for the Kathis had invaded and seized many parts of Kathiawar and indeed Jasdan is a Kathi State. The Revenue Records make it clear that in the time of the Peshwa the village was a Kathi village. It is so entered in the Revenue Settlement of 1759 attached to Collector Byron Rowles' report Exhibit 380. It is also certain that the Kathis paid tribute to the Peshwa in 1772—Bond Exhibit 443 and Taleband Exhibit 374. Then the admissions made by Limbdi in a suit in 1816 show that the Kathis granted one-third of the village to Sher Miya's ancestor in 1763 (Exhibit 353 and Exhibit 372) and then granted two-thirds of the village to Limbdi in 1777 after reserving rent free jiwa land for their maintenance and a chauth or quarter share of the produce (Exhibit 354).

It is, however, contended that when the Kathis granted the two-thirds of the village to Limbdi in 1777 they surrendered all their rights of rulership and were, therefore, no longer Gametis at the time of the British acquisition under the treaty of Bassein in 1802. But the probabilities are all the other way. Grants were at that time made in return for protection and they were generally for a limited period. see DeSouza's report in 1805, Exhibit 378. The Limbdi pleading in the suit of 1816 already referred to did not describe the grant as being in aghat or in perpetuity and Colonel Jacob in his report on Kathiawar in 1842 at paragraph 20 refers to the reluctance of Chiefs to make perpetual grants—Selections from Bombay Government Records, Volume 39, page 27. The Kathis allege that the transaction of 1777 was a lease for a term of years renewed by another lease in 1801. This latter lease (Exhibit 377) is not signed but the fact that it was produced by the Kathis before the Collector as far back as 1829 and that they then claimed that the term of the grant had expired is significant. The grant not being in perpetuity it is not likely that a grant of rights of rulership was included. Indeed Limbdi in 1826 in a petition to the Collector described the Kathis as Mulgametis (Exhibit 406). It is true that this term was sometimes used in a complimentary sense. But the petition of 1826 was one complaining of the conduct of the Kathis and the phrase would not have been used if the Kathis had not been Gametis in 1802. The Kathis were also described as Gametis in the suit of 1816. Proof of the actual exercise of subordinate sovereign rights prior to 1802 either by the Kathis or by Limbdi there is none; but on the evidence available I think it proved that the Kathis were the Gametis up to the time of the British acquisition in 1802

On the second point the District Judge appears to have held that as the Kathis paid no rent to Limbdi and did not derive title from Limbdi they could not be said to hold under Limbdi—and as they did not hold under Limbdi they must hold under Government. But this line of reasoning overlooks the fact that the revenue of the village was paid by the plaintiff first to the Peshwa and then to Government. Indeed the Kathis' written statement admits that the revenue is paid by the plaintiff and by Sher Miya. Colonel Walker settled the Limbdi tribute in 1807 and in the remark column of his statement he made a reference to the revenue of the Dhandhuka Parganna. Whether this implies that Colonel Walker made a Permanent Settlement of the revenue of all the villages in the Parganna including Salangpur for the sum named may well be doubted. But Government have accepted that construction of the settlement. See G. R. 591 of 1821, Exhibit 393. The revenue, therefore, of the village is paid by the plaintiff; and the Kathis who hold part of the village do not hold directly from Government. Moreover, they have not given evidence of any direct dealings with Government ever since 1802. Government compounded the local taxes with Limbdi in 1844 (Exhibit 106) and the Local Fund also with Limbdi in 1865 and 1883 (Exhibit 108). The defendant Kathis are, therefore, not Talukdars.

It must be observed, however, that the plaint is wrong in assuming that the entry of the defendant Kathis in the Talukdari Settlement Register as Mulgametis involves their recognition as Talukdars. The defendants are entered not in column 1 as Talukdars but in columns 6 and 7 as holding rent free land under the Talukdar. If they were entered in the Register as Talukdars they would under section 24 be primarily responsible for the jama which would be absurd for it is admitted the Limbdi is and always has been primarily responsible. Section 5 makes it clear that holders of other rights appear also on the Register.

Plaintiff exaggerated his case in every possible way. He claimed that the village was in his State whereas it is a British village. He said he was sole Talukdar whereas it is admitted that Sher Miya is a one-third sharer in the Talukdari. He pleaded that the Kathi defendants' estate was derived from him whereas it is his estate that is derived from the Kathi. Lastly he pleaded the Talukdari Settlement Register as giving a cause of action for a declaration that the Kathi defendants were not Talukdars whereas they are not entered as Talukdars in the Register. The suit illustrates the warning in Sree Narain Mitter v. Sreemutty Kishen Soondery Dassee (6) where it was said:—

"There is so much more danger in India than here of harassing and vexatious litigation, that the Courts in India ought to be most careful that mere declaratory suits be not converted into a new and mischievous source of litigation."

However, as the Kathi defendants were so ill-advised as to adopt the plaintiff's construction of the Register and to claim in their written statement to be Talukdars I think it would be advisable to make a declaration.

I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed, and a declaration made on the terms suggested by my learned colleague.

The declaration will be that the plaintiff is a two-third sharer in the Talukdari estate of Salangpur, that the other one-third sharer in the Talukdari is defendant No. 39 Sher Miya Bapuniya, that the Kathi defendants are not Talukdars but Mulgametis not holding directly from Government. I agree with my learned brother's order that parties bear their own costs in both Courts.

The burden of proving that an entry in the Record of Rights is erroneous is on the party alleging it. [p. 881, col. 1]

A talukdar who has been paying revenue to the zemindar but has taken no steps to obtain separation of his jama from the zemindary jama is not an independent talukdar within the meaning of section 5 of the Bengal Decennial Settlement Regulation, 1793. [p. 882, cols. 1 & 2]

A kabulyat predicated a patta. A patta is granted by the zemindar as a title-deed to the tenant. The kabulyat, as its name implies, is a mere acknowledgment, an engagement by the tenant to carry out the terms of the patta. [p. 882, col. 2]

The "resumption" of a "service tenure" does not mean that, on failure of the direct male line it "reverts" to the zemindar and becomes what is called his sur or khas property, the jagir retains its character, but the zemindar becomes entitled to make a new settlement with the knowledge and sanction of the authorities. JUDGMENT.

Mr. Ameer Ali.—The suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the plaintiffs on the 28th July, 1908, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi under the following circumstances. The plaintiff Srinath Roy purchased on the 15th September, 1899, in execution of a mortgage decree, Pargana Bundu, a property lying within the estate of Chota Nagpur. The second and third plaintiffs are Srinath Roy's brothers and interested in the purchase, whilst the fourth is an assignee of a share in the property in question. It appears that in 1895 the first three plaintiffs advanced a large sum of money to one Tikait Jagannath Roy, since deceased, who was then in possession of the property, on a mortgage of the same. The document of mortgage bears date the 2nd of August, 1895. In default of payment a suit was brought, and a decree obtained upon it in October 1898.

The sale proclamation was issued on the 20th of July, 1899, and the sale held, as already stated, on the 15th of September, 1899. The plaintiff Srinath Roy obtained the sale certificate on the 20th of January, 1900. He claims that Pargana Bundu was the absolute estate of his mortgagor and that he is entitled to it by virtue of his purchase.

The defendant is the Zemindar of the Chota Nagpur estate, and his contention is that the property in question was a jagir tenure held by Jagannath defensible on failure of the lineal male line of the grantee, and the plaintiffs' mortgagor having died without leaving any male issue, he has resumed the same, as he was lawfully entitled to do.

In 1903 the Bengal Government directed, under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the preparation of a Record of Rights in respect of the Chota Nagpur estate. The Settlement Officer, Mr. Lister, in pursuance of the instructions of the Government, and in accordance with the provisions of the Tenancy Act, instituted a careful and minute enquiry relating to the tenures and other subordinate tenancies within the Chota Nagpur estate. Section 102, clause X, requires the Settlement Officer to include among other particulars "the special conditions and incidents, if any of the tenancy" regarding which the enquiry is being held. Mr. Lister, accordingly made in the register of tenancies, technically called the Khowat SRINATH RAY V. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHAJ DEO.

the following entry against Pargana Bundu —

"Col. 4.—Nature of rights—Jagir khudmat (that is, service tenure resumable).

"Col. 5.—Resumable or not—Kabul-kabit.

"Col. 11.—Remarks—Yeh Jagir Tekant Basdeo Rai, hasil kiya is shart par ke Putra Putradik bhog kare."

"The entry in the column of remarks is intended to mean that the tenure is Putra Putradik and derived from Basdeo Rai."

Basdeo was the grandfather of the mortgagor. It is to be noted that the words Putra Putradik denoted descent in the direct male line. The entry rendered into English runs thus:—"This jagir was obtained by Tekant Basdeo Rai on condition of enjoyment in the direct male line."

Section 103 (B) of the Tenancy Act provided that —

"A certificate, signed by the Revenue Officer, stating that a Record of Rights has been finally published under this Chapter, shall be conclusive evidence of such publication; and every entry in a Record of Rights so published shall be presumed to be correct until the contrary is proved."

The plaintiff accordingly brought this suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ranchi to set aside the order of the Settlement Officer referred to above, and to obtain a declaration that Pargana Bundu was held as an independent estate by the ancestors of his mortgagor from a time previous to the Permanent Settlement made by the Government with the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur, that it was incorporated as a Shikmi or dependent taluk in such settlement with the Maharaja merely for the payment of the revenue through him, that the subsequent grant made by the Maharaja to Basdeo Roy referred to in the Settlement Officer's entry was not consequent upon a resumption or fresh settlement, but was a mere continuance of the old status. The defendant, the Maharaja, pleaded that Pargana Bundu was never an independent estate, that it was a mere jagir or tenure resumable on failure of the direct male line, and that the last holder in the direct line having died in 1847 without leaving any male issue, he (the Maharaja) made a new grant to Basdeo Roy, by which Basdeo clearly acknowledged that the tenure was resumable on failure of the lineal male line of the grantee.

A number of issues were framed by the Subordinate Judge, all of which relate to the nature of the property in suit, viz., whether it was a resumable jagir, or was an independent estate held by the ancestors of the plaintiffs mortgagor and was incorporated in the zemindari of the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur as a Shikmi or dependent taluk, with its revenue payable through the Maharaja. The fourth issue related to the character of the grant made to Basdeo Roy. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge who first tried the case was reversed on appeal by the High Court and the case was remanded for a fresh trial. The Subordinate Judge before whom the case came for hearing the second time rests his judgment almost entirely on the non-production by the defendant of the kabuliyat, which it was alleged was executed in 1794 by the holder of the jagir at the time. The Subordinate Judge held that Pargana Bundu was the absolute estate of the jagirdar when it was incorporated in the Maharaja's estate, and that since its incorporation its revenue only is payable to Government through the zemindar. Had it been otherwise, says the learned Judge, the Maharaja would have produced the kabuliyat given to him by the jagirdar. He also accepted the contention of the plaintiffs that the grant made by the Maharaja to Basdeo in 1849 was not a new settlement but only a continuance of the old jagir. He accordingly decreed the plaintiffs' claim.

The following passage in the Subordinate Judge's judgment shows the trend of his mind in dealing with the case. He says:—

"Taking the broad facts of this case, it appears, that the Bundu Raj Estate existed from time before the accession of the British Government. This estate was gained by conquest and the Raja was made to execute kabuliyat in favour of the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur agreeing to pay Government revenue through him. This estate is heritable as well as transferable. The plaintiffs obtained this property by mortgage and afterwards at a sale purchased it in execution of the decree obtained on this bond. The origin of the Bundu Estate is unknown. The defendant has not produced the kabuliyat executed by these Rajas in favour of his ancestors. Under these circumstances, it is not unreasonable to hold that the Bundu Raj Estate is a permanent tenure and is not resumable. The Maharaja has failed to prove that he ever had any right or title to this Pargana. I, therefore, find Issues Nos. 2, 3 and 4 in plaintiffs' favour. I find that Bundu Raj Estate is not a resumable tenure."

And in the decree he declared as follows:—

"Pargana Bundu was held as an independent estate by the ancestors of Raja Haridas Roy prior to the Permanent Settlement, and that Raja Basdeo Roy succeeded Raja Haridas Roy as his nearest heir and agnate and that the status of Bundu Raj Estate was not affected by the Permanent Settlement."

The defendant appealed to the High Court of Patna, which, on the 29th March 1920, reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge, dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The learned Judges of the Appellate Court remarked, not without reason, that the Trial Judge in his treatment of the case had placed on the defendant the burden of showing that the entry in the Record of Rights was correct, whereas it lay on the plaintiffs to show that it was erroneous. And after a close and detailed examination of the respective contentions and of the evidence they came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs had failed to establish that the entry made by the Settlement Officer in the Record of Rights was wrong. They further held that the grant by the Zemindar in 1849 was not a continuation of the old tenure, which came to an end on the death of Haridas Roy in 1847, without leaving any male issue, and that the subsequent grant to Basdeo Roy was a new settlement and that the tenure was a resumable tenure. They accordingly, as already stated, allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit.

The present appeal to His Majesty in Council is by the plaintiffs. The contentions on their behalf have proceeded on the same lines as those which found acceptance with the Subordinate Judge. It is contended in the first place that the jagirdar, or Raja of Bundu, was an independent chief, and that although on its conquest by the British, Bundu was incorporated with the zemindary of Chota Nagpur and its revenue was made payable through the Zemindar, it never lost its character of an independent estate, and that it has always retained that character. Consequently, it is urged, the Maharaja of Chota Nagpur has no right to resume it and that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree by setting aside the revenue entry.

It is impossible to ascertain at this distance of time with any approach to precision the status of the Chiefs of Bundu in relation to the Maharajas of Chota Nagpur before the establishment of British Rule. The Chota Nagpur estate appears from the evidence on the record to extend over an area of several thousand square miles, situated in a tract of country more or less covered with jungle. It further appears from the evidence of Mr. Peppe, the Manager of the Chota Nagpur Estate, that within the ambit of this vast estate there lie some 1,000 jagirs. Beyond the statements contained in the Report of Mr. Webster, who was at one time in charge, on behalf of Government, of the Chota Nagpur Estate, and in other reports made by other officers in the course of their official duties, there is no record of the earlier history of these jagirs, when or how they came into existence and in what relation they stood to the Maharajas. In 1765 with the grant of the Dewani by the Emperor of Delhi to the East India Company, Chota Nagpur, as a part of Behar, came into British hands. It appears that in 1771 or 1772 a temporary settlement of revenue was made by the East India Company with the Zemindar of Chota Nagpur.

SRINATH RAY V. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHAI DEO.

The last settlement with him was contemporaneous with the well-known Decennial Settlement in 1789, and this Settlement, under the provisions of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793, was made permanent. The Maharaja's zemindary is now accordingly, a permanently settled estate. About this time Chota Nagpur appears to have been in a very disturbed condition, whether the jagirdars were refractory subordinates of the Maharaja or rebellious independent Chiefs, it is beyond dispute that the holder of Pargana Bundu, along with other Pargana Chiefs, was reduced to subjection by British forces and his jagur was incorporated with the zemindary of Chota Nagpur, and he was made liable to pay his rent to the Chota Nagpur Zemindar. This is said to have happened in 1794, and this rent, which appears to have been slightly increased in later times, has been regularly paid to the Zemindar.

It is urged on behalf of the plaintiffs that as the jagirdar of Pargana Bundu never paid revenue to the Maharaja before its incorporation in his zemindary, his contribution towards the revenue cannot be treated as rent. And it has been strenuously contended before the Board that his status was that of an independent talukdar under section 5 of the Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793. This contention seems to be based upon a clear misapprehension of the provisions of the Regulation. Section 5 describes the classes of talukdars who were entitled, under its provisions, to obtain separation of their jama from the zemindary jama. The Regulation defined the procedure for the purpose of obtaining the separation. All independent talukdars occupying the position described in clauses 1 to 5, section 5, who had been heretofore paying their quota of the Government dues through the Zemindar, became entitled to obtain a separation of their jama by adopting the procedure laid down in the Regulation. There is not an iota of evidence to show that the jagirdar of Pargana Bundu ever took any step for the separation of his jama. Had he been paying revenue, making use only of the zemindar's serishtas for its transmission to the Government Treasury, or had he occupied the status which is claimed for him, there would have been an undoubted record of the fact in the Government Revenue Register.

The plaintiffs in their plaint had claimed to be only "dependent talukdars." The Regulation draws a wide distinction between "independent talukdars" and "dependent talukdars." The former come within the category of "actual proprietors of land," whereas the latter do not; "they are considered as lease-holders only" (section 7). It was evidently owing to the difficulty presented by section 7 that the contention advanced in the First Court has been abandoned before the Board, and the plaintiffs have taken their stand on section 5.

It is contended that when Major Farmer brought the jagirdar of Bundu into subjection he made him execute a kabuliyat in favour of the Zemindar of Chota Nagpur, and it has been vehemently urged, both by the Subordinate Judge and learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs, that that kabuliyat, if produced, would disprove the defendant's case, and that it has been deliberately withheld by the Maharaja because it would have supported the plaintiffs' contention. There are two clear answers to this argument. In the first place, a kabuliyat predicates a patta. A patta is granted by the Zemindar as a title-deed to the tenant. The kabuliyat, as its name implies, is a mere acknowledgment, an engagement by the tenant to carry out the terms of the patta. If the jagirdar of Bundu entered into a kabuliyat it may be inferred with certainty that there was also a patta; and that patta, as the title-deed of the grantee, would be in the hands of the grantee's heirs and successors, and would, it may safely be presumed, come into the hands of the mortgagee, who derives his title from the mortgagor. On behalf of the plaintiffs it has been urged that he was on bad terms with the mortgagor and could not consequently obtain the necessary documents from him. Considering the nature of the jungle-mahal and the uncertainty of title in those districts, it is somewhat remarkable that the mortgagee should not have endeavoured to obtain from the mortgagor, who at the time of the mortgage was in possession of Bundu, documents of title relating thereto. Much criticism has been passed by the Subordinate Judge, which has to a certain extent been adopted by plaintiffs' Counsel before the Board, on the non-production by the Zemindar of the kabuliyat. The explanation given by the defendant for its non-production has been accepted by the High Court, and their Lordships do not find sufficient reason to take a different view. The defendant's manager, Mr. Peppe, who has been in that office from 1900 to the date he gave his evidence in August, 1916, states:—

"I searched for copy of Bundu Pottah. I could not find out any copy of Bundu Pottah. All the ancient records of the Maharaja are not in existence. These documents were kept in the custody of Gunpat Ray, who was Maharaja's Record-keeper. He was called upon to make over all these records to the Maharaja. He did not choose to do so. Thereupon he was convicted."

[It is in evidence that this Gunpat Ray was subsequently hanged for Mutiny.] In cross-examination Mr. Peppe states as follows:—

"There is practically no paper in the record room prior to the time when the Court of Wards took over charge."

The Court of Wards were in charge of the Zemindari of Chota Nagpur from 1868 or 1869 to 1887. Apparently, it was then that an effort was made to overhaul the record room of the Maharaja and obtain copies of the pattas that had been given to the various jagirdars. The numerous documents that were forthcoming in the earlier proceedings lend support to the story that important papers were purloined or abstracted from the Zemindar's record room about the time of the Mutiny.

In 1826 Mr. Outhbert, who was appointed by the Government to make a report on the Chota Nagpur District, submitted a report on the 21st of April and 14th of June, 1827, in which occurs the following passage on which considerable reliance has been placed on behalf of the plaintiffs:—

In paragraph 20 he states:—

"Six subordinate parganas are incorporated with Chota Nagpur, viz., Tamar, Buroda, Raie, Boondoo, Silee and Burwa. How or when these parganas became dependent on the Raja of Chota Nagpur I cannot ascertain but it would appear that for a long time the dependence was little more than nominal. It was not until the country came into our possession that these Rajas were permanently and actually incorporated with Chota Nagpur."

And continuing, he adds, in the same paragraph:—

"These Rajas may be considered in the light of Talukdars. The Rajas, however, still acknowledge the Rajas of Chota Nagpur as their feudal Chief, and on the death of a Raja his successor waits on the Raja of Nagpur, pays homage and presents a considerable nazar—generally 1,000 rupees—and receives the Tilluc from him."

What follows, however, is important:—

24. "Although from the nature of these feudal tenures jageers were originally granted solely in consideration of military services, yet services, of a civil and religious nature were afterwards similarly rewarded at the pleasure of the superior."

25. "The number of larger jageers is 26, consisting of about 25 31/2 villages. These jageers have invariably descended from father to son, and both the custom of the pargana and the practice of the Courts hold them as hereditary in the direct male line. On a jageerdar dying without male issue his jageer generally reverts to the Raja, as females in this country do not succeed to real property."

The italics are their Lordships'.

Mr. Cethbert's statement in this paragraph clearly goes to support the defendant's contention that the Bundu Jagir was, like others descendable in the direct male line resumable on failure of such line.

To this report Mr. Outhbert attached a list of parganas prepared in 1827. It is headed thus:—

"List of Parganas of Nagpur, being the Zemindari of Maharaja Jagarnath

SRINATH RAY v. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHAI DEO.

"Sahai Deo on condition of rendering service."

And then comes :—

"Ghatwals Jagirdars on condition of rendering service."

One of the Jagirdars there mentioned is "Bundu—Raja Balamdar Rai."

Pargana Bundu thus remained in the hands of the lineal descendants of Kanukdand Rai, who was found to be in possession in 1794, until it devolved on Haridas Rai. He is stated to have died on the 10th January, 1847. On his death his widows applied for possession of the jagir; at the same time two of his collaterals (Kanchan Lal and Basdeo Rai) advanced a claim in respect to the succession. At this time Jagannath Sahi Deo was the Maharaja and Zemindar of Chota Nagpur. Arrears of rent had fallen due in respect of Bundu, and he appears to have instituted proceedings in the Collectorate for recovery of his rent. In the course of these proceedings a Sazawal or curator, was appointed to take charge of the property. The order relating to the attachment of Pargana Bundu and the appointment of the Tahsildar as curator bears date of the 23rd of August, 1847.

On the 26th July, 1848, Kanchan Lal applied to the Civil Court presided over by the Agent of the Governor-General, complaining that the Sazawal had ousted the petitioner from some lands granted by a former Jagirdar of Bundu for maintenance. The order of the Civil Court on this petition is important. It shows the exact nature of Pargana Bundu in relation to the Zemindar—

"The Rajah of Pargana Bundu died without issue; and now a Sazawal is appointed by Government in the said pargana and it is not known what settlement the Maharaja of Palkot [Chota Nagpur] has made with respect to Pargana Bundu; because in accordance with the sanad and pottah of the said Maharaja, the Maharaja, can make over the pargana to any body who may be found entitled after the death of Rajah Haridas Ray, Zemindar of Bundu, and with respect thereto the Maharaja has power to resume the said pargana if he finds nobody entitled to Pargana Bundu, upon giving notice, and with the sanction of the Assistant Agent at Lohardaga. Thereafter any person who may think himself entitled is at liberty to institute a civil suit. Therefore, it is ordered that a parwana be issued to Maharaja Jagannath Sahi Deo, Zemindar of the Pargannas of Chota Nagpur, containing the matters above mentioned, with a request to forward a receipt of the parwana to His Honour and a copy of this proceeding be forwarded for information to the Personal Assistant of District Lohardaga."

Three years earlier, in a proceeding of the 26th of December, 1845, the Agent to the Governor-General, acting as the Civil Court, had, in connection with Pargana Rahi, pointed out that the Maharaja "could resume the jagir by giving information to and receiving permission from the authorities in the event of the lessee dying without issue."

The adoption of this procedure was re-affirmed on the 26th July, 1848. The zemindar was debarred from acting capriciously or arbitrarily; he could only exercise his right with the knowledge and sanction of the authorities. And Jagannath Sahi appears to have adhered to the procedure prescribed by the Government Officers.

Out of the two claimants, who had come forward for the possession of Pargana Bundu, he selected Basdeo, and installed him as Raja or jagirdar. To mark Basdeo's installation the Maharaja affixed the tilak on his forehead. This was the undisputed right of the overlord.

On the 28th of February, 1849, Basdeo reported to the District Officers the fact of his installation and of receiving the tilak.

On the 29th of May, 1849, the Maharaja filed by his mukhtars (agents) an application in the Court of the Extra Assistant Commissioner for the discharge of the Sazawal and the issue of the usual parwana (warrant) to Basdeo to take possession of the jagir.

This document, Exhibit I, is headed thus—Application for issue of parwana to Raja Basdeo Ray.

After stating that Raja Haridas Ray,

SRINATH RAY V. PRATAP UDAI NATH SAHAJ DHO.

"Elaqadar of the villages of Bundu," had died.

"without leaving any male issue and leaving him surviving his widows," it proceeds thus:—

"Your petitioner's client (meaning the Maharaja) wanted, in accordance with the custom and practice in his zemindari to resume direct possession of the villages of the deceased Raja. Then unexpectedly the Rani of the deceased Raja reported to the Agent to the Governor-General and to the Commissioner and the former Assistant Agent of District Lohardaga and to your petitioner's client that the senior Rani was pregnant, and prayed that in expectation of a child being born the property might be left in their possession. In accordance with their prayer, the Settlement of the pargana, possessed by the deceased Raja, was kept in abeyance in expectation of the birth of a child of the said Rani."

It then mentions the fact of attachment and the appointment of the Sazawal and gives the substance of the parwana to the Maharaja issued by the Agent to the Governor-General enquiring as to what settlement he had made "in respect of the said pargana because in accordance with your sanad and patta if after the death of Raja Haridas Ray, Zemindar of Bundu, the title devolves on no one, you can resume direct possession thereof."

It then goes on to state that although Basdeo had no title "in accordance with patta and the usage of the zemindari, still your petitioner's client being pleased with the service of the said Lal, with a view to promote cultivation and happiness of the people on approving the application of the said Lal for the grant of tilak of Raj of the entire Pargana Bundu, excluding four Mauzas viz. Kanchi, etc., retained by him for Khalsa Bhandar, granted the rest of the Mauzas of the said pargana fixing an annual rent of cash Rs. 1,000 exclusive of Abwabs, subject to service, and then gave him the Rajgi Tilak of the said Pargana, and after taking kabuliyat (ekarnama) for the maintenance of the Rani which the said Raja has undertaken, and then a patta of jagir conditional upon service, was granted to him by your petitioner's client."

The Maharaja's application then continues:—

"As it is not now necessary for the Sazawal to remain in Pargana Bundu because the said Raja will from 1906 Sambat, under the terms of the kabuliyat and ekarnama, render services, pay the fixed rent and maintain the Rani, it is prayed that in accordance with the proceedings of the Agent to the Governor-General and of the Commissioner, dated the 26th July, 1848, an order may be passed for the removal of the Sazawal in view of the order of release, a parwana may be issued to Basdeo Rai, directing him to proceed to the villages."

As already stated, the petition on behalf of the Maharaja was presented on the 29th of May, 1849. On the 6th of June, 1849, Basdeo's agent filed a similar petition stating that he (Basdeo) had obtained a settlement from the Maharaja and received from him the tilak of installation. It then goes on to state that the Maharaja "upon fixing a rent of Company's Rs. 1,000 per annum, granted to him a nagbast patta conferring upon him the title of Raja, on the 11th Phagan 1905 Sambat and granted to him patta and amalnama, which are forthcoming. At present Pargana Bundu, being attached on account of arrears of rent due to the Maharaja Sahib, collections are made therefrom through the Government Sazawal. Whereas the Maharaja Sahib's rent has been wholly and fully paid, and so a petition on the part of the Maharaja has been submitted to Your Honour praying for the discharge of the Sazawal and for the release of Pargana Bundu, attached on account of rent, and stating that he had invested (my client) with the Rajgi Tilak."

He also prayed for the lease of the gargana from attachment.

The settlement with Basdeo shows that the rent was increased from Rs. 735 to Rs. 1,000, four villages were taken out of the pargana and set apart for the maintenance of Haridas' widows and a new patta was granted to him by the Maharaja and a new parwana was issued to him at the Zemindar's instance for possession of the jagir. In face of these facts it is idle to contend that the settlement with Basdeo was a continuance of the old tenure. Had Basdeo succeeded to the jagir by right of inheritance the maintenance of the Ranis, the widows, would have devolved exclusively on him and the superior landlord would have had no concern with it or the right to take away any part of the property to provide for their maintenance. The Maharaja's interference on behalf of the widows is explainable only on one hypothesis, viz., that he was making a new arrangement by virtue of a right recognised by the authorities. And the grant of the parwana to Basdeo together with the withdrawal of the attachment signified their approval, nor was any exception taken to the increase of the jama.

One more remark on this part of the case seems necessary. In the grant to Basdeo to the jagir is specifically mentioned as a "service tenure," involving the performance of Police and other duties. They could hardly have been newly imposed, as they would at once have attracted the notice of the Governor-General's Agent when the pottah was produced before him and would have led to investigation and comment. It is abundantly clear, therefore, that the jagir, minus four villages, was settled with Basdeo in 1849 on an increased rental.

There seems to be some confusion as to the meaning of the word "resumption" in connection with these tenures. It does not mean that on failure of the direct male line it "escheats" to the zemindar and becomes what is called his str or khas property; the jagir retains its character, but the zemindar becomes entitled to make a new settlement with the knowledge and sanction of the authorities.

In the Record of Rights proceedings the Settlement Officer scrupulously and carefully analysed the evidence in the presence of the plaintiffs, and came to the conclusion embodied in the entry impugned in this suit as erroneous. Under section 104 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the plaintiffs appealed to the Board of Revenue against Mr. Lister's decision. The Board of Revenue, after a remand for the purpose of taking further evidence, in a remarkably well-balanced judgment, held that the plaintiffs had utterly failed to establish their contentions. In the present suit the High Court, on appeal from the Subordinate Judge, examined the evidence with great care and came to a conclusion adverse to them.

Their Lordships have given every attention to the arguments of Counsel for the appellants; they find absolutely no ground for interfering with the decree of the High Court. They consider that this appeal should be dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The respondent will be entitled to the costs of this appeal.

The principle of survivorship which governs succession in ordinary joint family under the Mitakshara has to be followed in the case of impartible estates only for a particular purpose, viz., to find out a successor and it is only for the purpose of determining who is entitled to succeed that the estate is to be treated as the property of the joint family [p 893, col 2]

In the absence of any custom an impartible estate is alienable by way of transfer inter vivos, as well as by testamentary dispositions [ibid]

In considering evidence of inalienability it should be seen that, if there was any occasion, when having regard to human nature, there was likelihood of alienation and alienation was not effected, it would be evidence of inalienability. [p 896, col 2; p 897, col 1]

A Will operates only from the death of the testator and there can be no question of Commissioners' sanction after the death of the testator under section 12A of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates (Amendment) Act of 1909. The Encumbered Estates (Amendment) Act treats a sort of administration of the immovable estate of the debtor in some respects resembling that pursued in an administration suit but with the material difference that whereas in an administration suit the satisfaction of the claims of the creditors is primarily in view, in proceedings under the Act the protection of the debtor and the protection of his estate so far as practicable in spite of its encumbered condition is the main solicitude of the authorities concerned [p 924, col 2]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Midnapur, dated the 21st August 1922.

Sir B. C. Mitter, Counsel, (with him Babus Gunada Charan Sen, Suresh Chandra Das and Narendra Krishna Bose), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title to and recovery of possession of the Dhalbhum Raj Estate, for mesne profits and other reliefs. The plaintiff Jagadish Chandra Deo Dhabal claimed the estate under the Will of Raja Satrugna Deo Dhabal dated the 11th May 1905. The properties belonging to the estate are situated partly in Singhbhum, and partly in the District of Midnapur.

The parties are governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, and their ancestors are said to have migrated from Rajputna centuries ago. The history of the family is stated in

PROTAP CHANDRA V. JAGADISH CHANDRA.

Mohesh Chunder Dhal v. Satrughna Dhal (1) and a genealogical table is given at page 344. The defendant Protap Chandra is descended from one Jugal Kishore who belonged to the main family, and the plaintiff is descended from one Raja Kamala Kant the brother of Jugal Kishore who founded the Jamboni branch of the family.

The Dhalbhum Raj is an impartible estate the succession to which has devolved by family and local custom according to the rule of lineal primogeniture from ancient times. The estate was settled by the British Government with Raja Jagannath the ancestor of the parties at a revenue of Rs. 4,000 in 1777. Raja Satrughna got the Dhalbhum Estate according to the ancient family and local custom. On his death dispute arose as to succession to the estate between the defendant who is his nearest heir, and the plaintiff who claimed the estate under his Will.

Satrughna as stated above executed his Will on the 11th May 1905, and died on the 1st March 1916. The plaintiff on the 6th April 1916 applied for Probate of the Will. The defendant contested the Will, but it was found to be genuine and Probate was ordered to be granted on the 30th May 1917. In the meantime the defendant obtained possession of the estate, and his name was registered under the Land Registration Act by the Deputy Commissioner, Singhbhum, overruling the plaintiff's objections. The order was upheld by the Commissioner, and finally by the Board of Revenue on the 13th July 1917 who held that in the jungle mahals "There was no custom of devisability by Will."

It appears that before the death of Raja Satrughna, the estate came under the Encumbered Estate Act (Bengal Act VI of 1876) upon the complaint of the defendant's father Madhu Sudan on the 2nd August 1905. After Satrughna's death, the defendant as his heir got the estate released in October 1920 from management under the Encumbered Estates Act, but upon his application as a disqualified proprietor the Court of Wards took over the management of the estate. The present suit was instituted on the 17th March 1921, and after it was decreed by the Trial Court, a Receiver of the estate was appointed by this Court.

The defence, inter alia, was that the Dhalbhum Estate had been held and enjoyed by the predecessors of the defendant as an "ancestral joint undivided and impartible Raj" and is still held and enjoyed as such, that the estate is the joint property of a joint undivided family governed by the Mitakshara Law as modified by the customs prevailing in the family and in the locality known as the jungle mahals from time immemorial that the estate was in its origin in the nature of a "feudal tenure in Chief" and was and is by its nature inalienable, that the defendant and his father Madhu Sudan were all along joint with the deceased Raja Satrughna and used to be maintained by the latter, though according to family custom they had a separate house to live in. The defendant denied that the proprietor for the time being of the Dhalbhum Estate had or has any right to dispose of any of the properties of the estate by Will or otherwise or to nominate any person as his heir or successor.

The Court below by its judgment and decree dated the 21st August 1922 held that the estate being an impartible one was alienable, that the defendant had failed to prove that either by custom or by its nature it was inalienable, that the alienation was not bad by reason of the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act, and in the result decreed the suit in a "modified form". The defendant has appealed to this Court.

At the hearing of the appeal an application was made on behalf of the appellant for the admission of certain documents in evidence. These documents were produced in the Court below, but it is said they were not tendered in evidence owing to inadvertance. The respondent objected to their being admitted in evidence. The documents were referred to and discussed by learned Counsel on both sides at the hearing of the appeal, the question of their admissibility being reserved for decision after the arguments were over.

We have considered the question and for reasons recorded in the order-sheet dated to-day we have admitted them (except one) in evidence and directed them to be marked as Exhibits.

The first question for consideration is whether Raja Satrugna had power to dispose of the Dhalbhum Estate by his Will.

It is admitted that parties are governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, that the Dhalbhum Raj is impartible and that the succession to it, takes place according to the rule of lineal primogeniture. It is found that the defendant was joint in estate with Raja Satrugna; the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent does not press his objections to that finding, and there is ample evidence in support of it. So that if there was no power of alienation, the defendant is entitled to succeed by right of survivorship. The Court below has held that it is "settled law now that in case of impartible zemindaries governed by the Mitakshara Law, the holder of the zemindari can alienate the estate by Will, gift, mortgage, sale, adoption or nomination of next-of-kin when there is succession to the zemindari by lineal primogeniture." It has further held that, "It is settled law now that the holder of an impartible zemindari governed by the rule of succession by the custom of lineal primogeniture can alienate the zemindari unless there be any family local custom restricting such alienation, and that the onus of proving such custom lies upon the person who alleges it," and reference is made to the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) and some other cases. On behalf of the appellant it is contended that having regard to the principles enunciated in Baignath Prasad Singh v. Tej. Bali (2) 15 I. A. 51, 10 A. 272; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 139, 12 Ind. Jur. 213, 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 182 (P. C.).

Singh (3) (and some other cases) the holder of an impartible Raj has no power to alienate it, at any rate by any testamentary disposition.

In the case of Baignath Prasad Singh v. Tej. Bali Singh (3) Lord Dunedin in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee reviewed the decisions on the point and held that the succession to an impartible estate which is ancestral property of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara is "designated by survivorship." His Lordship after reviewing the cases on the point decided before Sartaj Kuari's case (2) observed:—

"Up to this point, with the single exception of the Tippera case, which, as stated, was not under Mitakshara Law, the law is all one way and seems to affirm these propositions—

(1) The fact that a Raj is impartible does not make it separate or self-acquired property.

(2) A Raj, though impartible, may in fact be self-acquired or it may be family property of a joint undivided family.

(3) If it is the latter, succession will be regulated according to the rule which obtains in an undivided joint family, so far as the selection of the person entitled to succeed is concerned, i. e., the person will be designated by survivorship, although then according to the custom of impartibility, he will hold the Raj without the others sharing it."

So far, therefore, as the question of succession is concerned, the authorities show that the principle of survivorship regulates the succession in a Mitakshara joint family, though the estate is an impartible one governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture, except that the estate is held by a single member. In the present case, however, the question is not one of succession, but the power of testamentary disposition over an impartible estate. So far as the question of the power of alienation is concerned the leading case is that of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2). In that case the owner of an impartible Raj made a gift of 17 villages forming part of the estate in favour of his younger wife. Thereupon a suit was brought by his son (by his first wife) for declaration that the gift was invalid on the ground that the Raja had no power to alienate any part of the Raj Estate. The Trial Court decided that the deed of gift was invalid. On appeal the High Court of Allahabad held that "they were not prepared to admit at any rate so far as the law governing these (the North-West) Provinces is concerned, except where it is clearly overridden by well-recognised family custom, an absolute disposing power in one member of a joint family over an estate which has some of the incidents at least of joint family property." Sir Richard Couch in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee observed "It is admitted that the Raj is impartible, and that there is a custom of succession by primogeniture. The question how far the general law of the Mitakshara is superseded, and whether the right of the son to control the father is beyond the custom is one of some difficulty. The Judges of the High Court have quoted in support of their view passages from several judgments of this Committee. In all of them the question was as to the succession to the property on the death of the Raja or zemindar and it was held that, for the purpose of determining who was entitled to succeed, the estate must be considered as the joint property of the family." Then after referring to some decisions of the Judicial Committee his Lordship observed "that though an impartible estate may be for some purposes spoken of as joint family property, the co-parcenary in it which under the Mitakshara Law is created by birth does not exist." "The reason for the restraint upon alienation under the law of the Mitakshara is inconsistent with the custom of impartibility, and succession according to primogeniture. The inability of the father to make an alienation arises from the proprietary right of the sons. The argument in support of the view of the High Court appears to be that although the sons do not take an interest by birth, so as to enable them to hold the estate or to have a partition, they have as members of a joint family some interest which is sufficient to enable them to prevent an alienation. The learned Judges of the High Court say "It must be conceded that the complete rights of ordinary co-parcenership in the other members of the family to the extent of joint enjoyment, and the capacity to demand partition are merged in, or perhaps to use a more correct term, subordinated to the title of the individual member to the incumbency of the estate, but the contingency of survivorship remains along with the right to maintenance in a sufficiently substantial form to preserve for them a kind of dormant co-ownership." "The property in the paternal or ancestral estate acquired by birth under the Mitakshara Law, is in their Lordships' opinion so connected with the right to a partition that it does not exist where there is no right to it." "It is difficult to reconcile this mode of succession with the rights of a joint family and to hold that there is a joint ownership which is a restraint upon alienation."

The case, therefore, establishes the following propositions:—

(i) In an impartible estate governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture the co-parcenary which under the Mitakshara Law is created by birth does not exist, and the son is not a co-sharer with the father.

(ii) Property in ancestral estate acquired by birth under the Mitakshara Law is so connected with the right to a partition that it does not exist when there is no right to it.

(iii) For the purposes of determining who are entitled to succeed the estate must be considered as the joint property of the family.

The next case is The First Pittapur case [Sri Raja Rao Venkata Surya Mahapatra Rama Krishna Rao Bahadur v. The Court].

of Wards] (4) in which it was distinctly laid down that an impartible estate is not inalienable by Will or otherwise by virtue only of its impartibility; and in the absence of proof of some special family custom or tenure attaching to the zemindari and having that effect. That is a case directly in point, and unless it can be distinguished is binding upon us. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that there was no jointness in estate in that case. It is necessary, therefore, to examine the facts of the case. It appears that the Raja of Pittapur adopted the plaintiff who was the natural born son of the Raja of Venkatagiri. Under the adoption deed, he was to reside with his adoptive father, but after so residing for some time he quarrelled with the latter and ceased to reside with him. The adoptive father gave some moveables to the plaintiff and money for the expenses of his marriage and it was arranged that he would get Rs. 2,000 per month for his maintenance. The defendant who claimed to be the son of the Raja set up a Will under which the estate was bequeathed to him. It was alleged that the defendant was a supposititious child but the Court held that the bequest was to him as a persona designata and that the Will was genuine. It is true that the plaintiff left the residence of the Raja, but the facts show that he was joint in estate with the Raja.

In the statement of facts at page 84 of the report it is stated that the High Court took up the question "whether it was within the power of the holder to alienate it by his Will so as to deprive his son, who, but for the impartible character of the estate would have been a joint owner thereof with him of all interest in the said estate." Mr. Mayne's argument proceeded upon the footing that the adopted son had a vested right in the estate, and Sir Richard Couch in delivering the judgment said (page 90). "The Courts below held that the estates of the Raj though impartible were in the nature of joint family property and were, therefore, according to the law of the Mitakshara inalienable except for necessary objects," and observed (at page 91) "that where the Mitakshara Law prevails and there is the custom of primogeniture the eldest son does not become a co-sharer with his father in the estate, the inalienability of the estate depends upon custom which must be proved, or, it may be in some cases, upon the nature of the tenure."

Reliance, however, is placed on a passage in the judgment (at page 95) which runs as follows: "It was argued that the decision in Sartaaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) did not extend to a Will, and a case in Villa Bitten v. Yamenamma (5) was referred to. That was a case of an admitted co-parcenary between the maker of the Will and his adopted son, and the latter would take as the surviving co-parcener, a title which was held to be a prior title to that by devise. It is not applicable here, where co-parcenary between the Raja and the adopted son is not admitted, but the contrary is held. In the present case, according to the decision in Sartaaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) the appellant did not become a co-parcener with the Raja. If the Raja had power to alienate he might do it by Will, and the title by the Will would have priority to the title by succession."

It is contended that the Madras case was distinguished on the ground that there was co-parcenary in that case where as in The First Pittapur case [Sir Raja Rao Venkata Surya Mahipati Rama Krishna Rao Bahadur v. The Court of Wards] (4) co-parcenary between the Raja and the adopted son was "not admitted but the contrary is held," which shows that there was no co-parcenary. But the adoption was admitted, and although the adopted son quarrelled with the Raja and was living separate from him, he was receiving maintenance (Rs 2,000 per month) from the Raja. That being so, there can be no doubt that there was jointness in fact. It seems to us that what was meant was that in law there was no co-parcenary between the adopted son and the Raja, as their Lordships say "In the present case, according to the decision of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) the appellant did not become a co-parcener with the Raja." If there was no jointness in fact there was no necessity for reference to the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2). The Madras case related to an ordinary Mitakshara family and, therefore, his Lordship observed that it was the case of an admitted co-parcener, but in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) which also was a case of admitted joint estate it was held that in an impartible Raj governed by the rule of primogeniture the co-parcenary which under the Mitakshara Law is created by birth does not exist, and the son is not a co-sharer with his father. By reason of the decision in that case, therefore, there was no co-parcenary (as a matter of law) between the Raja and the adopted son in The First Puttapur case [Sri Raja Rao Venkata Surya Mahipati Rama Krishna Rao Bahadur v. The Court of Wards] (4) although the latter was joint with the Raja, and that is what was meant in the passage that the co-parcenary "is not admitted but the contrary is held." It is also contended that in the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) jointness was not found, whereas in the present case jointness was asserted not only by Satrugna but by all the members of the family, and is conclusively proved, and that, therefore, the decision in Sartaj Kuari's case (2) does not apply to the present. But if there was no jointness in Sartaj Kuari's case (2) it would have been wholly unnecessary to go into the questions dealt with by the Judicial Committee whose judgment proceeded upon the footing that there was jointness in fact, though there was no co-parcenary in law.

It is contended that impartibility is inconsistent with the power of alienation, that if the holder of an impartible estate has the power of alienation, he can, if he chooses, put an end to the impartibility by alienating the estate to different persons who may be absolute strangers to the family, and who can at once partition the estate, and that in fact impartibility, lineal primogeniture and inalienability all converge to preserve the entity of the estate, and we were referred to Golap Chandra Sarkar's Hindu Law, 4th Edition, pp. 511-512.

The reason, however, why an impartible Raj has been held to be alienable in the cases cited above, as already stated, is that in such an estate, the co-parcenary which under the Mitakshara Law is created by birth does not exist, and the reason for restraint upon alienation, therefore, ceases to exist in the case of an impartible estate.

There are repeated admissions of Satrugna and other members of the family that the estate has been held from the time of remote ancestors, as a joint ancestral impartible Raj. Satrugna died joint in estate with the defendant (Protap), and if it were ordinary ancestral property there is no doubt that Protap would have taken the estate by survivorship.

It is accordingly contended on behalf of the appellant that if, as held in a series of cases the succession to an impartible Raj also goes by survivorship, the right by survivorship being prior to a right under a Will operates only from the death of the testator, there was no property of Satrugna upon which the Will could operate. Reference is made to the case of Lakshman Dada Nark v. Ramchandra Dada Nark (6) and Vitla Butten v. Yamendamma (5). Both the cases related to an ordinary Mitakshara family. In the first case it was held by the Judicial Committee that under the Mitakshara Law as received in Bombay, a father cannot by Will make an unequal distribution of ancestral property whether moveable or immoveable, that although one of several co-parceners under the same law has the power of alienating his undivided share in ancestral estate without the consent of his co-sharers by deed executed for valuable consideration and although such share may be seized and sold in execution for the separate debt of the co-sharer, at least in the lifetime of the judgment-debtor, yet such alienation cannot be made by Will. Their Lordships referred to the case in Vitla Butten v. Yamenamma (5) and observed: "Again, the High Court of Madras though admitting that a co-partener can effectually alienate his share by gift has ruled that he cannot dispose of it by Will [see the case reported as Vitla Butten v. Yamenamma (5)]. Its reasons for making the distinction between a gift and a devise are, that the co-parcener's power of alienation is founded on a right to a partition: that that right dies with him, and that the title of his co-sharers by survivorship vesting in them at the moment of his death there remains nothing upon which the Will can operate. This principle was invoked in the case of Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Prasad Singh (7) and was fully recognised by their Lordships". . . . and further on observed: "they are of opinion that the principles upon which the Madras High Court has decided against the power of alienation by Will are sound and sufficient to support that decision". It is contended that with regard to the rule of succession by survivorship there is no distinction between partible property and impartible property under the Mitakshara Law, except that in the latter case the estate is held by a single person, and that that being so, the principle that in a case of succession by survivorship, the title of survivorship being the prior title takes precedence to the exclusion of that by devise, applies to an impartible estate also.

It is further contended that the principle of survivorship pre-supposes jointness of interest during the lifetime of two persons, and though in an impartible estate the right to call for partition does not exist in the other members of the family the right to partition is only one of the incidents of joint ownership, and that in an impartible estate, the members of the joint family (other than the holder of the estate) receive maintenance according to custom and before Sartaj Kuari's case (2) it was held that impartibility does not destroy jointness. Reference was made to the case of Tekait Doorga Persad Singh v. Tekaitni Doorga Koonwari (8) where it was observed that impartibility does not destroy its nature as joint family property or render it the separate estate of the last male holder so as to destroy the right of another member of the joint family to succeed upon his death in preference to those who would be his heirs if the property were separate, and also to the observations in the case of Naraganti Achammagaru v. Venkatachalapati Nayanivaru (9) that such an estate though possessed by one of the members of the family is the joint property of the family and in the event of death passed by survivorship.

The principle of survivorship, however, which governs succession in ordinary joint family under the Mitakshara, has to be followed, according to the decisions since Sartaj Kuari's case (2), in the case of impartible estate only for a particular purpose viz., to find out a successor, and it is only for the purpose of determining who is entitled to succeed, that the estate is to be treated as the property of the joint family.

The question, therefore, is no longer res integra, and we are bound to hold having regard to the decisions of the Judicial Committee in Sartaj Kuari's case (2) and The First Pittapur case (4) that in the absence of any custom, an impartible estate is alienable by way of transfer inter vivos, as well as by a testamentary disposition. The principle of the said decisions has been followed or recognised in subsequent cases also. In Tara

PROTAP CHANDRA v. JAGADISH CHANDRA.

Kumari v. Chaturbhuj Narayan Singh (10) it was held that there was complete separation of the joint family between Thakur Ranjit Narain Singh (the holder of the impartible estate) and his brother Bhupat Narain and consequently the impartible estate became the separate property in which the appellant the widow of the last holder, was entitled to a widow's estate. But their Lordships, referring to the judgment of the High Court observed: "Those learned Judges overlooked the fact that Bhupat Narain Singh and his son had no co-parcenary rights in the impartible estate, and no rights in that estate which entitled them or either of them to a partition of the impartible estate. They could not have prevented Thakur Ranjit Narain Singh from alienating that impartible estate in such a way as to determine any contingent interest they had in it under the custom. Their contingent interest under the custom was liable to be defeated by an alienation of the estate by Thakur Ranjit Narain even if the family had remained joint." In Bachoo v. Mankorbhai (11) Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., observed: "But whatever may have been the opinion that prevailed at that time it has now been definitely decided by the Privy Council in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) and in Sri Raja Rao Venkata Surya Mahipati Rama Krishna Rao Bahadur v. The Court of Wards (4) that in impartible properties there is no co-parcenary."

In Venkata Mahipathi Gangadhara Rama Rao v. Rajah of Pittapur [The Second Pittapur case] (12), the plaintiff, the adopted son of the late Raja of Pittapur, sued the defendant (to whom the estate had been devised by the late Raja after the adoption of the plaintiff) for maintenance. He rested his case not on any relationship with the defendant which he denied but on what he alleged was the general law viz., that by birth, he had a right to maintenance out of the property constituting the Raj which right followed the property into the hands of a third party, Lord Dunedin in delivering the judgment referred to the view taken by the High Court in Sartaj Kuari's case (2), and observed (at page 783*):—"But the decision of the Board which binds their Lordships made that view no longer tenable. It settled that in an impartible zemindari there is no co-parcenary, and consequently no person existed who as parcener could object to alienation of the whole subject by the de facto and de jure holder. That judgment was followed and applied to this very Raj in Sri Raja Rao Venkata Surya Mahipati Rama Krishna Rao Bahadur v. The Court of Wards [The First Pittapur case] (4). The import of these decisions was in their Lordships' view correctly stated by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, in the case of Bachoo v. Mankorbhai (11): "It has now been definitely decided that in impartible properties there is no co-parcenary." Then after referring to the right of maintenance as an inherent quality of the right of co-parcenary that is, of common property observed (at page 784*) that "the right to maintenance, so far as founded on or inseparable from the right of co-parcenary begins where co-parcenary begins, and ceases where co-parcenary ceases".

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that in the present case there was not merely a notional but actual jointness. According to custom the members of the joint family not only got maintenance, but education and marriage expenses also, so that there was actual enjoyment by the members of the family so far as was consistent with the impartibility of the estate. That is so, but if as held in the above cases, there is no co-parcenary in law, and the estate is to be treated as joint only for a particular purpose, the dis-fiction relied upon by the appellant does not help him.

In the case of Barj Nath Prasad Singh v. Tej Bal Singh (3), there was no question of alienability and the only question related to succession. But their Lordships in discussing the last question had to refer to Sartaj Kuari's case (2), because of the contention that the succession to an impartible estate was not governed by survivorship having regard to the principle laid down in the case of Sartaj Kuari's case (2); that there is no co-parcenary in an impartible Raj, and also to the decision in The Second Bettiah case [Bishun Prakash Narayan Singh v. Janaki Koer] (13), based upon the admission of Counsel. With reference to Sartaj Kuari's case (2), it was pointed out that the question of succession was outside the scope of enquiry in that case, and it was observed (at page 244*):—"No doubt it would have been possible to decide the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2), differently if the theory had been accepted that impartibility being a creature of custom though incompatible with the right of partition, yet left the general law of the alienability by the head of the family for other than necessary causes without the consent of the other members as it was." Nevertheless the decision in Sartaj Kuari's case (2) was not declared to be incorrect. Their Lordships observed: "Even if, however, their Lordships thought the decision in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) wrong—an opinion which they do not pronounce—the case has stood too long to be touched." Barj Nath's case (3), therefore, did not touch the law regarding alienability of an impartible estate, but left the law where it was.

Our attention has been drawn to Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th Edition, page 796, where it is stated "whether a co-parcenary is to be assumed solely for purpose of ascertaining the next heir or whether it is a living principle by which the succession is to be regulated is an extremely difficult question, and when it comes before the Privy Council, that Tribunal will have to resolve the difficulty created by the fact that the doctrine of survivorship and the right of testamentary disposition cannot co-exist". That question, however, must be taken as settled, and having regard to the state of the authorities, we are bound to hold that the holder of an impartible estate has the power of alienating it by Will, and that, therefore, Raja Saraghna had the power to dispose of the Dhalbhum Estate by his Will.

Custom of Inalienability.

If according to law, an impartible Raj is not inalienable, it is for the defendants to prove that, by custom the estate is inalienable. Before dealing with the evidence on the point, we may point out the nature of the evidence required to prove custom in such cases.

In the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) their Lordships in considering the custom of inalienability observed: "The fact that there is no evidence of a sale of any portion of the estate is in the plaintiffs' favour but this is not sufficient. The absence of evidence of an alienation without any evidence of any facts which would make it probable that an alienation would have been made cannot be accepted as proof of a custom of inalienability."

In the case of Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (14), the latter portion of the above passage was quoted and followed, and their Lordships observed: "But in this case numerous instances were proved in which alienation of small portions of the property took place and in not a single instance was it proved that any objection based upon the alleged custom was raised by any one to an actual or threatened alienation. It was raised in the present suits for the first time."

PROTAP CHANDRA V. JAGADISH CHANDRA.

Sir John Edge, C. J., and Burkitt, J., observed:—"In such a case the kind of evidence that ought to be regarded is evidence showing that the right claimed by custom was more or less contested and the contest abandoned by some one who, if the custom had not existed, would have been entitled, or evidence showing that generally in the District the custom was followed to the exclusion of persons who, if it had not been for the custom, would presumably have enforced their right under the general law. Evidence which is as consistent with there being a custom as with there being no custom at all is not evidence of a custom modifying or varying the general law. In this case, so far as we can see, there was no evidence of custom in the strict sense to be considered."

It is contended that the estate has remained intact for several centuries, and the fact of its existence for such a length of time is an indication that there was no power of alienation, "as otherwise the estate would in all probability have been broken up and dissipated."

Reference is made to paragraph 105 of the judgment in Suit No. 17 of 1890 brought by Nityanand Dhal against Satrughna Dhal and others, where the statement of Raja Man Govinda (the son of Raja Kamala Kant of the Jamboni branch) dated the 28th June 1859 with reference to the "date from which the successor of the original title holder has been holding title" is set out. It was stated that Raja Jagannath Dhabal Deo the founder of the family came from Dharanagar in the Western Provinces in the year 638 B. S., and established himself in the Dhalbhum Raj. Reference is also made to the statement of Satrughna contained in his petition dated 29th March 1887 where he stated that 24 generations back his ancestors migrated to this part of the country from Dharanagar and the family was governed by the Mitakshara. As for Man Govinda's statement it was not accepted by the Court and even if it be accepted, it merely shows that the family migrated to this part of the country centuries ago. It does not show since what time the family came to possess property, nor how long the estate is impartible and governed by lineal primogeniture. Whether the family migrated about seven centuries ago (638 B. S.) or not, as to which, of course, there is no evidence beyond the statement of Raja Man Govinda made in 1859 or that of Satrughna made in 1887, it appears as stated in the judgment of this Court dated the 5th August 1893 in the appeal of Rani Siromoni against Satrughna that the members of the family looked upon themselves as Khatrias, who came many generations ago from some place in the North-West Provinces. There is no doubt also that, the bulk of the estate has remained intact for many generations. We were referred to a passage in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Sheonath Singh v. Badan Singh (16), where Lordships observed (with reference to the judgment of the Appellate Court) "The judgment omits from consideration in the appraisal of the case the existence of the family as an entity through so many centuries which entity could only survive destruction and disintegration with the help of such a family custom." (The family custom there referred to was the custom of lineal primogeniture). The fact referred to by their Lordships is no doubt to be borne in mind, but it also must be remembered that according to the law understood prior to the decision in the case of Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) in 1889, an impartible Raj had always been considered as inalienable. And if the Rajas were following what they believed to be the law, it was not custom, because custom is something in derogation of the law. It may also be pointed out that the estate in Sartaj Kuari's case (2) had its origin three years before the suit, and evidently that fact by itself was not held to be sufficient proof (in the absence of custom) of inalienability.

The question we have to consider is whether the evidence proves the custom of inalienability. In considering that question we have to bear in mind that if there was any occasion when having regard to human nature, there was likelihood of alienation, and alienation was not effected, it would be evidence of inalienability.

We will now deal with the instances in which it is said that alienations would have been made, were it not for the custom of inalienability.

(1) Raja Ram Chandra I. died, leaving a widow (who was enceinte), a widowed daughter-in-law (the widow of Kartikeswar who had pre-deceased Raja Ram Chandra) and a brother Hakim Nursingh. Hakim Nursingh became the Raja, and that was a fact relied upon by Satrugna in Rani Siromani's Suit No. 1 of 1889 as an instance (among others) of exclusion of the widow as bearing upon the question whether the family was governed by the Mitakshara or Dayabhaga (see judgment of District Judge dated the 19th August 1891 in that suit), and the judgment of the High Court dated the 15th August 1893 on appeal. But no inference can be drawn in favour of any custom of inalienability from the fact that Raja Ram Chandra I. did not execute any Will and that Nursingh succeeded to the Raj. It does not appear that the Raja was aware of the Rani being enceinte when he died. If he was aware of it, there was the possibility of her giving birth to a son, in which case there could be no question of bequeathing the estate to the widow. But, of course, there was no knowing that she would give birth to a son, even if the Raja was aware she was enceinte, and we must consider the question from the point of view that the Raja was not aware that she was with child or that she would give birth to a son. It does not appear when the succession of Hakim Nursingh took place. But Jagannath I, who was in the womb when Raja Ram Chandra I. died was installed as Raja in 1767, as appears from the District Gazetteer Singhbhum (page 27) Raja Ram Chandra must have, therefore, died sometime before 1750. Wills were unknown at that time, at any rate in that part of the country. But apart from that the contention that the Raja did not execute any Will in favour of his wife because of the consciousness that he could not alienate the estate, proceeds upon the assumption that a man dying without issue would naturally leave his estate to his widow. That may be a natural feeling with persons of other nationalities or even with some of the present day Hindus specially in towns. But was that the feeling among Hindus, at any rate, in those days? Apart from the sentiment of preserving the prestige and dignity of the family, and the integrity of the estate, there was generally speaking a feeling among Hindus until recent times, against the estate passing into the hands of the wife's relations. Even Hindus governed by Dayabhaga Law (as to whose power of alienation there is no doubt) in those days very rarely made dispositions of their estates in favour of their wives. The effect of such disposition would be to pass the ancestral estate from the family of the owner to the family of his father-in-law. It is well known that Hindus specially in those days were anxious to provide for the offering of pindas and libations of water to them after their death, and the members of the widow's family are not competent to offer jal pinda. The feeling against the estate passing into the family of the wife would be much stronger in the case of an owner of an impartible Raj which had descended by lineal primogeniture from generation to generation. We ought not to judge of the feelings and sentiments of these Rajas imbued with ideas of customs of hoary antiquity in the light of the feelings and sentiments of other nationalities or of Hindus of the present generation. Even assuming that a Will had been made, how could rights under a Will be enforced at that time, when the British power had not been established and there were no British Courts to enforce rights? Apart from the fact that the instinct of jointness was very much stronger, then, than at present, could Raja Ram Chandra I. expect that his widow would be able to enforce her rights under a Will if he executed any, as against his younger brother who would succeed under the Mitakshara Law as well as under family custom? The question of succession of

Hakim Nursingh would be settled in no time by an appeal to arms, and a female would not venture to set up rights as against a male who had law and custom on his side and followers to support his claim. The argument that no Will was executed in favour of his widow has, therefore, no force. It is contested, however, that some provision would certainly have been made by Raja Ram Chandra for his widow and widowed daughter-in-law, but this contention assumes that no provision was made. It is for the party setting up the custom to show that no provision was made and there is no such evidence. There is no suggestion in the pleadings nor in the evidence of witnesses that no provisions were made for members of the family. The widow and the widowed daughter-in-law would under the family custom be entitled to maintenance. The amount of maintenance is not left to the caprice of the next Raja, but is regulated by well-known custom in these ancient impartible estates, and though there is no evidence as to what maintenance they got, the evidence with regard to some widows in other cases to be presently noticed, shows that widows of the family were amply provided for under the family custom.

After Raja Ram Chandra I died, his widow gave birth to a son. But Hakim Nursingh had already taken the gadi. After the birth of the son, the latter was entitled to the Raj, but he was a mere child and Nursingh's possession of the estate must be taken to be that of an usurper.

II. Raja Nursingh died leaving two widows, and a brother Nimai alias Baikuntha I, who became the Raja. It is contended that this was another occasion when a Will or other provision could have been made in favour of his widows by Nursingh. The learned Subordinate Judge says that Hakim Nursingh did not become Raja. It appears that he did succeed as Raja as Ram Chandra's son Jagannath I was then in his mother's womb. He was, however, subsequently deposed in 1767 and Jagannath was installed as Raja by the British. So that at the time of his death Nursingh was not the Raja, and it was therefore not an instance in which the Raja could have and did not make a Will in favour of his widows. Then again there is nothing to show that no provision was made for them either by Nursingh or that they were not maintained according to family custom. Lastly some of the observations we have made with reference to Raja Ram Chandra's not making a Will apply to this case also.

III. Baikuntha I, alias Nimai, died leaving two sons Beer Chandra and Radha Govind. The former set up an agreement by Jagannath I appointing him successor, but the Courts held that it was invalid and gave the Raj to Ram Chandra II, the eldest son of Jagannath I, under the rule of primogeniture. But Baikuntha I was not the Raja at the time of his death. It appears that after Nursingh was deposed and Raja Jagannath installed as Raja by the British, he rebelled, and was deposed and Nimai, alias Baikuntha I, was installed as Raja by the British. But he was Raja only for a short period, he had no followers and Jagannath I was installed as Raja and he got the first settlement of the Raj Estate from the British Government in 1777. In the tasilnama granted to Raja Jagannath I, in 1777 by the East India Company there was a provision that he was to give "Baikuntha Dhal lands valued at Rs. 1,000 for his subsistence and raiment." It is clear, therefore, that Baikuntha I was not the Raja at the time of his death, and we do not see how any argument can be founded upon the fact (assuming it to be a fact) that Baikuntha did not provide for his two sons.

With regard to the agreement set up by Beer Chandra by which it was alleged that Jagannath I appointed him his successor, it appears that after the death of Raja Jagannath I, which took place some time between 1800 and 1805, a dispute arose as to who should succeed him, viz, Beer Chandra who set up the agreement, or Ram Chandra the eldest son of Raja Jagannath. The correspondence between the Collector and the Judge of Midnapur and the Board of Revenue in the year 1805, and the recitals in the dowl bandobusht made with Ram Chandra on the 27th August 1805, show that Beer Chandra's mokhtar opposed the registration of the name of Ram Chandra and applied to get his (Beer Chandra's) name registered in the place of Raja Jagannath I. The Collector on the 12th August 1805 directed both parties to file their respective documents. Beer Chandra's mokhtar filed 11 copies of parwanas showing that the parwanas were in the name of his father, and also an ikrarnama bearing the seal and signature of his father (Baikunth I). Ram Chandra started proceedings before the Judge as would appear from his order dated the 14th August. Under the Regulations the Judge had power to take summary proceedings and also to hold regular trial in cases of disputed successions. The Collector seems to have thought that the Judge had no power to make a summary order, and he referred the matter to the Board of Revenue. The latter by its order dated the 20th August 1805 directed the Collector to act according to the precept of the Judge and to "refer Beer Chandra to prosecute any claim he may have to the estate lately held by the father of Ram Chandra. Accordingly a dowl bundobast was made with Ram Chandra on the 27th August 1805, and he as the son and the rightful heir of his father Jagannath was registered in his place. Thus ended the claim of Beer Chandra based upon the agreement alleged to have been executed by Jagannath. Reliance, however, is placed upon the fact that Jagannath sought by an agreement to alienate the property, but the attempt was unsuccessful, and this is referred to as evidence of inalienability. But it is to be observed in the first place that although the mokhtar of Beer Chandra stated before the Collector that an agreement was executed by Raja Jagannath to the effect that after his death Beer Chandra should hold possession of the zemindari, no such agreement was as a matter of fact produced. What was produced was an ikrar executed by Baikunth I (the father of Beer Chandra). Had any agreement executed by Jagannath been produced it would certainly have been mentioned in the dowl or in some other papers but there was none. In the next place the agreement was alleged to have been executed at the time of jawari at the dashara festival when Baikunth came into possession of the estate. The year of the dashara was not stated. It could not have been after 1777 when Baikunth I was deposed and Jagannath was again restored to the estate by the British Government. Baikunth was in possession for a short time before 1777 when Jagannath was deposed owing to his rebellion, and the "eleven copies of parwanas" probably referred to that period when he was placed on the gadi by the British Government. But as already stated Baikunth was shortly afterwards deposed and Jagannath was again installed in 1777 when the estate was settled with him. Lastly, Jagannath was on the gadi from 1777 up to some time in 1800-1805 (the Permanent Settlement was made with him in 1800). He was in possession with the help of the British Government. He had agreed to give lands valued at Rs. 1,000 for the subsistence and raiment of Baikunth by the tasilnama in 1777 and had thus settled matters with Baikunth. Had there been any agreement before the tasilnama of 1777 that after his death Beer Chandra would succeed, it would have been mentioned in the tasilnama of 1777. He had six sons, and it is exceedingly improbable that in these circumstances he should have entered into any agreement with Beer Chandra that the latter should succeed him on his death to the exclusion of his own sons. As we have said, no such agreement was produced and we think that the argument of the learned Counsel on behalf of the respondent that the statement of the mokhtar of Beer Chandra about the existence of such an agreement was purely illusory, has considerable force. We are accordingly of opinion that an agreement by Jagannath to divert the course of succession is not proved, and the argument on behalf of the appellant that it was an instance where an attempted alienation was unsuccessful has no force. On the other hand the fact that such an agreement which would have the effect of alienating the estate, was set up (though falsely) by a member of the family, was inconsistent with the consciousness in the family that the estate could not be alienated if the agreement was genuine.

IV. Raja Jagannath I died leaving six sons and four widows. We have seen that his eldest son Ram Chandra II succeeded him. It is said that Raja Jagannath did not make any provision for his younger sons and widows. But the evidence shows that large grants were made for the maintenance of the younger sons. Hakim Nursingh was the second son. The judgment dated the 27th July 1905 in a Suit (No. 20 of 1904) brought by Raja Satrugna against two persons Jonardan Pal and Nanda Lal Giri for resumption of Mouza Purulia on the allegation that it was nikmal khorphosh and, therefore, resumable, shows that Hakim Nursingh obtained Mouza Purulia and nine other Mouzas as an absolute and irrevocable Lakshraj grant made in full satisfaction of all claims of future maintenance. The third son was Jugal Kishore. It appears from the khorphosh pattā dated the 8th April 1850 (Exhibit 12) that Jugal Kishore was in possession of 64 mouzas for his maintenance, that a suit was brought by Raja Chitreswar II (whose guardian he had been under the Will left by Baikuntha) for resumption of the mouzas. The suit was brought in the lifetime of Jugal Kishore, and was continued after his death against his son Kinu. The lands were resumed and after resumption 18 mouzas were settled upon Kinu (son of Jugal Kishore) by way of permanent alienation. They are still in the possession of the defendant (appellant) the grandson of Kinu, and the area of 13 out of the 18 mouzas appears from the Settlement Records to be over 40,000 bighas. The defendant in paragraph 11 of his written statement in the present suit stated that his father Madhu Sudan used to be maintained by Raja Satrugna and used to support himself and his family from the income of some khorphosh village, and a list of the 18 mouzas in the possession of the defendant is given in Schedule (a) of the plaint. One of the 18 mouzas is Dakhinsol, and the defendant's father Madhu Sudan in his deposition in certain Land Acquisition cases in 1896 stated that Dakhinsol mouza (about 500 bighas) was his mokrari khorphosh mouza held at a quit rent of annas twelve by right of succession.

The fourth son was Kamala Kant (Rajah in the Jamboni branch). It appears from the judgment dated the 28th December 1891 in the suit (No. 17 of 1890) by Nityananda against Satrugna, that Nityananda stated that "other members of the family receive maintenance" and, that "accordingly the plaintiff and his ancestors (his father was Kamala Kant) received mouzas from the Raja of Dhalbhum for their maintenance and the plaintiff is in possession of mouza for his khorphosh." The Court found that "there can be no doubt on the evidence that Kamala Kant before succeeding to the Jamboni Estate had got four mouzas from his brother Raja Ram Chandra II on account of maintenance." All these facts go to show that the sons were in fact well provided for, and there was no necessity for making any Will. The lines of the fifth and sixth sons (Nimai and Raghu) are extinct, and no evidence is available with regard to them.

The case of Chitreswar I was also referred to. He left four sons, the eldest being Raja Ram Chandra I. But he must have died before 1750 long before the British Government was established. We have no materials for that period, and for reasons already stated, instances of succession before the British Government was established in the country, afford no help in deciding the question before us.

V. Raja Baikuntha II died leaving two widows Rani Joy Kumari and Rani Amrit Kumari and a minor brother Sukumar alias Raja Chitreswar II. He executed a Will (wasyatnama) by which he appointed his uncle Hakim Nursingh as the guardian of his minor brother to manage the estate during his minority. It is said that the Raja was conscious of the power of making a Will and had he the power of alienating property he would have bequeathed the estate to his widows, at any rate would have made provision for them by his Will. We have shown that a Raja would not necessarily execute a Will in favour of his wife, even if he had the power to do so. As for making provisions for his widows, there is nothing to show that no provisions were made for them, and even if none was made the widows must have got sufficient maintenance according to the family custom. In an ordinary Mitakshara family the estate in such a case would go to the brother and not to the widows who get maintenance. Raja Baikuntha II died in 1825, and it cannot be said that it would have been the natural thing in 1825 to give the estate to the widows which would ultimately be enjoyed by the wife's relations. He had his minor brother who would on attaining majority preserve the estate for the family and maintain his widows, and he accordingly executed a wasyatnama providing for management of the estate during his minority and appointed his uncle as guardian and manager so that the ancient custom of impartibility and lineal primogeniture might be kept up.

VI. Jagannath II died leaving two sons. Reference is made to the District Gazetteer Singhbhum (page 213) to show that he left 12 widows, and it is contended that had he the power of alienation he would have made provision for these Ranis. On behalf of the respondent it is contended that the District Gazetteer should not be referred to for showing that the Raja left 12 Ranis, and it is pointed out that no ground of appeal was taken against the finding of the Court below that Raja Jagannath left a widow. However that may be, we do not think that any inference can be drawn in favour of the appellant even if the Raja left 12 Ranis. His eldest Rani, Rani Dhajamani (the Patrani) got considerable properties from him. The judgment in the case of Prince Mahomed Bulkiyar Shah v. Rani Dhojamani (17) refers to some such properties.

The Raja left two sons, both of them were very young, the elder being only five years old. It is contended on behalf of the appellant that ordinary human nature would prompt a disposition of property in favour of the other Ranis, at any rate proper provision would have been made for them, if the Raja had power of alienation. We do not think, however, that the Raja would be prompted to make any disposition of the estate among his twelve Ranis, when he had sons, and the elder son would in ordinary case succeed him according to family custom. It is true he was a minor, but it was well-known that the Court of Wards would take charge of the estate during his minority, and ordinarily a better arrangement cannot be made by entrusting the management to private individuals. As a matter of fact the estate was taken charge of by the Court of Wards. Assuming that Raja Jagannath left 12 Ranis we do not see that it would be natural for him to bequeath property separately to each of them with the effect of diminishing the estate to the detriment of his sons. As for their maintenance there is no doubt that there was the custom of making suitable provision for all members of the family male or female [see Prince Mahomed Bulkiyar Shah v. Rani Dhojamani (17)] and it does not appear that the Raja or his successor did not make suitable provision for these Ranis.

VII. Raja Purna Chandra (of the Jamboni branch) died in 1886 leaving two widows Rani Radha Kumari and Rani Parbati Kumari, and his brother Iswar the father of the plaintiff. It is said that he made no provision for the widows. But we have no evidence as to the age at which he died, and that no provision was made for the widows. It was Raja Purna's own brother Raja Iswar the father of the plaintiff, who got the Raj, and not any distant agnate, and in those circumstances ordinarily the widows would get maintenance from the brother, even if no separate provision was made by the deceased Raja for them. It appears, however, from the judgment in the certificate case dated the 4th January 1887 that Iswar Chand (plaintiff's father) applied for a succession certificate to the estate of his brother Purna Chandra. He was opposed by the two widows Rani Radha Kumari and Rani Parbati Kumari. The former claimed the estate by virtue of a tika alleged to have been given to her by Raja Purna Chandra in his lifetime, and the latter based her title to the estate on a letter alleged to have been addressed by the Raja to the Collector. The Court in that case held that the family was a joint family governed by the Mitakshara, that the estate was ancestral there being no separate property in the family, the various members of it including Iswar, his wife and mother got maintenance from the estate and that the brother (Iswar) was entitled to succeed and, observed "With regard to the alleged installation by the deceased of the senior widow as his heir, and that of his daughter as alleged by the junior widow, though a considerable amount of evidence was offered which is to a great extent destructive of the conflicting claims of the two widows I need not say much. Whether the family is governed by the Dayabhaga or Mitakshara deceased could not except (in the former case) by a regular Will settle the devolution of his estate, and it is not pretended that the document which it is said he signed and sent to the Collector Exhibit E is a Will. There is no evidence of any kulachar to that effect either, one of opposite party's witness, in fact, the Dewan Ram Kumar Patnaik expressly says that the deceased had no power to will away the estate."

Reliance is placed upon the above passage on behalf of the appellant and it is contended that Raja Purna Chandra could have alienated the Jamboni Estate in favour of the widows by proper instruments as the widows were so anxious to get the estate, and when some attempt was made to give them the estate by giving a tika and by letter addressed to the Collector. But in the first place the evidence as to the alleged installation was described by the District Judge as "mutually destructive of the conflicting claims of the two widows", and it is not clear whether the story set up by the widows was true. In the next place though the Dewan Ram Kumar stated that "Raja cannot appoint any one he chooses as his successor" in re-examination he stated that the "Raja if he had no son might make his widow successor". But even if he could not appoint a successor, it does not show that he had no power of alienation. A person may have the power of alienation and yet may not have the power to change the course of succession. As to the statement in the judgment that there is no evidence of any kulachar of making Wills, it is objected by the respondent that statement of facts in a judgment not inter partes is not admissible in evidence. But even if it is admissible, it only shows that there was no evidence of any family custom of making Wills, which is not the same thing as a custom of inalienability.

It appears from the copy of deposition of Ram Kumar that the Raja was addicted to drinking and that he was ill for a long time before his death from a disorder of the liver so induced. He lived separately from the Ranis, with a concubine for 1½ years, and it was at the house where he was living with the concubine that he is said to have given the tika to the senior Rani. There is no evidence that any letter was actually written to the Collector though it was so asserted. But if any letter was written, it goes against the appellant as showing consciousness on the part of the Raja that he had the power of disposition though he may not have been aware of the proper method of effecting it.

IX. The last case relied upon is that of Ram Chandra III.

He died on the 5th January 1887 leaving three widows Rani Siromani, Rani Churamani and Rani Muktmoni, and a brother Hakim Nursingh who, however, died childless. It is said that he could have made a Will. But he died at the age of 24 by a fall from the roof of his house in a drunken state. Apart from the considerations which have already been stated in the case of other Rajas, it could not be expected of so young a man that he would make a Will and the circumstances under which he died would also negative the suggestion.

There were a series of litigations on his death. Satrugna was entitled to succeed according to lineal primogeniture. He was, however, assailed on three sides by Rani Siromani, by Nityanand, and by Iswar (the plaintiff's father).

Rani Siromani as the senior Rani, applied on the 10th February 1887 for registration of her name under the Land Registration Act, setting up Dayabhaga as the law of succession. No mention of any Will was made in her application for registration. The Deputy Commissioner decided in her favour on the 4th June 1887. (The judgment is not on the record). In his grounds of appeal to the Commissioner Satrugna, relied upon family custom, upon the fact the estate was impartible and ancestral and that the family was joint, and governed by the Mitakshara, the very fact of khorthosh grants proving jointness. All these allegations were directed against Siromani's case that the family was governed by Dayabhaga. The order was set aside by the Commissioner of Chota Nagpur on the 6th September 1887 whose order was upheld by the Board of Revenue on the 24th April 1888. The Commissioner held that the family was governed by Mitakshara Law, that there was jointness in estate, that primogeniture governed the succession, that no family custom inconsistent with it was proved, and that Satrugna was entitled to succeed. He observed that "in a petition to the Deputy Commissioner the Rani speaks of a Will executed by the late Raja in her favour, but she has not pressed this probably under good advice, since the fact of the late production of such a document would have to be accounted for. But besides the question of the authenticity of the Will there is a further doubt whether the late Raja would have had any power to disturb by a

Will the legal rights of heirs." So the Will was not produced even in September 1887. There is merely the "doubt" expressed by the Commissioner whether the Raja could disturb by a Will the legal rights of heirs, but this was before Sartaj Kuar's case (2) was decided by the Judicial Committee in 1889.

Having failed in the Land Registration proceedings Rani Siromani applied for Probate of the alleged Will of Raja Ram Chandra on the 6th December 1888. In his written statement filed on the 28th July 1890 Exhibit B (a) Satrugna pleaded that the Will was fabricated, that the family was governed by Mitakshara, that the estate was a joint and undivided ancestral estate and governed by the rule of lineal primogeniture. "Accordingly the said deceased Raja Ram Chandra being the eldest member of the seniormost branch of the family came into possession of the estate according to the family custom. He had no right to dispose of all those properties by way of Will or gift or to give permission to adopt a son or to settle, or appoint any future heir." The appellant strongly relies upon this passage as containing a distinct admission of Satrugna, under whose Will the present plaintiff claims, that there was no right of alienation. It is also contended upon the authority of Rani Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhuri Narpat Singh (18) that the admission of Satrugna shifts the onus of proof on the question of custom upon the plaintiff. In that case the question was whether the plaintiff who claimed the estate had been adopted by another person, and the Judicial Committee held that although the burden of proving that adoption had taken place was on the defendant, it was shifted upon the plaintiff, by the defendants proving statements solemnly made in deeds by the plaintiff himself that he had been so adopted, and that the admission raised the presumption that the adoption had taken place. In the present case had the statement of Satrugna (through whom the plaintiff claims) stood alone, it would have been very cogent evidence and the burden would have shifted on to the plaintiff. But as will be presently seen there were other statements made by Satrughna and those when taken together with his subsequent acts and conduct belie the above statement. In deciding the question we should take into consideration all his statements though weight must be given to each of his statements (including that referred to above) according to the circumstances under which it was made.

It appears, as pointed out on behalf of the respondent (i) that in the written statement of Satrughna referred to above, in the original (in vernacular) there is a full stop before the words "He had no right etc.," so that the statement about Raja Ram Chandra's having no power of alienation is not part of the family custom (about succession), (ii) that in any case there is no clear statement as regards custom, (iii) that the statement as to Raja's having no power of alienation may be in accordance with Satrughna's view of the family being joint and the estate being an impartible one, (iv) that although Sartaj Kuari's case (2) had been decided, The First Pittapur case (4) which dealt with the power of testamentary disposition had not then been decided, and lastly, (v) that the statement was made by Satrughna in self-defence.

It is contended on behalf of the appellant, that when Satrughna filed his objection in the Probate case his claim had been upheld by the Commissioner and the Board of Revenue in the Land Registration proceedings where Rani Siromani had not mentioned the Will. Every one knew that Raja Ram Chandra led a drunken riotous life and died by a fall from the roof of his house, and it would have been sufficient to challenge the Will as false and even if the Will was proved, it could not have the effect of driving him from the gadi (as observed by the Court below), as he was the recorded proprietor, and it was, therefore, unnecessary to attack the validity of the

Will. It is true that the Probate Court could not determine the question whether the Raja had the power to make the Will, and as a matter of fact it declined to go into it. But in the first place we have to consider not what the Court could have done, but what the parties thought. In the next place not only was the Probate case pending, but the title suit by Rani Siromani had already been instituted (on the 30th November or 6th December 1888). If the validity of the Will was established Satrughna would lose the whole estate worth about a lac of rupees a year. He was in destitute condition then. He had before him the prospect of getting the whole Raj if it was shown that the Will was a forgery, and that, there was no power of making a Will. The matter was of the utmost importance to him, and in these circumstances he would naturally take objections on all grounds and put forward every possible defence to the claim of Siromani. The Court found that the Will was not proved, but it is contended that the fact of setting up the Will which was an assertion of complete testamentary power shows that the Rani was eager to have the estate diverted, and she would have exerted her influence with the Raja to make a Will had he the power of alienation. But we have seen that the Raja met with an accidental death at the early age of 24. And apart from that, the fact that the Rani might have been anxious to get the whole estate under a testamentary disposition does not show that the Raja was also anxious to divert the Raj from his own family to that of his wife's family. The subsequent conduct of Satrughna goes to show that he did not believe in the statement that the Raja had no power of making alienation. In 1905 when he executed his Will he showed the consciousness of his power of making a Will. In his petition of objection dated the 8th May 1905 to the application of Madhu Sudan for taking the estate under the Encumbered Estates Act, Satrughna stated (in paragraph 1) that Raja Jagadish Chandra the minor

PROTAP CHANDRA V. JAGADISH CHANDRA.

Raja of Jamboni is "my sole heir constituted as such under my duly executed Will" and in paragraph 28, it was stated that "your petitioner is advised and most humbly submits by way of pure argument that he could legally sell his estate completely and outright, or having leased the whole of it in patni clear of all the debts, and no one could question his right."

It is true that in his petition he defended his acts on the ground of necessity. But he was charged with extravagance and waste, and he would in repelling those charges, and in order to avoid the estate being taken under the management under the Act, naturally attempt to justify alienations made by him on the ground of necessity. It would not under the circumstances show consciousness of inalienability specially having regard to the fact that in the very petition he expressly asserted "by way of pure agreement" a complete power of alienation.

In the ijara patta executed by him in favour of Mr. Mathewson dated the 8th March 1905, Satrugghna stated that he had borrowed three lacs of rupees from Jogendra Nath Roy and others of hatkehola by mortgaging his zemin-dari to them, and borrowed one lac of rupees from the ijaradar by making ijara settlement for 25 years, and further that by a registered patta dated the 10th January 1900 he had settled permanently the minerals in the entire Pargana Dhalbhum with Prince Mahomed Bukhtyar Shah. The ijara lease for 25 years may, as contended by the appellant, be considered as an arrangement beneficial to the estate, but the mortgage of the estate for three lacs of rupees and the permanent lease of the mineral rights in the entire estate were clearly alienations. Having regard to all these circumstances it appears that no weight can be attached to the statements contained in Exhibit B (a) in the Probate case, and that Satrugghna made the statement as to the non-existence of the power of alienation in his objection in the Probate case, in order to serve his own purposes and defeat the claim of Rani Siromani?

Moresh Chandra (the grandson of Nityanand) in his petition of objection filed on the 24th May 1891 in the Probate case also took the same pleas as those raised by Satrugghna and among others that the Raja "had no right to make a Will regarding those properties or to make a gift of the same to any person, or to give permission to take an adopted son or to appoint a future heir," and thus is relied upon as being a statement made by a member of the family as to the family custom. Moresh Chandra was minor at the time, and was represented by his mother and guardian Chura Kumari. However that may be, Nityanand himself had claimed the estate, that suit was pending. Moresh (the grandson of Nityanand and substituted in his place) was highly interested in denying the power of alienation. If the genuineness of the Will and the power to make a Will were proved, the suit would be defeated. Apart from that the statement was made at a time when the controversy as to family custom had arisen, and the question is whether the statement is admissible in evidence. Under section 32 clause (4) the statement in order to be admissible must have been made "before any controversy as to such right, custom or matter had arisen". In the present case Siromani had set up a Will. The controversy, therefore, as to the custom of making a Will had already arisen when Moresh filed his objections. The statement, therefore, does not come under clause (4) of section 32 of the Evidence Act. It is contended, however, on behalf of the appellant that it comes under section 49 or else under section 13 of the Act. Section 49 (so far as is material for the present case) runs as follows:—"When the Court has to form an opinion as to the usages and tenets of any body of men or family, the opinion of persons having special means of knowledge thereon are relevant facts." There is no difficulty when a living witness states his opinion, the question, however, arises whether the opinion of such a person who is dead can be proved even though it does not come under section 32 of the Evidence Act.

In the case of Garuradhwaja Prasad v. Superundhwaja Prasad (19) the Judicial Committee observed:—"By section 49 when the Court has to form an opinion or (inter alia) the usages of any family, the opinions of persons having special means of knowledge thereon are also relevant. But by section 60 if oral evidence refers to an opinion or the grounds on which that opinion is held it must be the evidence of the person who holds that opinion on those grounds. Their Lordships think it is admissible evidence for a living witness to state his opinion on the existence of a family custom and to state as the ground of that opinion information derived from deceased persons, and the weight of the evidence would depend on the position and character of the witness and of the persons on whose statements he has formed his opinion. But it must be the expression of independent opinion based on hearsay, and not mere repetition of hearsay." If the contention of the appellant were correct, statements of deceased persons as to matters coming under sections 45, 47 and 49 would be admissible even though they do not fall under section 32. But section 32 is a special section providing in what cases statements of deceased persons would be admissible. Such statements have not the sanction of oath, and the persons making them cannot be subjected to cross-examination. It is necessary, therefore, that the statements should not be made under bias i. e., after a controversy had arisen. Clause 4 of that section accordingly provides that statements of a deceased person on such matters are admissible if made before the controversy had arisen, and it would not be reasonable to hold that those very statements though made after the controversy had arisen are admissible under section 49 of the Act. Reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant upon a passage in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Fanindra Deb Raikut v. Rajeswar Das (20). Their Lordships referring to the judgment of the High Court on the question of adoption in the Raikut family observed:—"They also, if their Lordships rightly understand their judgment, put out of their consideration, on the ground that it was hearsay evidence, all the statements as to the custom made by deceased members of the family to which the witnesses deposed. They refer to section 32 of the Evidence Act, but not to section 49. The latter section is applicable, and where an ancient family usage is to be proved the statement of deceased members of the family are relevant facts." But their Lordships were dealing with statements made by living persons examined in Court who deposed to statements made by deceased persons. The statements of the deceased persons on the question of family usage are no doubt relevant facts, but in first place it does not appear that the statements of deceased persons deposed to by the witnesses were made after any controversy as to the usage had arisen. In the next place as pointed out by Lord Davey in the case of Garuradhwaja Prasad v. Superundhwaja Prasad (19) the opinion of a living witness though grounded upon the statements of deceased persons would be admissible, it would be so as independent opinion and repetition of hearsay. We do not think that their Lordships laid down that statements made by deceased persons after the controversy had arisen and, therefore, inadmissible under section 32 are admissible under section 49 of the Act. In the case of Ekradeshwar Singh v. Janeshwari Babausin (21), the Judicial Committee referring to certain evidence as to custom observed:—"Some statements deposed to by witnesses who were called, and some of the documents which were put in, were not admissible as evidence in this suit. It seems to have been overlooked at one period of the suit that evidence oral or documentary as to statement of a deceased person as to the custom in a family is not admissible if it appears that such statements were made after a controversy . . . had arisen."

Reference was made to clause (7) of section 32, but that clause refers to statements "contained in any deed, Will or other document which relates to any such transaction as is mentioned in section 13 clause (a)." It omits clause (b) which relates to "particular instances." "Statements," moreover, cannot be called "instances" though the whole litigation ending with the judgment may be an "instance."

But even if the statements of the deceased persons, made after the controversy had arisen are admissible, we do not think that they are of any value. Rani Siromani had set up a Will. Mohesh was deeply interested in denying the power of the Raja to make a Will, because he could not possibly succeed to the Raja if the Will was genuine and the Raja had power to make it. In the circumstances we are unable to attach any weight to the statements.

As stated above, one of the suits was instituted by Nityanand (son of Kamala Kant belonging to the Jamboni branch) on the 4th October 1888. He was nearer to Rani Chandra by one degree than Satrugna. The defendants to the suit were 1 Satrugna, 2 Rani Siromani, 3 and 4 the other two Ranis, 5 and 6 Kishori and her son, 7 Madhu Sudan (the father of the present defendant) and 8 Iswar (the father of the present plaintiff). It was stated in the plaint that the widows had no right, that the estate was the joint ancestral property of the family governed by Mitakshara, but being an impartible Raj and according to the custom prevailing in the Dhalbhum Raj the nearest and eldest member of the family was entitled to succeed, the other members being entitled to maintenance only. The appellant relies upon the statement, that the estate was the joint ancestral property of the family, governed by Mitakshara and that it was an impartible Raj, in Nityananda's plaint, and similar statements in the pleadings of Satrugna and Iswar, in the several suits, as showing that when the question of succession arose, the members of the family were agreed that the estate was joint ancestral family property. It is also pointed out that in the judgment in Nityananda's suit it was held that though separate in mess, he (Nityananda though of the Jamboni branch) was not separate in estate from Ram Chandra. But the fact that the family was joint is now admitted in the present case. The question is whether the holder of the estate had the power of alienation.

In the plaint in the suit brought by Nityananda reference was made to a pretended claim of one Kishori Debi under a Will alleged to have been executed by Raja Ram Chandra in favour of her son, and it was stated that she was not the married wife of Raja Ram Chandra that the Will was a manufactured document and was "not valid in accordance with law." There was no statement that it was not valid according to custom. In the written statement of Satrugna in that suit filed on the 9th September 1890 nothing was said about the custom of inalienability, it being only stated that the estate was "an undivided joint ancestral and impartible Raj." It appears, therefore, that nothing was said about the custom of inalienability either by Nityananda in his plaint or by Satrugna in his written statement. Nor is there any reference to such a custom in Iswar's written statement filed on the 11th September 1890 in the suit, by Nityananda, the Will set up by Kishori being challenged as manufactured and "illegal." In the suit by Iswar, he stated in his plaint that certain Hikamali mauzas had been granted to him by Raja Ram Chandra by way of maintenance when he was appointed Hikim, in order to show that he was joint with Ram Chandra. The case of Satrugna was that neither Iswar nor Kamalakanta was joint with Raja Ram Chandra that he, Satrugna, was joint with Ram Chandra and that the grants set up by Iswar must have been obtained by underhand means. In his written statement he challenged the Khoriash mokarari pattas secured, from Raja Ram Chandra who "used to remain always in a drunken condition," by the plaintiff Iswar and other persons, and that the said settlements, could not "do any harm to this defendant" nor could the plaintiff be held to be joint with the late Raja Ram Chandra. This is relied upon as evidence of inalienability. The words "can do no harm" i.e., that they are not binding may involve an assertion of inalienability. But in the first place there was no question of inalienability raised in that suit, secondly, the only question was whether Iswar was joint with Ram Chandra and so in the suit of Nityananda. The fact remains that Raja Ram Chandra did make alienations which were never even attempted to be set aside by Satrughna. Reliance was placed by the respondent on the 4th paragraph of the written statement where Satrughna denied that there was any custom that a person related as a brother and belonging to the eldest branch would be appointed Hikim or that the person so appointed Hikim would get the Raj. But the non-existence of the custom of appointing a successor by giving tika is quite different from the custom of inalienability.

In his written statement in Siromani's title suit, filed on the 9th September 1890 Satrughna stated (in paragraph 14) as follows—"The Will referred to by the plaintiff in paragraph 5 of the plaint is a manufactured and illegal document. This defendant does not believe that the said Will was signed by the late Raja while he was in his senses and the said Raja had no right to make a Will. The words in Bengali are "Will karibar khamata chhilana". The word khamata may mean "power" or "right" and it is contended by the respondent that it referred to his want of physical capacity to make the Will and the same view has been taken by the Court below. But having regard to the fact that the Raja's physical incapacity is dealt with in the earlier part of the passage, the conclusion sentence would seem to refer to his "right" to make a Will. But although it is so, no custom of inalienability is pleaded, and the statement does not carry the case further than what was stated in his petition of objection in the Probate case, Exhibit B (a).

As already stated, Satrughna was assailed on three sides Rani Siromani set up a Will and asserted that the family was governed by the Dayabhaga. So far as those two matters are concerned Satrughna, Iswar and Nityananda were equally interested in opposing her. As between Iswar and Nityananda on the one hand and Satrughna on the other, the questions were whether the two former were joint with Raja Ram Chandra whether Kamala Kant was the second son and Hikim Narsingh was the third son of Raja Jagannath, and lastly whether ordinary or lineal primogeniture was the rule of succession.

Nityananda claimed preference on the ground that he was nearer in blood i.e., on the ground of ordinary primogeniture while Iswar claimed succession on the ground of lineal primogeniture.

They were, however, all interested in attacking the Will whether set up by Rani Siromani, or any Will which Nityananda apprehended might be set up by Kishori. The controversy then had arisen as to the power of making testamentary alienation, and the parties were fighting in Courts of law. Statements made by Iswar or Mahesh (grandson of Nityananda) under such circumstances in support of their case would be more evidence than the statement of Rani Siromani made in support of her case.

Reliance is also placed upon the deposition of Mahendra Narain Deo in Suit No. 10 of 1906 given on the 20th and 21st February 1907 in connection with a litigation relating to the Raipur family which together with the Ghatsila (Dhalbhum) are included in the nine mahals, which are cognate. Mahendra Narain stated: "In our nine mahals there is no custom of making Will or partition. The Raja has no right to make a Will." It is contended by the appellant that Mahendra Narain being a member of the Raipur family had special means of knowledge of the customs of the nine families. But Mahendra Narain was the father-in-law of Raja Balbhadra the plaintiff in the said suit and his evidence was given at a time when a controversy had arisen upon the question of alienability in the Raipur family. In cross-examination he stated that no one ever made any Will in the nine mahals. "From the papers I have seen that they cannot make any Will and so I have said that they cannot make any Will, I have seen this in the decrees." His knowledge, therefore, was derived from records but he could not tell in which decree he saw it. He further stated that the Rajas of the nine mahals cannot make a gift of any property but they can grant mokarari &c., and they can mortgage their properties. The Court in that suit held that "the estate being an impartible and ancient Raj and the rule of succession thereto being lineal primogeniture, the Raja had no power to make a Will depriving the legal heir." Nothing, however, was said about any custom of inalienability nor is there anything to show that Mahendra's evidence was believed. In the next Raipur case (Suit No. 215 of 1910) the deposition of Mahendra Narain was put in, and the Court did not accept his statements and held that the Raja had the power to make a Will.

Iswar in his suit asserted that Raja Ram Chandra had made him Hikim and associated him in the management of the estate. Certain ladies of the Jamboni family viz., Chura Kumari, Padmabati and Brahma Kumari were examined on interrogatories. They were examined to support his claim, based upon the ground that Ram Chandra had made him Hikim and he was associated with the management of the estate. In cross-examination they had to admit that the Raja could not at his pleasure interfere with the ordinary course of succession by primogeniture. Before Wills were made, the method of nomination was by giving tika or by mentioning the nominee in some document. It is accordingly contended that if the Raja could not nominate his successor at his pleasure, and was bound by custom as to the manner in which the estate was to descend, the power of making testamentary disposition was of no value. We have already dealt with this question in an earlier part of the judgment. There may be power of alienation without the power of diverting the course of succession, though by the exercise of the power of alienation, the course of succession may practically be altered. In any case the evidence of the ladies has no direct bearing upon the question of alienation.

Siromani's title suit was dismissed by the Trial Court on the 19th August 1891, and her appeal dismissed by the High Court on the 15th August 1893. The suit by Iswar (to which practically all the members of the family were parties) was disposed of in terms of a solénama on the 30th November 1892. It was settled that Satrugna would remain in possession of the estate and own it from generation to generation, that he would grant a patti of some mouzas belonging to the estate yielding an income of Rs. 9,000 a year on the estate being released from management under the Encumbered Estates Act, and that if Satrugna left no son or grandson, or great-grandson, then Iswar or his son (the present plaintiff) would get the Estate. The name of Madhu Sudan (father of the defendant) appeared as a party to the solénama decree, but he applied for review on the ground that his name had been fraudulently introduced into the settlement. The decree was declared inoperative as against Madhu Sudan. Iswar having died, his son Jagadish (the present plaintiff) was allowed to withdraw the suit against Madhu Sudan with liberty to bring a fresh suit. So far, therefore, as Madhu Sudan was concerned he refused to be a party to the compromise.

Nityananda's suit was decided against him by the Trial Court on the 28th

PROTAP CHANDRA V. JAGADISH CHANDRA.

December 1891, by the High Court on the 21st August 1896, and by the Privy Council on the 22nd February 1922.

While the litigation was pending Satrugghna applied to the Deputy Commissioner Singhbhum on the 2nd December 1892 for release of the Estate from the Encumbered Estates Act under which it had come upon the application of Ram Chandra in 1886. Satrugghna in his petition asserted that the estate was not liable for any of the debts incurred by Ram Chandra specially such as were illegal or immoral that no portion of the debts or liabilities could be satisfied out of the proceeds of the ancestral estate, that the debts were being satisfied out of the estates under the Encumbered Estates Act and that he was very much injured thereby. It appears, however, that most of the debts were raised on single bonds, and the debts of a previous holder are not binding unless charged upon the estate. But apart from that it is difficult to rely upon any particular statement made by Satrugghna as he seems to have made assertions with respect to the power of making alienations from time to time as suited him.

We now consider the oral evidence adduced by the defendant on the alleged custom of inalienability.

Gopal Chandra Sen, aged 74, says that he was in the service of Raja Satrugghna for about 30 years, and that during the pendency of the Probate proceedings instituted by Rani Siromani, a conversation in regard to it took place in his presence between Satrugghna, Madhu Sudan, Sarthaka Roy (the Dewan) and Dibakar Das who was then the acting priest of the family. Satrugghna remarked, and he was borne out by the Dewan, that the power of making a Will was opposed to the Raj family custom. Satrugghna's statement, if accepted, does not go beyond his averment in his petition of objection in the Will case. The weight to be attached to the witness is, however, insignificant. He is not disinterested as he, deposed for Madhu Sudan against Isvar in the Jamboni case, and was reproducing a conversation he had heard 33 years before, though he had no occasion to re-call it in the interval. Khetra Mohan, aged 50, son of the above named Dibakar states that he also officiated as priest in Satrugghna's time, and heard (from some person unknown) of the family Kulachar prohibiting the Raja from adopting a son or from alienating the estate by gift. He speaks of a "Committee" of members and officers of the family, meeting after Raja Ram Chandra's death to discuss the succession when Rani Dhajamani declared from behind the purdah that a female could not become the Raja.

His evidence is plainly untrustworthy. According to his own showing he was no more than 15 or 16 years of age at the time and would thus be unlikely to remember a casual remark made about 32 years ago. It is also noteworthy that according to him no mention was made at the meeting of the Will propounded by Rani Siromani; though that would obviously have been in the forefront of the debate.

He is also not independent as he deposed for the defendant and against the plaintiff in the Probate case and is in possession of two mouzas under brahmattar grant from the Raj.

Gadadhar Pande, aged 58, the pujari of Rankini Debi (the family deity) speaks of a proposal made by Satrugghna to marry the daughter of one of the Singhbhum Babus. The Babu stipulated that if the lady had no child, Satrugghna should give her the estate, to which Satrugghna replied that according to the Kulachar of the family, he could not give the estate to a female. This does not show that the Raja had no power of alienation. On the other hand the witness himself holds 400 or 500 bighas under a mokarari grant from the Raj.

Tritbhuban Ojha, aged 68, who has been the Raj priest since Ram Chandra's day says that Jagannath, Nityananda and the Ranis told him of the Kulachar of the family, namely, that there was no custom of alienation by Will, gift or sale, nor of adoption nor of female succession. He states that Rani Dhajamani asked him to dissuade Rani Siromani from propounding the Will as being against the family custom, and that he tried to do so but failed. He was a witness in that case and was disbelieved. He was witness for the defendant in the Probate case of the present plaintiff and was disbelieved. He confesses to having been no more than twelve years old when Jagannath explained the family Kulachars to him an incredible proposition. His evidence on the custom of inalienability is negated by his own admission that he holds seven brahmattar mouzas aggregating 4589 bighas under a grant from the Raj and that he cannot be evicted even if his tenure of office as family priest is determined. The Court below itself has not accepted his testimony in the present case notwithstanding that he is described as "a respectable straightforward witness."

Ram Chandra Sripati, aged 65, states that he was told by Satrugna and the Raj officers of the family Kulachars, namely that the eldest son becomes the Raja, that the estate is not partitioned, and the Raja may not adopt a son or alienate the estate by Will. It transpires, however, that Satrugna made these statements to him at the time of Siromani's Will case which makes them of little value. Moreover, the witness is not independent as he holds one entire mouza and part of another under a brahmattar grant made by the Raja to his grandfather.

Siba Prosad Misra, aged 60, states that one day about 25 or 30 years ago he went for a walk with Satrugna who told him of the family Kulachars prohibiting alienation by gift, Will, adoption or sale. It is not clear whether Siromani's case was pending at the time.

This witness, like the last, gives Bhets to the Raj family. He is the Baibahik of Khetra Mohan Das and cousin of Ram Chandra, and his grandfather was given some brahmattar lands by the Raja.

Madan Mohan Seranji, aged 63, who lived at the Rajbati with his father, the Sabha Pandit of the Raja Ram Chandra and Jagannath, says that he was told at different times of the Kulachars by Dhajamani, Satrugna and Kripasindhu.

Das. There was a custom of impartibility and lineal primogeniture, and no custom of alienation or of testamentary disposition while adoption was prohibited. He states that about 1290 Raja Ram Chandra wished to borrow some money from one Dabriel but the negotiations fell through because as the witness was told by his father, it was against the family custom to take loans. Kripasindhu, who is a relation of the witness, confirmed this though the source of his knowledge does not appear. Satrugna's statement to him was made 12 or 14 years ago after the disputed Will case, while Dhajamani's was nearly 40 years ago.

The witness is not disinterested as he holds four mouzas under murashi molarari brahmattar right, two being granted by Raja Ram Chandra and two by Raja Jagannath.

From this review of the evidence it is plain that though the witnesses are at one in declaring that there is no custom of alienation of the Raj estate, they all in point of fact hold a number of mouzas under permanent grants from the Raj. We agree with the Court below in thinking that their testimony is untrustworthy. They have been set up with the transparent object of amplifying and perhaps embroidering the statement made by Satrugna in the Probate proceedings.

On behalf of the appellant reference was made to the case of Sivasubramania Naicker v. Krishnammal (22), where Muthusami Ayar, J., after referring to the "settled rule of law that though mere absence of alienation is of itself no proof of inalienability, yet such absence when it is coupled with special facts that would render alienation probable is relevant evidence, though its probative value may depend on the special circumstances of each case" observed—"Eight of the nine zemindars who held the estate prior to the first defendant either left sons or widows for whom they would ordinarily desire to make some provisions, and the peculiar custom which is shown to prevail in regard to succession must have imparted to that, desire more than its ordinary strength as an inducement to alienation. Notwithstanding this, there has been no sale or gift for more than three centuries, and ought to be considered together with such other evidence of inalienability as there is on record."

The custom in that case (Dayadi Pattani) was of a very peculiar nature. The succession did not devolve upon the heir according to Mitakshara Law, nor on the eldest son according to the rule of primogeniture, but on the Dayadi or cousin of the deceased palayagar who was senior in age and who was descended from one of the three brothers who originally formed a joint Hindu family. It appears that in five cases the deceased palayagar left sons, and in three left widows, but in all the senior Dayadi took the estate to their exclusion. In such cases the zemindar would naturally desire to make some provision for his own son or widow when according to the peculiar custom they would be excluded, and the estate taken by a Dayadi, a distant agnate, and in these circumstances the absence of any sale or gift for more than three centuries was held to be relevant evidence. The observations of the learned Judges in that case cannot apply to the Dhalbhum family where in the majority of the cases the succession devolved upon the eldest son, or where there was no son, upon the brother and it was only in the last case on the death of Ram Chandra III. under special circumstances that it devolved upon a somewhat distant agnate.

Plaintiff's documentary evidence regarding alienations in the Dhalbhum Estate

The earliest document produced on the point relates to a permanent grant of 18 mouzas by Raja Chitreswar II to Kanhu Dhal the grantfather of the defendant, on the 8th April 1850 by way of maintenance. It appears that when Chitreswar II was an infant, Jugal Kishore got possession of 64 mouzas which he alleged was for his maintenance. Those 64 mouzas were, however, resumed and after some litigation 18 mouzas were granted by the deed. One of them is Mouza Dakhinsol, which was claimed by the defendant's father in his deposition in a land acquisition case as a mokarari khorposh mouza, descending to him by right of succession from his grantfather. The mouzas, therefore, according to the defendant are permanent alienations. The area of the 18 mouzas is 49,293 bighas and they are still in the possession of the defendant.

It is contended by the appellant that it was a khorposh grant, and that there was a condition in the deed that the grantee will have no power to transfer by way of gift or sale without the consent of the grantor and that any gift or sale without such consent shall be null and void. But there is no provision for re-entry, and that being so the restraint against alienation is void.

There is a reference in the settlement khevat to a Mahatran patta dated the 21st November 1854 by Raja Chitreswar II in favour of one Jaga Mohan Sarkar in respect of Mouza Kalajhore consisting of 2455 bighas at a rent of Rs. 4-6-0. It is described as mokarari and non-resumable in the settlement khevat. The original potta has not been produced. In some other cases too, it was not produced and the respondent relied upon the entries in the Settlement khevat. These Settlement *khevat*s were produced on the 7th August 1922, when the trial commenced. It is contended by the appellant that the Settlement khevat cannot prove the grant. But the entries made in the Settlement Record are such as the Settlement Officer is authorised to make under section 102 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and such entries are presumed to be correct under section 103B of the Act. But even if the entries do not come under section 102 of the Tenancy Act, they are relevant under section 35 of the Evidence Act, being made by a public officer in the discharge of official duties. [See Lekhraj Rai v. Mahipal Singh (23)].

It appears from the judgment dated the 27th July 1905, in a suit by Raja Satrugna against Janardan Pal and another for resumption of a Mouza Paru lia on the ground that it was a Hikimali khorporsh grant made to the plaintiff's grandfather which was held as Hikimali khorporsh by his grandfather, father and by himself and that it was resumable at the pleasure of the Raja for the time being. It was alleged that the plaintiff (Satrughna) had executed a usufructuary mortgage of the mouza to one Janardan, for a term, and on the expiry of the term obtained khass possession but that the defendant claiming the mouza under a kotkobala from one Sarthak Ray obtained decree for rent against the defendant No. 2, and the plaintiff, therefore, sought to recover khass possession. The defence was that the plaintiff, his father and grandfather had for a century treated the property as their permanent transferable lakheraj property and that the Rajas of Dhalbhum had recognised the permanent, transferable lakheraj right. The Court held that plaintiff had failed to prove that it was a khorporsh grant, that the grant of the mouza, to the grandfather of the plaintiff was an absolute and irrevocable lakheraj grant made in full satisfaction of all claims of future maintenance and conferring on the grantee not only an heritable but an alienable estate. It further held that "all the nine mouzas that were originally granted to the plaintiff's grandfather have been gradually transferred by sale, gift or mortgage and all these mouzas are in possession of the transferees, whose transfers have been recognised by the Raja by receiving roadcess and in several other ways and came to the conclusion that the grant to the plaintiff's grandfather was an "absolute and irrevocable one". It appears, therefore, nine mouzas were permanently alienated from the Raj estate either by Raja Jagannath I or Raja Ram Chandra, the area of one Mouza Purulia alone being about 10,000 bighas.

4. A mokarari grant by Jagannath II to one Hari Majhi dated the 25th June 1866 of Mouza Chalkuri. The patta is not produced, but there are entries in the Settlement khewat which show that the area of the mouza is 2259 bighas the rent being 6 annas and odd, and that there have been successive transfers (sales) of the mouza. Another mokarari patta by Raja Jagannath dated the 31st May 1866 in respect of an entire Mouza Tangram consisting of 1560 bighas to one Zabbar Khan at a fixed rent of Rs 11.

5. A similar grant by Raja Jagannath II to one Hari Prosad Ghosh of Mouza Rosunchepa consisting of 944 bighas at a rent of 6-12-0 on the 30th September 1866. The patta is not produced but the Settlement khewat refer to it, and it is described as mokarari and non-resumable.

6. A permanent mahatran grant dated the 18th May 1883 by Raja Ram Chandra II to Joy Prokash Lal (the then manager under the Court of Wards) in respect of Mouza Manpur from generation to generation. The mouza appears from the Settlement khewat to consist of 5463 bighas and was granted at a rent of Rs. 5-4 as a mohatran which means a "heritable, transferable and non-reasonable grant" (See District Gazetteer Singhbhum, page 186).

7. A permanent grant of Mouza Gopalpur dated the 16th June 1883 by Ram Chandra III, to Sarthak Raj Dewan from generation to generation" at a rent of Rs. 25. The area appears from the Settlement papers to be 1257 bighas.

8. Patta dated the 26th June 1884 by Raja Ram Chandra III to one Kartick Chandra of Mouza Matkundi. The patta is not produced, but is referred to in the Settlement khewat, and is described as consisting of 1212 bighas at a rent of Rs. 4-4-0.

9. Mokarari patta dated the 17th October 1884 in respect of Mouza Harindukri consisting of 1873 bighas granted by Raja Ram Chandra to one Sahadeb Napit at a rent of Rs. 18-8. It appears that the grantee was holding the mouza from before as a Prodhani mouza for a term, and by the patta, it was granted as mokarari at a fixed unalterable rent.

10. Brahmatrar grant dated the 28th November 1884 by Ram Chandra III to Chandra Kumar Sanyal of Mouza Ka-shudi, the area being 146 bighas at a rent of Rs. 2-8-0. The patta is not produced but is referred to in khewat, Exhibit 19 (3).

11. Lakheraj patia dated the 11th September 1885 in respect of 4 mouzas by Raja Ram Chandra to one Udhav Chandra Das. It appears that the latter held certain lands as Sardar Ghatwal and in consequence of a solenama between him and the Government he was to get a 2-annas share in the profits of certain mouzas. In exchange for the said share of the profits he was by the patia granted two mouzas, and another two mouzas by way of reward, as lakheraj, the mouzas being valued at Rs. 13,205. The area of the first two mouzas appears from the Thana list of villages (Exhibit 42) to be 2800 bighas and that of the last two 2094 bighas. Even if all the mouzas were given in consideration of the surrender of a 2-annas share of the profits, it would none-the-less be a case of alienation.

Non-resumable brahmattar grant by Raja Satrughna to Bhikari Mahapatra of Mouza Debanki (area 1357 bighas rent Rs. 3-12). The patia is not produced but is referred to in the Settlement khewat, Exhibit 19 (1).

12. An ijara lease of the estate by Raja Satrughna to Mr Mathewson for 25 years dated the 8th March 1905, in consideration of a loan of one lac of rupees carrying interest at 7 per cent. It is true that it was a lease for a term but Madhu Sudan (the defendant's father) challenged it as wholly unnecessary in his petition of objection to the Deputy Commissioner. That lease is still running.

In this ijara lease as already stated there is a recital of a loan of three lacs of rupees taken by Satrughna from Jogendra Nath Roy and others by hathola on a mortgage of his estate. It is contended by the appellant that there was legal necessity for it. It is true that there was costly litigation which Satrughna had to conduct for a long time. But the litigation had ended in 1892, and there was only one case pending before the Privy Council which ended in 1902. In the 84th paragraph of the judgment in the suit of Nityananda against Satrughna dated the 28th December 1891 the Court found that Iswar Ohandra had advanced large sums of money to Satrughna and his (Iswar's) statement was that Satrughna had undertaken to let out the zemindari (the income of which was about Rs 60,000) to him at a rent of Rs 12,000. In the petition of Madhu Sudan to the Deputy Commissioner referred to above, he stated (in paragraph 6) that Satrughna had without the least necessity incurred a debt of three lacs of rupees, and was about to grant an ijara of the entire estate to a trading concern. Satrughna stated in his petition that he was compelled by legal and moral necessity to defend a number of costly suits, and that he borrowed three lacs of rupees with which he had cleared his debts incurred under dire necessity, and in paragraph 28 he stated that he could legally sell his entire estate outright or lease it in patni to clear off the debts and no one could question his right. It appears, therefore, that Madhu Sudan asserted that there was no necessity for the loan and Satrughna asserted that there was. There is the fact that he raised a loan of three lacs of rupees on mortgage of the estate and it was for the defendant who had to establish the circumstances under which the transfer was made to show by facts and figures that there was legal necessity and the extent thereof. It is to be observed that Madhu Sudan, in his petition to the Deputy Commissioner alleged that Satrughna had by gifts of villages to his wives, concubine's relations, and his favourites reduced the assets of the estate by nearly rupees ten thousand a year, but nothing was said by him about Satrughna not having any power of alienation. The estate was taken over under the Encumbered Estates Act by an order dated the 2nd August 1905. Madhu Sudan asserted that there was no necessity for the debts incurred by Satrughna and suggested a scheme for liquidating the debt of three lacs of rupees in 14 years. He proceeds, therefore, on the footing that the debts though unnecessarily incurred were binding upon the estate, and that unless Satrughna was restrained from alienating and incurring fresh debts, the estate would be ruined to his own detriment. It appears, therefore, that both according to Satrugna and Madhu Sudan the former had the power of alienation.

As already stated Satrugna by a patta dated the 10th January 1900 permanently settled the mining rights in the entire Pargana with Prince Mahomed Bukhtear Shah, (see recital in the ijara patta in favour of Mr. Mathewson dated the 8th March 1905). It was certainly a very valuable right and although this took place in 1900, Madhu Sudan did not protest against it nor have any steps been taken to have it set aside up to now. It is contended by the appellant that there is nothing to show that Madhu Sudan was aware of it. But in the first place a Permanent Settlement of the mining rights in the entire estate must have been a matter of notoriety. Secondly, it was recited in the ijara patta to Mr. Mathewson, and Madhu Sudan in his petition to the Deputy Commissioner referred to that ijara and lastly the defendant Protap in his petition dated the 19th August 1919 to the Government of Behar referred to the fact that Satrugna had granted a "mining lease of the entire zemindari to the late Prince Mahomed Bakhtear Shah on a rather inadequate consideration" and submitted that "attempts should be made to purchase the mining rights on behalf of the estate as it will be a valuable acquisition to, and an improvement of the estate and that the estate should be retained under the management of the Encumbered Estates Act. It is not suggested that any of these alienations had ever been challenged by the Encumbered Estate Act Authorities.

These circumstances go to show the consciousness of Madhu Sudan and of the defendant himself as to the power of alienation possessed by the holder of the estate.

The list given above does not include the ordinary khorphosh grants to members of the family. It does not include some khorphosh grants but they are or have been found to be permanent alienations and, therefore, are not in the nature of ordinary khorphosh grants. Nor does the list refer to alienations made by the grantees of the mouzas to third parties.

It was suggested in the evidence of one of the witnesses for the defendants that some of the grants to servants and some other persons were for services. But the Settlement Record shows that they were non-resumable permanent grants.

The witnesses examined by the defendants also admit holding large quantities of land granted as brahmattar or mokarari to their predecessors by the Raj.

The total area held by these witnesses would come up to 15312 bighas.

It is said that there were 1640 villages in Singbhum, and 46 villages in Midnapur comprised in the estate. The area included in the estate is said to be about 22 lacs of bighas which was settled at Rs. 4,000 only at the Permanent Settlement. But the alienations were also of considerable quantities of land, and extending over a long period, though most of them were made since the time of Ram Chandra III.

Custom of Nine Mehals.

Besides the evidence of custom in the Dhalbhum family, the parties adduced evidence of custom in some other cognate Estates. They are referred to as jungle mehals or nine mehals.

It is pointed out by the respondent that the defendant in his written statement (paragraph 2) described the Dhal-bhum Estate as a part of the locality known as the jungle mehals of Midnapur, and in paragraph 3 referred to the customs prevailing in the said Dhalbhum family and in the locality known as the jungle mehals. The 11th issue raised the question of custom prevailing in the jungle mehals, and the special custom of nine mehals now set up in argument on behalf of the appellant was not set up in the pleadings.

In Hunter's Statistical Account of Bengal, Volume XVII, page 325, it is stated "Barabhum with Ambikanagar, Supur, Shyamsundarpore, Phulkusma, Manbhum and Raipur and two other Estates which now form part of Singbhum district are known locally as the nine mehals." The two other Estates of Singbhum are not named by Hunter.

We will now refer to evidence adduced with regard to these mehals.

The Raipur Estate is a branch of the Bishenpur Raj. It is included in the jungle mehals and nine mehals, and is governed, by the Dayabhaga, but the custom of impartibility and succession by lineal primogeniture prevails.

In a suit between Raja Balbhadra v. Hari Kishen Rath and other defendants (Suit No. 10 of 1906), it was held that the estate being an impartible ancient Raj, and the rule of succession thereto being lineal primogeniture, the Raja had no power to make a Will depriving the legal heir Lal Singh and the plaintiff from the estate.

It was in this suit that Mahendra Narain Deo of the Manbhum family examined as a witness on behalf of his son-in-law Balbhadra Singh stated that "in our nine mehals there is no custom of making a Will," but the Court did not decide any question of custom of inalienability but based its decision upon the ground of impartibility and lineal primogeniture. It appears from the judgment in a subsequent Suit No. 215 of 1920 between Raja Radhashyam against Raja Balbhadra that the plaintiffs' case was that "the owners of the estate possess an absolute power of disposal over the estate by sale, gift, Will or mortgage and settlement at rent, and that this power has been exercised from remote times" and the plaintiff set up a Will said to have been executed by Raja Indra Singh. The deposition of Mahendra Narain (who was then dead) was put in evidence in this suit but the Trial Court was not disposed to "attach much worth to his testimony," and held that Indra Singh had power to make a Will but that the Will was not genuine. On appeal to the High Court it was held that Indra Singh did not execute the Will and that the suit was barred by limitation, no opinion being expressed as to the power to make a Will.

Saharjora The Saharjora Estate is a dependent of the Bishenpur Raj, and is governed by the Dayabhaga. It appears that Nimai Narayan of Saharjora had three sons Joy Narayan, Rup Narayan and Sankar. Joy Narayan left a son Hari Narain, and Rup Narayan left a son Jadab Narayan. In a suit by Hari Narayan (the son of Joy Narayan) who claimed the estate, Sankar set up a hebanama under which he claimed the entire estate. In that suit the Provincial Court held that the hebanama was valid. Pending the appeal to the Sudder Dewani Adalat, Hari Narayan died and Jadav (the son of Rup Narayan) applied for an order for substitution in the place of Hari Narayan. When the matter came up for final hearing the Sudder Dewani Adalat held that Jadab Narayan had no right to be substituted, and, therefore, did not consider the validity of the hebanama, the result being that the decision of the Provincial Court holding the hebanama was valid, was not set aside. The next suit was brought by Jadav against Sankar and succeeded in the Court of first instance. He lost, however, in the Provincial Court on the ground of limitation, and also in the Sudder Dewani Adalat. The result was that the possession of Sankar obtained under the hebanama continued, though in the second suit, neither the Provincial Court nor the Sudder Dewani entered into the question of title.

Pandra is one of the jungle mehals though not one of the nine mehals and is governed by the Dayabhaga. The estate is an impartible one. In the litigation which came up to the High Court on appeal (see judgment of the High Court dated the 11th June 1889) the question for decision was whether the custom of lineal primogeniture was proved and the question was answered in the affirmative both by the Trial Court and the High Court. There was no issue about the custom of inalienability. In the course of their judgment, the learned Judges observed "It appears that sometimes a new Raj has been created by a grant from the head of the family to which the grantee belonged. Pandra itself is an instance of this". They were however, "exceptional and did not take place in regular course, they were dispositions of parts of the Raj property, not made as of right but were either the result of force or were made in gratitude for services done or were prompted by affection of perhaps family ambition." The learned Judges referred to the evidence of a khorphoshdar of the Srirampur Raj who stated that all the Rajas of Srirampur who held the Raj before it became subject to the control of "the British Government could have made over their Raj to any of their sons as they chose". The question, however, of the custom of alienability was not raised nor decided by the Court.

Fulkusma and Sildah. Fulkusma is one of the nine mehals and is governed by Mitakshara. The Will executed by Raja Mukunda Narain of Fulkusma on the 15th March 1869 recited that his maternal grandfather Raja Mangovinda having died without a son, one Ganapanta Mahapatra set himself up as his adopted son and thereupon a suit was instituted by Mukunda's mother against him, and a decree was obtained. Mukunda on her death obtained possession of the Sildah Estate and gave a patni of 4-annas share of Fulkusma to Ram Chand Dutt on the 29th Sravan 1268, and subsequently granted a patni of 6-annas share of Sildah to Ram Chand Dutt, in 1269, and took back the patni of Fulkusma from him. He bequeathes this ancestral estate Fulkusma to his eldest son and a 4-annas share of Sildah to Rani Durga Kumari and his youngest son Joggeswar Narain in equal shares. It appears, therefore, that a patni was granted in respect of 4-annas share of Fulkusma which was subsequently taken back, and a patni of 6-annas share of Sildah granted. It also shows that the Raja executed a Will in favour of his eldest son. The eldest son, no doubt, would have got the estate by succession but it shows the exercise of the power of testamentary disposition on the part of the Raja. Rani Durga Kumari granted mourashi istimrari lease of her share to Ram Chand Dutt and Joggeswar gave qara of his share to Watson & Co, and subsequently their interests were sold in execution of decrees. It is to be observed, however, that Sildah was obtained by Mokunda from his maternal grandfather by inheritance.

Jamkundi is one of the jungle mehals. It is impartible Raj and the succession to it is governed by rule of lineal primogeniture. In a suit relating to the succession to the estate it was held that the Raja (Nursing Deh) had power to dispose of his property by Will and authorise his widow to adopt a son, (See judgment of Sub-Judge dated the 17th September 1912 Exhibit 38 (3)) and the suit was decided on that footing which, however, was based on an admission of the defendant's Pleader.

Supur (or Khatia) is also one of the nine mehals. The sale certificate, Exhibit 43, shows that a portion of the estate (48 villages comprised in the estate) was sold in execution of a decree of the Civil Court against Hiteshar Dhal the proprietor of the estate in 1869 and purchased by one Raja Chandra Mohan Singh.

Shyamsunderpore is one of the nine mehals and governed by the Dayabhaga. It appears from the koala dated the 4th July 1883 [Exhibit 45 (2)] that Raja Sunder Narayan of Shyamsunderpore sold a number of mouzas forming portion of the estate to Raja Natabar of Simlapal for Rs. 21,000 to liquidate his debts for which decrees had been obtained and the sale of his properties advertised. Natabar's son Jagabandhu got his name registered in the Collectorate. See Exhibit 44 (9).

PROTAP CHANDRA V. JAGADISH CHANDRA.

Dhalbhum and Jamboni are governed by the Mitakshara.

Barabhum. Out of the documents admitted in evidence in this Court is a judgment of the Sudder Dewani Adalat dated the 4th June 1804 in a litigation between Madho Singh plaintiff and Ganga Gobind Singh defendant. It related to the Barabhum Estate one of the nine mehals (in the jungle mehals) Madho Singh's case was that he was the son of the Patrani (the senior wife) though he was younger in age to Ganga Gobinda who was the son by a junior wife, and further that his father had made a Will or hebanama in his favour, and he was accordingly entitled to succeed. The document is referred to as hebanama in the letter of the Collector of Midnapur to the Board of Revenue dated the 10th April 1800. Ganga Gobinda's case was that the plaintiff was not the son of the Patrani, that under the custom the eldest son, whether he was or was not the son of a Patrani, succeeded, and that the hebanama was not genuine. The hebanama was not proved, and there is no further mention of it in the further stages of the suit. The Trial Court decided that according to custom, the son of a Patrani was not entitled to any preference and did not go into question of the hebanama. The Provincial Court held that he was entitled to preference, but the question of the hebanama was not gone into by that Court either.

The Sudder Dewani Adalat held that the custom of the succession of the son of a Patrani junior in age in preference to an elder son by a junior wife was conflicting in some of the mehals contiguous to Barabhum and that the plaintiff had failed to prove the custom in his family. The right of the defendant as the eldest son was accordingly maintained, and it was held that the plaintiff should contain a maintenance allowance. The defendant Ganga Gobinda challenged the genuineness of the Will. He stated that "the Raja on the morning of which date he died, was quite unconscious and unable to speak from the severity of his disease, so how does the plaintiff state that on the 14th of the said month he made the Will in plaintiff's favour and gave the tika of Rajaship to him." As stated above Madho Singh although he set up a Will did not prove it after its genuineness was challenged by Ganga Gobinda. But it is to be observed that although he challenged the genuineness of the Will he did not plead that even if the Will was genuine the Raja was precluded by custom from making a Will. Having regard to the fact that both parties referred to the custom of the family, and to the fact that the plaintiff set up a Will, it is strange that Ganga Gobinda did not plead that the Raja had no power to make a Will.

Another document relating to the succession to the Barabhum Estate mentioned above is a letter from the Collector of Midnapur to the Board of Revenue dated the 10th April 1800, in which the document set up by Madho Singh was referred to as a hebanama. The Collector wrote as follows. "But though this writing were authentic which is very doubtful I conceive that it could not alter the rule of succession and that the circumstances of its having been procured affords a strong presumption that he was considered as having otherwise no right to the 'zemindari.'" This passage is relied upon on behalf of the defendant. But in the first place the authenticity of the document was considered doubtful by the Collector and we have seen that it was not proved in the title suit which came up to the Sudder Dewani Adalat nor was the question of the power of the Raja to make such an alienation raised for consideration before, nor considered by, any of the Courts in the litigation. In the next place "even if authentic the hebanama could not alter the rule of succession" was merely the view of law of the Collector. An opinion expressed in 1800 long before the Judicial Committee laid down in Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) that an impartible Raj is alienable. Then again the Collector's opinion was given in such a way ("I conceive") that it was not of any value. Lastly the Collector was not considering the custom of not making a Will, and it does not appear that he had any special knowledge of custom.

• PROTAP CHANDRA V. JAGADISH CHANDRA.

• It is true that in course of time some of the nine mehals of jungle mehals came to be governed by Dayabhaga and others by the Mitakshara, and it is contended by the appellant that with regard to those governed by the Dayabhaga the same rigour with regard to inalienability could not possibly be expected. But with regard to impartible estates there is no difference, upon the authorities, between Dayabhaga and Mitakshara so far as the question of alienation is concerned, and it is not established that there has been any definite and uniform custom of inalienability either in the jungle mehals or in the nine mehals.

Reliance was made on behalf of the appellant to certain passages in the judgment of the Board of Revenue dated the 13th July in the Land Registration proceedings between the present parties where it was stated that there was "no evidence of the estate ever having been transferred by Will out of the line of descent to the next heir", that Dhalbhum is one of the jungle mehals, that in the early days there was no custom of devisability by Will, and from this it may be presumed in the absence of rebutting evidence that this custom still maintains. But although as already stated, the absence of any transfer by Will is a circumstance in favour of non-alienability, what is to be proved is a custom of non-alienability, and not a custom of alienation. On the whole we think that the defendant has failed to prove the custom of inalienability. There is no doubt that the bulk of the estate has existed from ancient times, and the fact it has not been split up and dissipated in the course of centuries is certainly in favour of the plaintiff. It is useless to refer to the state of affairs before the British Government was established because at that time these Rajas were in the position of military chiefs, and we have no materials of that period for determining the question of custom. After British administration was established and before Sartaj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari (2) was decided in 1889, the law as laid down by the Courts was that an impartible estate was inalienable. As pointed out by Sadasiva Aiyar, J., in the Madras High Court in Zemindar of Karvetnagar v. Subbaraya Pillai (24) "where a supposed custom has followed the ordinary law as laid down by the Courts, though it was wrongly assumed to be the ordinary law that supposed custom which did not modify the understood general law and which had, therefore, not independently the force of law, cannot be recognised by Courts as a custom having the force of law, even after it is established that the supposed ordinary law which it was alleged to have followed was not the ordinary law. I, therefore, agree with the lower Court and with my learned brother that there was no proof of any family usage having been consciously followed which was considered to be a special custom at variance with the ordinary Hindu Law", and having regard to the nature of evidence required to prove inalienability as laid down by the authorities already cited, it is not to be wondered at that defendant has failed to prove the custom of inalienability.

Nature of the Tenure

It is contended that at its inception the Dhalbhum Estate was in the nature of a principality. It is also pointed out that in 1767 Nursingh who was on the guddi of the Raj was fighting with the British. He was deposed and Jagannath was placed on the guddi, but he too began to fight with the British. He was deposed and Nimai alias Baikuntha was put in his place. But he had neither money nor support and Jagannath was again placed on the guddi, and the first Settlement of the estate was made with him in 1777. (See taslinama Exhibit 66) In 1800 the estate was permanently settled with Raja Ram Chandra and after his death, Baikuntha Nath renewed the kabuliyat in December 1821.

But although the jungle mehal Chiefs seemed to have exercised semi-sovereign powers before British power was established and the Raj might have been in its inception in the nature of a principality as most, if not all, impartible estates were in their inception, and although some of the Rajas fought with the British when they were first established in this country, there was nothing military after the settlement with Jagannath in 1777. The taslimnama of that year was on the usual conditions on which grants were made to zemindars. There is nothing military or feudal in it. Certain Police duties were imposed on the zemindars of jungle mehals by Regulation XVIII of 1805 which were assigned to the numerous ghatwals under the Raj but they were subsequently discharged from those obligations. The Hundwa case [Satya Narayan Singh v Satya Niranjan Chakravarti] (25) referred to on behalf of the appellant related to a ghatwali tenure the incidents of which were materially different. It was found that the tenure was a service tenure, ghatwali in its nature, inalienable and indivisible and incapable of being sold in execution of a decree against the person of the incumbent of the office of ghatwali for the time being, it was further held that the question whether or not a given ghatwali tenure is a Government ghatwali tenure or not must depend on the original grant, and unless inclusion of the tenure in the assessment of the zemindari lands can be shown to have amounted to a release by the Government of the ghatwali services or to a grant to a third party of the right to appoint the ghatwali the tenure must remain as it originally was a Government ghatwali tenure. On the other hand in the case reported as Zemindar of Karvetinagar v Subbaraya Pillai (24) where the estate was held more than a century ago under a military tenure, the Madras High Court held that "as soon as the military tenure under which the properties were held was put an end to about 120 years ago, that is, when the British Government granted the lands to the zemindar under a quite different tenure with express powers of alienation and after imposing a liability on the lands to be attached and sold in execution of decrees passed against the grantee, the restraint on alienation without the permission of the overlord came to an absolute end." The observation of the Judicial Committee in the case of Rajkishen Singh v Ramjoy Surma Mozoomdar (26) was referred to. In the present case there was no military tenure, it was an ordinary zemindari, and the Police duties which were at one time imposed upon the jungle mehal zemindars having been abolished, the inalienability, if any, arising therefrom was gone.

It is to be observed that in the Court below the learned Counsel for the defendant conceded that he "could not press the contention that the estate was inalienable on account of its being one of military or feudal nature."

Regulation XI of 1793 referred to the custom of impartibility and primogeniture originating in considerations of financial convenience in "some of the most extensive zemindaris" and declared them to be partible and alienable in case of persons dying intestate. Mr Strachey the Magistrate of Midnapur in his letter dated the 30th October 1800 to the Government stated that Regulation XI of 1793 had never operated in the jungle mehals, that the effect of that Regulation might easily have been obviated by the zemindars making Wills for it is intended to operate only in case of the proprietors dying intestate "but it was not usual to make Wills in the jungles before this Regulation does not appear to have introduced the custom", and he recommended that a Regulation be passed for preventing the division of landed estates in the jungle mehals. Accordingly Regulation X of 1800 was passed declaring that Regulation XI of 1793 "shall not be considered to supersede or affect any established usage which may have obtained in the jungle mehals of Midnapur and other Districts by which the succession to landed estates, the proprietor of which may die intestate has hitherto been considered to devolve to a single heir to the exclusion of the other heirs of the deceased. In the mehals in question the local custom of the country shall be continued in full force as heretofore".

But the passing of Regulation X of 1800 appears to have had no effect upon alienation. Mr. Dent, Commissioner of Hazaribagh, in his letter to the Government dated the 4th September 1833 referred to the "Practice to hold the estates of these Rajas (of jungle mehals) liable to sale for arrears of revenue as also for private debts and observed that "even if legal it is proved by experience to be a very objectionable mode of proceeding". He referred to the sales of certain estates, and states considerations for discontinuing the practice of selling such estates, expressed his opinion that the estates being entailed property and having descended to a single heir from ancient times were not legally liable to sale, and strongly urged the necessity of their being in future treated as entails and declared exempt from sale or transfer for the Raja's private debts.

The matter was more forcibly put by Mr Dalton, Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, in his letter to the Government dated the 6th November 1869 in paragraph 14 of which he wrote as follows: "It has, however, always been held that the Commissioners, in refusing to sell an estate may order its sequestration till the debt be paid, this power is exercised as derived from the orders of the 13th October and appears a necessary corollary to the authority conferred to stay sales of estates. I have no hesitation in saying that had this power not been conferred on the Commissioner very few of the estates in Chota Nagpur, would, up to this time, have remained in the hands of the old proprietors and it would have been a calamity to the people if they had passed into the hands of aliens. It is with them a maxim that, however ignorant, dissipated, extravagant their zemindars or more properly chiefs, of the old line may be, they are to them better and kinder landlords than the most enlightened of interlopers. It is, however, to be regretted that the rules issued for the preservation of estates were not more comprehensive and complete. What was wanted and what we should have here is a law of entail that would strictly limit the interest of each chief and debar any alienation of the property beyond his own life". This appears to have led to the passing of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act.

The letter of Mr. Dent shows the practice of alienation up to 1833 and the letter of Mr. Dalton shows that estates were being sold up to 1869.

The last contention is that the Will of Satrughna under which the plaintiff claims is invalid having regard to the provisions of the Encumbered Estates Act, Bengal Act VI of 1876.

It appears that the estate came under the Act during the lifetime of Ram Chandra III and remained under management until 1899 when it was released to Satrughna who got possession. It again came under the Act in 1905 upon the application of Madhu Sudan (the father of the defendant) notwithstanding Satrughna's objections. Madhu Sudan made the application on the 10th March 1905, it was resubmitted on the 11th April 1905. Satrughna's petition of objection was filed on the 8th May 1905. The notification under Act VI of 1876 was made on the 2nd August 1905. In the meantime on the 11th May 1905 Satrughna made his Will. He died on the 1st March 1916. The estate remained in charge of the Encumbered Estates Act Authorities from 2nd August 1905 until October 1920 when it was taken charge of by the Court of Wards.

At the time when Satrughna made his Will (11th May 1905) the estate had not come under the Act, but it was so at the time of his death (1st March 1916) and so continued subsequently up to October 1920. Section 3 (thirdly) of the Act provides that "so long as such management continues the holder of the said immoveable property and his heir shall be incompetent to mortgage charge, lease or alienate their immoveable property or any part thereof or to grant valid receipts for the rents and profits arising or accruing therefrom".

It is contended by the appellant that the word 'alienate' though used after the words mortgage and charge etc., should not be taken ejusdem generis so as to apply only to transfers having present operation, but should be construed in its usual and general sense having regard to the object of the Act viz., relief to be given to the holder of an Estate in Chota Nagpur and his heir and that so construed, the power of making a Will is also taken away during the period the estate is under management under the Act. Though the Will was executed before the estate was taken charge of under the Act, it is contended that the Will was invalid, as a Will operates only on the death of the testator and the manager under the Act was in possession at the moment of Satrugna's death. The management may continue until the holder or his heir is restored to possession which is to be notified in the Gazette (see section 12 of the Act), and in this case did continue until long afterwards and the attempted alienation by a Will was, therefore, void under section 12-A (clause 4).

The principle of ejusdem generis has been stated in Beal on Cardinal Rules of Legal Interpretation, 3rd Edition, page 355 thus:

"General words in a Statute are prima facie to be taken in their usual sense, General words following specific words in a Statute are prima facie to be taken in their general sense, unless the reasonable interpretation of the Statute requires them to be used in a sense limited to things ejusdem generis with those which have been specifically mentioned before."

We have, therefore, to consider the provisions of the Act.

The Judicial Committee in the case of Jyoti Prasad Singh Deo Bahadur Raja of Pachete v. Kumud Nath Chatterji (27) (27) 45 Ind. Cas. 327, 15 I. A. 103 at pp. 105, 108, 16 A. L. J. 569, 5 P. L. W. 64, (1918) M. W. N. 441, 24 M. L. T. 66, 28 C. L. J. 105, 8 L. W. 186, 22 O. W. N. 1009, 20 Bom. L. R. 856, 35 M. L. J. 347, 48 C. 1 (P. O.).

observed: "The preamble is material; for it defines the purpose of the measure, as the provision of relief of holders of land in Chota Nagpur who may be in debt and whose immoveable property may be subject to mortgages, charges, and liens" under section 2 the "holder", or "the person who would be heir to such holder if he died intestate", or the Deputy Commissioner (in case where a sale is imminent or "where the holder has entered upon a course of wasteful extravagance likely to dissipate his property") may make an application to the Commissioner for applying the provisions of the Act, and the Commissioner may appoint a manager and vest in him the management of the estate. The proviso to the section directs postponement of the order until enquiry. Section 2A empowers the Deputy Commissioner to order production of accounts and documents with the object of finding out the debts and liabilities and the income of the estate. Section 3 lays down that on the publication of an order under section 2, the following consequences will ensue:—

"First, all proceedings which may then be pending in any Civil Court in British India or in any Revenue Court in Bengal in respect of such debt, or liabilities, shall be barred, and all processes, executions and attachments for or in respect of such debts and liabilities shall become null and void ;

Secondly, so long as such management continues, the holder of the said property and his heir shall not be liable to arrest for or in respect of the debts and liabilities to which the said holder was immediately before the said publication subject, or with which the property so vested as aforesaid or any part thereof was at the time of the said publication charge, other than debts due, or liabilities incurred, to Government

Nor shall their moveable property be liable to attachment or sale under process of any Civil Court in British India or any Revenue Court in Bengal for or in respect of such debts and liabilities other than as aforesaid; and

Thirdly, so long as such management continues,

• PROTAP CHANDRA V. JAGADISH CHANDRA.

(a) the holder of the said immoveable property and his heir shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate their immoveable property or any part thereof, or to grant valid receipt for the rents and profits arising or accruing therefrom,

(b) such property shall be exempt from attachment or sale under such process as aforesaid, except for or in respect of debts due, or liabilities incurred, to Government, and

(c) the holder of the same property and his heir shall be incapable of entering into any contract which may involve them, or either of them, in pecuniary liability."

Section 4 lays down the duties of the manager, to receive rents and profits and pay therefrom the Government demand, rent due to superior landlord, the maintenance of the holder and his heir, to re-pay loans, costs of repairs and improvements, and to apply the residue in discharge of the costs of management and in settlement of such debts and liabilities of the holder of the property and his heir as may be established under the succeeding provisions of the Act. Part IV containing sections 5 to 10 lays down the procedure for the determination of the debts of the holder of the property, and section 11 provides for preparation of a schedule of debts and liabilities and a scheme for the settlement thereof, which when approved by the Commissioner shall be carried into effect. Section 12 provides for restoration of the owner to his property, when the debts and liabilities are discharged and in certain other cases. In these events such holder or his heir shall be restored to the possession and enjoyment of the property or of such part thereof as has not been sold by the manager, but subject to the leases and mortgages, if any, granted and made by the manager under the powers conferred under the Act. Provided that where a fresh order has been made under section 2 in pursuance of section 12-A sub-section (5) re-appointing a manager and vesting in him the management of the whole or any portion of the property of any holder, such property shall not be restored to such holder but shall be retained by the manager for restoration to the heir of such holder in due course. Section 12-A provides that :

(1) when the possession and enjoyment of property is restored under the circumstances mentioned in the first or the third clause of section 12 to the person who was the holder of such property when the application under section 2 was made, such person shall not be competent, without the previous sanction of the Commissioner

(a) to alienate such property or any part thereof in any way or

(b) to create any charge thereon extending beyond his lifetime

(3) every alienation and charge made or attempted in contravention of sub-section (1) shall be void.

(4) The Deputy Commissioner may make an enquiry to ascertain whether any holder of property has made or attempted to make an alienation in contravention of sub-sections (1) and (5); if he is satisfied after enquiry that such holder has made or attempted to make any such alienation, he may report to the Commissioner requesting that the provisions of the Act be re-applied to his case, and the Commissioner may publish a fresh order under section 2, re-appointing a manager and vesting in him the management of the whole or any portion of the property of such holder.

Section 12-A was introduced into the Act by the Amending Act III (B O.) of 1909. The provisions of that section do not apply to Satrughna and that for two reasons. In the first place the section was enacted after Satrughna made his Will on the 11th May 1905. In the next place the section deals with the case of restoration of possession to the person who was the holder of such property when the application under section 2 was made. The estate was restored to Satrughna in 1889. He was not the holder when the application was made; the holder of the property at that time was Ram Chandra.

The next question is what sort of alienation is contemplated by section 12-A? Sub-section (1) provides for alienation with the sanction of the Commissioner and sub-section (2) provides for an appeal to the Board of Revenue when sanction is refused by the Commissioner. The mere execution of a Will does not amount to alienation as it passes no property at the time. A Will operates only from the death of the testator and there can be no question of sanction after the death of the testator when only the Will takes effect. Sub-section (4) provides for the Deputy Commissioner requesting the Commissioner to re-apply the provisions of the Act. After the death of the holder no question of re-applying the provisions of the Act to the case of the deceased can arise. All these considerations show that the alienation mentioned in section 12-A refers to alienation inter vivos and not to Wills. And if the expression "alienate" has been used in that sense in section 12-A it should be taken to have that meaning in section 3 also, unless it is clear that some other meaning was intended.

On the 11th May 1905, when the Will was executed by Satrugna, he was competent to make a sale, gift or charge the estate or alienate in any way he liked (except that a lease granted by him might be set aside under certain circumstances under section 9) and it cannot be held that he had no power to make a Will at that time. Then when did the testamentary disposition become invalid? It was not invalid under section 12-A for reasons already stated. It may be said that it could not have effect on his death because the estate might continue under the management under the Act (as in fact it did) until the debts and liabilities were discharged. But management of the estate is one thing and the right to the estate is another. It is true the Act recognises only the heir and not the devisee, and the restoration of the estate is to be made to the heir on the death of the holder. But under section 23, the Civil Courts in Chota Nagpur have jurisdiction to entertain and dispose of suits relating to the succession to immoveable property. "Succession" would include intestate as well as testamentary succession, so that although the heir would be restored to possession and a person claiming under a testamentary disposition would have to establish such claim in the Civil Court, the possession of the heir would be subject to the result of such suit.

Under section 2 of the Act what is vested in the manager is the management of the property, and the provisions of the Act are all directed towards securing the effective control of the estate by the manager. The holder of the estate is prohibited from mortgaging, charging, leasing or alienating his immoveable property, or entering into any contract which may involve him in pecuniary liability and the property is exempt from attachment and sale so long as such management continues. Without such prohibitions the management could not proceed, nor could the scheme for discharge of the debts and liabilities be carried out. But a testamentary disposition cannot interfere with management by the manager. The Act creates a sort of administration of the immoveable estate of a debtor in some respects resembling that pursued in an administration suit but with the material difference that whereas in an administration suit the satisfaction of the claims of the creditors is primarily in view, in proceedings under the Act, the protection of the debtor and the protection of his estate so far as practicable in spite of its encumbered condition is the main solicitude of the authorities concerned [see Kameshar Prasad v Bhikari Naran Singh (28) and Beicha Ram Sahu v. Bishambhar Nath Sahu (29)].

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that the scope and object of the Act is the preservation of the property of the holder and his heir; and that the introduction of the heir makes the object clear. Section 3 provides that the holder and his heir shall not be liable to arrest for the debts and liabilities of the holder, nor shall their immoveable properties be liable to attachment and sale, and the holder and his heir shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate. It is difficult to see how the heir can be arrested, his moveable properties attached and sold for the debts and liabilities of the holder. However, that may be, the Act restricts the power of the holder in disposing of the property in so far as it would interfere with the management of the estate. But the right to succession to the estate of the holder is not affected by the Act. It is saved by the provisions of section 23. It is true that the management may continue even after the death of the holder if the debts and liabilities are not discharged before his death. But that would merely postpone the possession of the successor until the debts are satisfied; it cannot affect his title to the property. Section 12 provides for restoration of the holder or his heir to possession and management of the estate, and the Act does not provide for cases of testamentary succession. But the question is does the Act prohibit such succession?

There is no express provision to that effect in the Act, and the proviso contained in section 23 goes against that view.

It is contended that the object of the Act is to preserve the estate belonging to families of political or social importance and that the object would be frustrated if testamentary dispositions were allowed. It is true that section 2 (thirdly) lays down that the consent of the Local Government shall not be given in the case of any holder who has "entered upon a course of wasteful extravagance likely to dissipate his property" unless such holder belongs to a family of political or social importance; but that is not the only case, because under the same section such consent may be given where the Government "is satisfied that it is desirable that such consent should be given".

It is pointed out on behalf of the respondent that whenever it is intended to restrict alienation by

Will it is expressly so provided as for instance in the Madras Court of Wards Act (section 34 of Act I of 1902), and in the Bombay Act section 38 of Bombay Act I of 1905. See also section 37 of the United Provinces Court of Wards Act IV of 1912 though Act XXIV of 1870 (Oudh Talukdars Act upon which Bengal Act VI is based) does not contain any restriction as to Wills. This appears to be so but the Statutes in other Provinces do not give us much assistance in construing Bengal Act VI of 1876, as each Act must be construed with reference to its own provisions.

The Allahabad High Court in the case of Muhammad Sayeed v. Muhammad Ismail (30) held that a Will is not an alienation falling within the prohibition in section 325-A of the Code of Civil Procedure XIV of 1882 (corresponding to the Third Schedule in Act V of 1908 paragraph 11) which is similar to the prohibition contained in section 3 of Act VI of 1876. The learned Judges observed "The word 'alienate' in our opinion was used ejusdem generis with the words preceding, namely, mortgage, charge, lease and manifestly contemplates a transfer which would have present effect and not a devise which can only have operation after the death of the testator. In this view the Will was not void and the lady was not incompetent to make it". There are differences, however, between the provisions of the Third Schedule and those of Bengal Act VI of 1876, more specially as Act VI of 1876 confers certain privileges and imposes certain disabilities upon the heir, whereas there are no such provisions in the Third Schedule, and even some of the provisions relating to the holder of the property under Act VI of 1876 are different from those relating to the judgment-debtor under the Third Schedule. The decision referred to above, therefore, is not of much assistance in deciding the question before us.

It has been held by the Judicial Committee that the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act (VI of 1876) does not apply to immoveable property outside Chota Nagpur (see Jyoti Prashad Singh (30) 8 Ind. Cas. 831; 33 A. 233; 7 A. L. J. 1176.

KASIVASI CHIDAMBARA SWAMIGAL v. RAMAKRISHNA REDDIAR.

Deo Bahadur [Raja of Pachete] v. Kumud Nath Chatterji (27). That being so, the Act cannot in any case apply to properties in the District of Midnapur.

As pointed out by Pigot, J., in Kameshar Prasad v. Bhikan Narain Singh (28):

"The Act is so framed as to render it not easy to construe", and the Judicial Committee in the case of Raja of Pachete [Jyoti Parashad Singh Deo Bahadur v. Kumud Nath Chatterji] (27) referred to the language of the Act as "obscure". An Act imposing disabilities should be strictly construed and if, as we hold, the restrictions imposed by the Act upon the holder of the estate (or his heir) are only for the purpose of carrying out the management of the estate and do not affect the rights of the holder of the properties, we think that the restrictions as to alienation refer only to alienation inter vivos having present operation and not to testamentary dispositions. We have already pointed out that a person claiming under a testamentary disposition cannot interfere with the management of the estate if such management continues after the death of the holder, and such a person can only get the estate after the management comes to an end. For all these reasons we are unable to hold that the Will of Satrugna executed at a time when his estate had not come under the management of the Act is invalid.

On the whole we think that the decree of the Court below should be affirmed. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

The plaintiff has claimed the amounts paid to the defendant for maintenance as mesne profits. There is no doubt that the defendant is entitled to maintenance and we are not inclined to interfere with the order for mesne profits made by the Court below, viz., that they should come out of the Dhalbhum Estate and that the defendant shall not be personally liable for the same.

The plaintiff denied that the defendant was joint with the deceased and made no offer to pay maintenance. In the circumstances we do not interfere with the order for costs made by the Court below. The costs of the plaintiff in the Court below as well as in this Court will come out of the Dhalbhum Estate and the defendant will not be personally liable for the same.

The cross-objections are accordingly dismissed. We make no order as to costs.

It is pointed out on behalf of the respondent that the Court of Wards was in charge of the estate at the time when the decree of the Court below was passed, and accordingly there are references to the Court of Wards in the ordering portion of the decree. As the Court of Wards has subsequently given up the management of the estate and has placed it in the hands of the Receiver appointed by this Court, the references in the ordering portion of the decree of the Court of Wards should be interpreted as applying to the Receiver appointed by this Court and the expression "Ward defendant" will be interpreted to mean "defendant-appellant".

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 51 OF 1922.

July 9, 1924.

Present:—Mr Justice Devadoss.

KASIVASI CHIDAMBARA SWAMIGAL

versus

RAMAKRISHNA REDDIAR

AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS NOS 1 TO 3.

—RESPONDENTS

Minor—Specific performance—Agreement for sale of immoveable property by guardian—Benefit of minor—Subsequent better terms, effect of

A decree for specific performance can be passed in certain circumstances against a minor on a contract entered into by his guardian.

Specific performance of a valid agreement by a guardian, for sale of immoveable property belonging to a minor at a price proper and adequate at the time of the agreement, cannot be refused merely because subsequently some body else is prepared to offer a better price for the property.
